Mr. LEWIS. In order that the RECORD may be wholly clear in information, leading the able Senator to something a little apart from his already perfected phrase, there was given out by the statesmen of England at the time to which he refers, and publicly disseminated, a report that the United States, and the President, sympathized, using the exact expression, with the position of England demanding that we join in sanctions, in other words, in punishment of Italy, by prohibiting goods being sent to Italy because of her entering into Ethiopia.

I may say to the Senate, although I feel that I am in a manner an intruder upon the time of the Senator from North Carolina, that in Geneva 2 years ago I went before the session of the League of Nations and made bold to say in behalf of my country that the statement which had just been made by eminent gentlemen in Geneva in the meeting of the League of Nations, that this country had expressed its sympathy with their action, was without foundation; that our land had given no expression of that kind, and we as a people were not inclined, so far as I could gather, to accept anything other than the action of our Congress, and we would never join in the pursuit of a matter that was not our affair in any respect, and awaken the enmity of those of other nationalities who were peaceful citizens of our land by expressing sympathy for or against a foreign country concerning whose actions we had no understanding. I say to the Senator that that did transpire as I have expressed it.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I will say to my brother Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senator from North Carolina has the floor. Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to say, Mr. President, that I am greatly indebted to the Senator from Illinois for his very fine contribution.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. I was out of the Chamber when the Senator from Illinois began his remarks. Was the discussion along the line of the statement which the Senator from Illinois just made in his last remark?

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator mean the last observation I made?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I presumed to break into the splendid and thorough discussion on the part of the able Senator from North Carolina, revealing the attitude of this country in what is called assuming to interfere with domestic affairs in other countries. The Senator from North Carolina said, among other things, rightfully, that there was first an effort made to prevent us from furnishing oil to Italy as a punishment to Italy for assuming to invade Ethiopia, and that such action should be taken in compliance with the demands then made by the English Government, speaking through its foreign representative, Mr. Eden, that sanctions against Italy be enforced, sanctions which prohibited supplies being sent to Italy, in order to punish Italy for having taken Ethiopia. I stated to my able friend that it fell to my duty to be in Geneva at the time of the meeting of the League of Nations. May I be pardoned if I add that my brother Senator [Mr. Davis] was in England that year; I served with him at that time. He realized something of the general attitude of all the countries of Europe. I had just reached Geneva from Russia. I had been very ill in Moscow.

I had hardly strength sufficient to take such action as the situation demanded, but I attended the session of the League of Nations in Geneva, and there, to my great astonishment, I heard able statesmen say to the world that the United States sympathized with the action on the part of England in announcing the sanction as a punishment of Italy, by denying Italy supplies because of her having taken Ethiopia. I boldly assumed on that occasion to oppose this view. I really went so far as probably to make some exhibition of ill manners by denouncing it upon the ground that our United States had never expressed any sympathy with a foreign country in its action touching the question of sanctions; that, if they meant the President, to whom I thought the eminent officials of England alluded, under our system of government and our policy the power resided only in our Congress to express our public desire; that there had come no such expression from the Congress; that none had come from the President; that none had come from this country in any form; and that we were not assuming to express sympathy with the action of foreign countries, or to punish some foreign country merely to serve the private financial object of other countries.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senate that the Senator from Illinois on that occasion rendered a very great service to his country. I may also inform the Senate that I heard the Senator from Illinois make a very remarkable speech in London on Thanksgiving Day of that year, and his speech was just as true and just as fine and patriotic an American speech as I have ever heard made, even in Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask the Senator to yield for the purpose of asking the Senator from Illinois, for whom I have the greatest respect, a question. I will ask the Senator from Illinois if he has the slightest doubt, in view of his profound professional and senatorial attainments, that the imposition of sanctions or the designation of an aggressor nation by the United States upon which sanctions are to be imposed is of itself an act of war?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer my able friend that the imposition of sanctions, if going to the extent, as I understand it, of assuming to punish some other nation, would be sufficient to be declared by that country an act of war.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I ask if the Senator from North Carolina will yield so that I may ask the Senator from Illinois one further question?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I believe the Senator from Illinois will agree with me that if we shall adopt as a policy that mistreatment of minorities in other countries shall be a cause for war, it may be called to our attention that at various times we have had skeletons in our own closets. For instance, I think it will be admitted on every side that we violated treaties with the Indians, and that the white settlers of this country in the main shamefully mistreated the Indians. The Senator, of course, is familiar with the fact that at the time negotiations were being carried on, which led to the signing of the Treaty of Ghent at the conclusion of the War of 1812, the British Government arrogated to itself the right to act as the sponsor and the defender of the rights of the Indians which they claimed had been violated, and in the early part of those negotiations they demanded as a matter of right that they be permitted to set up a buffer state to be given to the Indians, which would have included most of what is now Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio.

Of course, it might also be said that if every nation has a right to interfere in the treatment of minorities by other nations, as an internal matter, any nation of the world might have the right to declare war on us today by reason of the fact that lynching of American citizens of African descent has been permitted to go on in this country, and that the Congress of the United States as the sovereign power in this country has refused to take any action on that subject. Does the Senator from Illinois think that Germany, for instance, or France, or any other country, would be justified in declaring war on us for that reason?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am glad to hear any statement made by the able Senator from Missouri on questions concerning foreign countries, particularly in the era which he describes. His excellent work on John Quincy Adams, and his treatises on history, comprehending many of these subjects, qualify him to discuss them to a greater degree than most of our able Senators, who have not had time to investigate questions pertaining to these matters, either those of the present day or those of history.

In answer to the question of the Senator from Missouri, I say "yes." I recall, as a matter of history, that at the time of the consideration of the Treaty of Ghent eminent Senators hesitated in arriving at the peace decree. The Battle of New Orleans had really been fought without knowledge of it on the part of those engaged in the discussion of the peace treaty. There were those who asserted, as my able friend meant to express, I am sure, that the lands that had been occupied by the Indians had been appropriated by us, and it may be that they added something as to what is called our treatment of the Indians. As to that, however, I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield to me?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It was the assertion and the demand of the British ambassadors and members of the British committee that a buffer state, so to speak, between our country and the British possessions in Canada be set up to be given over to the Indians, and the proposed buffer state would constitute what is now most of the States of Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio.

Mr. LEWIS. I must say I was not so clear as to that matter. My opinion had been that that particular position was taken after the War of 1812 touching those lands which the Spaniards and the Indians had occupied in Florida. Am I not right that that was the basis?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will say to the Senator that that was another question that was involved, but there was a very definite demand by the British peace mission that this buffer state be established; that territory be taken south of the Great Lakes in the United States and given to a state to be set up by England as a protectorate for the Indians, a buffer state between the American States and the Great Lakes.

Mr. LEWIS. That, Mr. President, discloses the tendency on the part of certain foreign nations to assume to punish us when we have attempted a course of conduct which they do not approve. I heartily concur with the Senator from North Carolina, whose illustrious exposé will remain as history, and the assertion made by the Senator from Missouri, that these are lessons to us, to lay our hands hard upon America and hold our vessel straight to the channel, holding firmly by the rudder, and to keep ourselves from the unnecessary shores of other places, and prevent others from interfering with the affairs of America.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator from Illinois very much for his compliment.

Mr. President, I made mention a moment ago, when I was asked to yield, of the fact that the British had a great deal of tonnage in the Mediterranean in November 1935, at which time Anthony Eden was desirous that the United States join Great Britain in enforcing sanctions, and I made mention of the fact that at that very time Great Britain was selling oil to Italy, as everyone knows. I wish to call attention to the fact that after Mussolini brought about the conquest of Ethiopia the British recognized Ethiopia.

Let me make a prediction. If and when Franco wins in Spain, Great Britain will recognize the Franco government. Do not let anybody tell you otherwise about that, because Great Britain always gets on the winning side. The British are the greatest diplomats in the world. They propagandized us into the World War. They told us we were going to save Christianity and democracy. They cost us $100,000,000,000. They brought about the murder of the sons of American mothers. They do not appreciate our saving their hides. They have never paid a nickel on the principal they owe us. They have never liquidated the interest, and they never will, because I state unhesitatingly that they are the most ungrateful people in all the world. But they are smart!

Let us see. They are our "brothers across the sea." However, I like to have my brother show me some consideration. I want my brother to be good to me if I am good to him, and to think kindly of me if I think kindly of him. If I appreciate what my brother does for me, I want my brother to appreciate what I do for him. But John Bull, the old fat fellow, "he ain't no good" when it comes to showing his appreciation.

If John Bull wanted to show his appreciation, I will tell the Senate what he could do. I hate to digress, and I am going to stick with John. We shall get around to China in a few minutes.

Our experts on military affairs say that we must have more outposts, particularly in the Atlantic. We have outposts in the South Atlantic, but we have no outposts in the North Atlantic. Our experts have told us before the committees that we must have an outpost in the West Indies, and we must have an outpost in the North Atlantic. If Great Britain wanted to show her appreciation of all the money we lent her, if she were desirous of showing her appreciation of our saving her hide, what could she do? She could bring about the ceding to us of Bermuda, the capital of which is Hamilton, in the North Atlantic, just 498 miles directly east and off the coast of North Carolina. We could very well afford to accept Bermuda, because 98 percent of all the revenue that goes to its capital, Hamilton, comes out of the port of New York.

Do Senators think Great Britain would give us Bermuda to apply on the debt she owes us? No. She is willing to give away other people's property, but she would not give us or anybody else a deed to her property. Show me where she ever ceded a square foot of land to anybody else.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In this connection, it might be well to recall the time in American history during the administration of the great Jackson, who was truly a red-blooded, fighting American, an American all the time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Andrew Jackson-

Mr. LUNDEEN. Andrew Jackson; a great American.

Mr. REYNOLDS. From the Hermitage, Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Jackson had his difficulties with France about the so-called French war debt, which arose about 1800. After some 35 years or so of nonpayment, Andrew Jackson came into the White House, and he then demanded payment for the undeclared war which had gone on between France and America.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. He drew a sight draft.

Mr. LUNDEEN. As the distinguished Senator from Missouri so ably says, he drew a sight draft.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Not only that but in a remarkable state paper, one of the best state papers we have in our collection of American state papers, he made the statement that if the debt were not paid he would seize the gold, silver, securities, and collateral of French nationals on deposit in American financial institutions; and he threatened to seize possession of the West Indies, belonging to France, until the debt was paid.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator, because he has provided me with an idea.

Mr. LUNDEEN. That is exactly what I was trying to do.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not so long ago, when the British were engaged in digging trenches in Hyde Park, Kensington Gardens, and elsewhere, getting together their antiaircraft defense, and making an effort to distribute gas masks because they were afraid the Germans were going to come over and level England, they sent millions and millions of dollars to this country. The Senator has provided me with an idea. Let us seize that money, because that is the only way in which we shall ever get a dime out of them. I wish to pursue that subject. I thank the able Senator from Missouri for his contribution in reference to the matter under discussion.

We saved Great Britain's hide, and for 20 years she has not done a thing in the world but give us the broad "a." That is all she has done. She has never given us any credit for saving her. She has never shown the slightest appreciation. Now, at a time when we are getting ready to bolster our defenses upon the recommendation of the experts of the Army who have been before the Committee on Military Affairs, which is so ably presided over by that great patriot from the State of Texas, the Honorable Morris Sheppard, who now does me the honor to listen so attentively, it is suggested that we must have more protection for the Panama Canal. I say, let Great Britain, if she wants to show her gratitude, cede Bermuda to us.

It has been suggested also that we must have defenses in the North Atlantic. I suggest that Great Britain make the proper arrangements to deliver to us Labrador and Newfoundland, and let her apply them on account. She can do it if she wants to. Let her show her appreciation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. NEELY. If Great Britain is to cede to us the territory which the distinguished Senator has suggested, I hope he will insist on immediate action, before Mr. Chamberlain has an opportunity to give those possessions to Hitler and Mussolini.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I am sure there will be no haste on that score, because Great Britain has never been known to give anything to anybody except lip service.

Mr. NEELY. And other people's territory.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And other people's territory, Mr. President. That is well put.

In that connection, in reference to the defenses which have been suggested by military authorities, one of the authorities made the suggestion a few days ago in executive session before the committee—and it is not a secret—that we have fortifications in the West Indies. When the West Indies were mentioned, my mind immediately found its way to Martinique, in the West Indies, which belongs to the French.

By the way, the French, one of the Allies in the World War, are indebted to us to the extent of millions and millions. Why not let France make her contribution, as evidence of her appreciation, by delivering to us Martinique, not far withdrawn from the Virgin Islands, and likewise not far from Puerto Rico, and near the Dominican Republic and Haiti?

Such action would be very appropriate.

I am sorry I was not traveling in an official capacity when, in the month of November, I had the pleasure and honor of interviewing the Prime Minister of France, because if I had been traveling officially, I should then have been very pleased to ask him if his Government was willing to deliver to us Martinique as part payment of that which they owe us.

That is not all. Our military experts have stated that we need something in the North Atlantic. They have made the suggestion that it would be desirable to have Labrador and Newfoundland, or perhaps Nova Scotia, as was suggested by one writer, Major Williams. I have a plan which would greatly simplify the question. The French Government owns two islands between Labrador and Newfoundland. One of them is about 17 miles long and 5 miles wide. The other is about 5 miles by 2. At least they are sufficiently large, and the terrain is adaptable, for the inexpensive development of airports. We could use them as bases. If Great Britain and France, both of whom are crawling on their knees and purring like old pussycats for favor with us, want us to lend an open ear to all they are now saying and to the love they are making to us, let France deliver Martinique and her islands in the north between Labrador and Newfoundland, and let Great Britain talk to us about Bermuda, or perhaps some concessions in Newfoundland, Labrador, or Nova Scotia.

Before we get away from Great Britain, let me say that John Bull is the greatest diplomat in the world. Since 1931 John Bull has been trying to get Uncle Sam to pull his chestnuts out of the fire. I had to smile the other day when I read something in a Washington newspaper which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate. This is good. It is entitled "Britain Joins U. S. in Opposing Japan."

Britain joins the United States! That is the first time I ever heard of the United States suggesting anything and taking the lead in a matter in which Britain is concerned, because during all our diplomatic life, so far as the history of Great Britain is connected with us, we have always been led around by the nose and have followed the lead of John Bull. Let us see about this.

It will be remembered that in 1931, when the Japanese were proceeding northward through Korea, and likewise through the port of Shanghai, via Peiping, for the purpose of making conquest of Manchuria, our Secretary of State was a gentleman by the name of Stimson, who is now telling Secretary Hull how to run the Government. Secretary Stimson at that time suggested, as was currently reported in the press, that we stop the Japanese. The British did not see fit to follow the advice of Mr. Stimson. As a result thereof, in 1931 and in the months to follow the Japanese conquered that territory, which is inhabited by 120,000,000 Chinese. For the past several years, or at least since the beginning of the last conquest of Japan in China, Great Britain has been doing her best to persuade us to pull her chestnuts out of the fire in the Orient. Let us see about that.

In the first place, Great Britain was sorry because we gave up our interest in the Philippines. The Members of the Senate know that to be so. Great Britain wanted us to retain our interest in oriental waters, in Asiatic waters, in the Philippines, so that, of necessity, we would be forced to maintain a Pacific fleet in those waters. Great Britain was weakened and disappointed when we decided to give up the Philippines. Of all the people in the world at the present time who are desirous of our erecting fortifications abroad, which is entirely out of our sphere, it is the British people, because Great Britain wants us to have a position on a keg of explosives so as to retain our interest there.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am giad to yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that Great Britain's title and claim to Hong Kong, for example, is precisely the title and claim that Japan has to the parts of China that have been taken by ruthless aggression in the last couple of years?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In other words, Great Britain acquired Hong Kong-

Mr. REYNOLDS. By force.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. By precisely the same methods that Japan has been taking part of China during the last couple of years.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of course, that is so. How did Great Britain get India? How did the French did Indochina? How did the United States get the 48 States of the Union? She took them away from the Indians. Everything is by conquest or by aggression.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator is familiar with the fact, of course, that in the opium war England not only took and kept Hong Kong, but in the same war she also acquired by storm or by surrender Shanghai, Hangchow, and Canton?

Mr. REYNOLDS. And right now in Canton she maintains an international settlement.

Now, what is the situation and what has it been for the last several years? Let us see what are Great Britain's interests in the east. In the first place, Great Britain owns in fee that which she took from the Chinese. She owns Hong Kong, which is one of the greatest, one of the most prosperous, and one of the most profitable ports in all the world, which particularly is attributable to its geographical location; and I might say further also is attributable to the fact that it is just south of Canton, one of the most prosperous cities in the world and on a great river. In addition to that, Great Britain has her part and portion of the international settlement in Shanghai. In addition to that, Great Britain admits that she has over $1,500,000,000 in cash invested in China; and if she will admit an investment of $1,500,000,000, I will say unhesitatingly that, in reality, she has $3,000,000,000 invested there.

That, however, is not all her interest. Great Britain's frontier has been moved back from Hong Kong to Singapore. a distance of 1,500 miles.

Singapore is located at the head of a ladder the rounds of which are the islands of the Dutch East Indies. In addition to Java, Sumatra, and others Great Britain holds in fee ownership a part of one of the islands which is known as Borneo, where are to be found some of the finest untouched, untapped pockets of oil in all the world. In addition to that, Great Britain has an agreement with the Netherlands to protect her interests in the Dutch East Indies. So Great Britain has vast interests in the East; in fact, a great portion of her Empire and of her wealth is found in oriental and Asiatic waters.

Very well; now let us see what are the interests of Uncle Sam. If Senators will study the statistics as to the trade we have done with China and the Orient for the past 15 or 20 years, they will see that we have not made any money out of it, because in order to maintain our position there, to maintain our prestige, in order to "keep face" in the parlance of the Orient, we have, of necessity, been occasioned to keep in the Pacific a large fleet at a tremendous cost. The figures of the State Department will reveal today that all the investments of the United States of America in China will total only $250,000,000, and that includes the missions and the benches and the furnishings therein. Two hundred and fifty million dollars is one-fourth of a billion, which may be compared to the investment of $1,500,000,000, which is the English investment, and indicates our very small interest in comparison with that of Great Britain.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from

Mr. LUNDEEN. In other words, the investment of America in the Orient is, roughly speaking, about one-tenth or less of the British investment?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should make it about one twenty-fifth. Mr. LUNDEEN. And, of course, we should go in there and defend those who have 10 times greater interest there than

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly; and not only that, but Hong Kong itself is only 1,487 miles by air from Darwin, in Australia. and it will be remembered, of course, that Great Britain is greatly interested in Australia. So, as I have said, Great Britain has a vast interest in the Orient. In comparison we have but a pittance. The amount of the money we have invested in China, if we could get it all back, would be only sufficient to buy a couple of battleships weighing 45,000 tons apiece: that is all.

I notice from the newspapers that Great Britain has decided to join against Japan. Senators will remember that Anthony Eden came to the United States. While here he talked with some of our officials, and Anthony had barely gotten back to England when it was announced through the press that our Export and Import Bank had loaned to China $25,000,000, and in a day or two after that the press stated that Great Britain was going to do the same thing. Mr. President, you know as well as I do that there was an agreement-and I dare say that that agreement or conclusion was reached when Eden was here—to the effect that we would lend China $25,000,000 and Great Britain would follow, but Great Britain suggested that we make the first move in lending that $25,000,000 because it would look better—it would leave a better taste in the mouth of the American people than would be the case if Great Britain made the move by lending $25,000,000 and the United States followed.

Senators, have you ever read the book entitled "England Expects Every American to Do His Duty"? If you have not, you ought to read it. I knew that at last, somehow or other, Great Britain was to get us involved in the Orient, and at last she has got us started on the road. Senators, regardless of what interpretation you may put on it or what conclusion you may reach, you may put this in your pipes and smoke it, that today the United States is in war with Japan. There is an undeclared war on the part of the United States against Japan, and that undeclared war was brought about when the Export and Import Bank loaned $25,000,000 to China in its war against the unholy aggression of Japan.

I feel sorry for the Chinese. I have been in sympathy with them all along. I have been in sympathy with the Chinese all along, despite the fact that two-thirds of China is communistic, and I have been in sympathy with the Chinese all along despite the fact that Russia is financing China as much as she can. I have not been in sympathy with the Government of China, which is two-thirds communistic, but I have been in sympathy with the people. There are occasions and times when there is a radical distinction between a government and the people themselves. I am only hoping and praying that we will not become involved in war with any country in the world.

I see before me the senior Senator from the State of Georgia, able and lovable as he is. What fine judgment the people of my sister State showed in returning him to the Senate of the United States, because there is no more capable or competent or serious-minded or patriotic man than is the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. George].

I am happy indeed that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] is also present. Everybody likes him. He is a hard worker, and is very popular in his State. I am glad these Senators are here at this time, because I am going to mention something in reference to the Asiatic question which is of vital interest to them.

It has been said by our great and beloved President that our poor South is economic problem number one. We are poor, but we are God-fearing and patriotic. We love our people; we love our boys; we love our mothers. We have no wish to go to war. Yes; perhaps we are an economic problem, but we have become more of an economic problem to ourselves than ever before. Why? Because down there in the good old South-in the States of North Carolina and South Carolina and Georgia and northern Florida and Alabama and Mississippi and Louisiana and Texas, the old South-cotton is grown. In the old South there are 5,000,000 persons who are wholly or partly dependent upon the production and manufacture of cotton. The University of North Carolina has reported that there are 5,000,000 such persons. Now, with all the countries of the world competing with us, we are experiencing a struggle such as we have never before known; and unfortunately, on account of our foreign attitude, the South is bearing the brunt of all the damage that has been done. Why?

The other day I was in a meeting presided over by the able senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], in which we of the cotton-growing States were discussing the question of cotton, and what we were going to do with the 11,000,000 to 14,000,000 bales of surplus cotton upon which the Government has made loans and which has not been redeemed, millions of bales in the warehouses. We do not know what is to be done with it, but we know that we used to sell millions of dollars' worth of cotton to Japan every year. In 1937, I think—if I am wrong, I hope you gentlemen who are familiar with the statistics in relation to cotton will tell me-my recollection is that about 1937, or 1934, or somewhere along there, Japan bought from the cotton-producing States of the United States $115,000,000 worth of cotton, took it to her shores, sent it through her textile plants, and delivered therefrom to the whole people of the United States only $15,000,000 worth of finished products. In other words, for every $115 that she gave to us, the whole people of the United States returned to her only $15.

Germany was a great cotton textile center; and, by the way, the portion of Czechoslovakia which Germany has recently taken over has, I understand, the greatest number of textile plants in it, and they are going to need cotton more than ever. Germany is in a position to use millions of dollars' worth of cotton; but, somehow or other, they are not buying it from us. Japan and Germany and the other countries are going to buy cotton from countries which are friendly to them, or at least which are not unfriendly to them. Of course, there is a great deal of bartering going on; and, as all of you recognize, the tremendous trade which has been created by the Germans has been attributable most largely, I may say, to the fact that they have engaged and are engaging in the barter system. What Germany and Italy and Japan and the other countries want is raw materials; but the question and the problem which we are now up against in reference to the South American matter which I mentioned a moment ago is that Germany and Italy are sending to South America and obtaining raw products in exchange for their manufactured products. How are we to meet that problem? How are we to meet that competition when they have presented the question of barter, and to a large degree the raw materials that those countries of South America want to give us we have in surplus quantities here in the United States of America?

Mr. President, before I forget it I want to mention a matter which I started to mention a moment ago. I want to mention the fact that if we break off diplomatic relations with Germany on account of her internal affairs, her treatment of minorities, we have greater reason and cause to break off diplomatic relations with Russia. How so? Russia confiscated millions of dollars' worth of property belonging to Americans. It is said that she is now indebted to us to the extent of about $600,000,000. As for the treatment of people, it has been stated upon authority, and I have no reason to disbelieve it, that the Russians murdered between 4,000,000 and 7,000,000 farmers in the Ukraine in 1933 and 1934. They suffered the most horrible sort of death, brought about by starvation of the Ukrainians. In addition to that, Russia has destroyed the churches and closed the temples of worship; and murder and assassination are found everywhere.

Again I say, it is none of Uncle Sam's business what sort of government the people of Germany or Italy or Japan or any other country in the world choose to live under. It is up to them; and I think the time has arrived when our Uncle Sam should come home. We have missed him. He has been all over the earth. He has been kicked in the pants everywhere. I think Uncle Sam ought to come home and look after the needs of his nieces and his nephews. As I stated a moment ago, we find 12,000,000 of them out of employment. Until Uncle Sam has put his own house in order, I think he should keep his nose out of the business of other nations, and should look after his own children. He has been all over the world, trying to police the world and tell the people of the world what they should do; but let us see.

I wish Uncle Sam were a better policeman than he is, because during the past year the then Attorney General of the United States issued a little pamphlet; and in that pamphlet, according to my recollection, Mr. Homer Cummings stated that the racketeers, those who violate the laws of our country, the criminals of America, cost the taxpayers of the United States between fifteen and seventeen billion dollars every single year!

Think of it! According to my recollection, either the then Attorney General or Mr. J. Edgar Hoover made the further statement which I am about to quote. By the way, I want to congratulate the American people upon having J. Edgar Hoover at the head of their Bureau of Investigation. He is a fine, upright Christian gentleman, and we could not find a better executive. I think he is about the finest man of his profession in the world. J. Edgar Hoover or somebody else said in an article or a public address—I have forgotten, now, which—that we have in this country today 4,700,000 criminals. That being true, we have 300,000 more persons who are violating the law, and are classified as criminals, than we had heroes in uniform and under arms at the close of the World War on November 11, 1918, when there were 4,400,000 men under arms.

Gentlemen of the Senate, I have not made any particular mention of Italy. I warn the American people that the totalitarian states, the dictators of the world, are "going places." I issue that warning to the American people with the hope that Members of this body, Members of the Congress of the United States, and the citizens of America who travel abroad will put their ears to the ground and keep their eyes open, and, when they return here, tell the executives of this Government what is taking place, in order that we may meet the problem presented by our enemies in the form of Hitler, Mussolini, Stalin, and the Mikado.

Away down there in Italy, Mussolini has reclaimed hundreds of thousands of acres of land. Down there in Italy he has opened up innumerable granite mines and coal mines. Down there in Italy he has industrialized and rehabilitated his country. Down there in Italy, Mussolini is looking after the 42,000,000 people constituting the nation of Italy. Mussolini is not sticking his nose into the business of other countries of the world. Mussolini is thinking about the Italians; and the dictators are doing that which is best for their own people. I say it is high time that we find out how they are doing it, and why they are progressing so rapidly, in order that we may start the machines of industry rolling and turning in this country for the purpose and with a view to absorbing the 12,000,000 people of this country who are out of employment.

There is no use in our cussing them. We are not going to get anywhere by cussing them. There is no use in our hating them. We are not going to get anywhere by hating them. There is no use in our exchanging notes with them. We are not going to get anywhere by that. What we ought to do is to put our noodles to work and ascertain as to how we can meet the world competition which has been presented by the dictators of the world. Let us not try to meet it by war. Let us meet it with reason.

We do not want any war. We all know what the last war cost us. To date it has cost us $69,000,000,000, and, as Calvin Coolidge said, before we have finished paying for it it will have cost us $100,000,000,000.

I say again that I do not know any nation that is going to attack us. I believe in adequate national defense, and I am going to vote for appropriations sufficient to provide adequate national defense. But we are already in a war in which we are interested. We are in a trade war; and if anyone should ask me what solution I would suggest, I should be perfectly frank in stating that I had no solution to suggest, except that we keep our mouths out of other people's business, attend to our knitting here at home, and wash behind our own ears before we tell others to take a bath themselves.

I do not know what is going to happen. I think we are certan to be called upon to face some problems we have never had to face before. The senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] has been telling us to look southward for years, and we have disregarded his advice. When we wake up we find that the Italians and Germans have all the trade in South America with the exception, perhaps, of that of Argentina, and the British are leading there, because the British buy most of their meat from the pampas.

What about the Lima Conference? Let us see something about that. The delegates assembled at Lima, the capital of Peru, the lovely, historic city that was settled by Pizarro, a lieutenant of Cortez, about 1527; and a lovlier place I have What did those who attended the Pan American never seen. Conference see? They saw hundreds of airplanes covering the blue skies above that beautiful city. What sort of airplanes were they? They were Italian airplanes manufactured by the Italians. By whom were they driven? They were driven by Italian aviators. What were they doing? They were teaching Peruvians to drive their planes. What sort of flag did they see? They saw the Nazi flag waving everywhere.

Let us see about that—see how we are getting along down there. I desire to read to the Senate what some columnist wrote about that, and I wish more of them would write about it. Let us wake up the American people and let them know just exactly what is taking place.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the able Senator from North Carolina allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. I am being asked a question, and I should like to know how to answer-that is, as to when we will resume consideration of the relief bill. Trusting that the Senator will take all the time necessary to complete his exposition, which I know has required much study, may I ask him to indicate about what length of time he will take so that I may answer those who interrogate me?

Mr. REYNOLDS. About 30 minutes.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I am safe in saying that within an hour we will resume consideration of the relief bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Quite so.

Mr. LEWIS. I thank the Senator for informing me.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In regard to the Lima Conference, the Nazi flag, the airplanes, and how we are getting along in South America, it seems to me that we have not been attending to our business; it seems to me that we have been neglecting our duties; it seems to me the nations across the Atlantic are in a way outdoing us, getting ahead of us,

I hold in my hand a clipping containing a story by Mr. Paul Mallon which appeared in a column entitled "Behind the News." I clipped this, as I recall, this morning:

A very discouraging private report to President Roosevelt was brought back from South America by State Secretary Hull.

I was surprised when I read that, because all I had seen in the press theretofore about this matter was that everything was wonderful, peaches and cream; but it seems that those who have been heretofore writing about it were mistaken. Mr. Paul Mallon says:

A very discouraging private report to President Roosevelt was brought back from South America by State Secretary Hull. It pictures the Latin situation as wholly black for the United States, without a single practical ray of hope.

Mr. Mallon must have heard me talking somewhere about this thing. He has just taken the words right out of my mouth. I shall read that again:

It pictures the Latin situation as wholly black for the United States, without a single practical ray of hope. It sees the dictators continuing to make inroads there-

Listen to this-

It sees the dictators continuing to make inroads there against our trade and fails to suggest anything we can do to stop them.

I told the Senate that I could not suggest anything. This article says the report fails to suggest anything.

The President is upset and somewhat baffled.

Mr. President, I am upset, too, and I am baffled. I cannot make a suggestion as to what to do. I want someone in the United States to take us out of the darkness and lead us into the sunshine. May we be provided with a deliverer.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly. Mr. LUNDEEN. It would seem that at the outset the minds of the people of the United States and of its leaders ought to be turned to our own affairs. If we turn our thoughts to our own country we are going to solve our domestic problem. We have always solved it in the past, and we are going to solve it again. I am an optimist in that regard. But we will never solve it while we are wandering over the earth saving others beyond our shores.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I believe that to be correct. The article continues:

The President is upset and somewhat baffled. So say his recent callers with whom he has discussed the prob-lem with some display of fire and at great length. As near as they can make out, the White House will reluctantly sanction continuance of our policy of putting on our best business smile to our neighbors, but only until something more promising can be developed. Both Roosevelt and Hull have given more thought to this than anything else lately. But they cannot get away from the roots of fact that the dictators want Latin raw materials and the United States does not.

That is just what I said.

The Latins are certainly going to trade where they can get the best deal, and momentarily no one can think of a way to give them a better deal.

Can you? Can I? No.

Furthermore, the smaller nations near us continue to look upon us as the Colossus of the North (a colossus without teeth) which makes them doubly amenable to the palm-greasing trade chiselers from Europe.

Talk about military production did no good, will be stopped.

That is what he says about it.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Gladly.

Mr. HOLT. Does not the Senator believe it more advisable to put dollars into the pockets of American workingmen so that they can buy our American goods, than to put dollars into the pockets of those abroad?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think the Senator is correct in his suggestion.

I recall—and if I am not correct, I hope the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] will correct me—that I heard the Senator from Idaho say once that the trouble in this country was not overproduction, but underconsumption, and that was along the line of the idea suggested by the junior Senator from West Virginia. I thank him for his contribution.

In this country we have to put dollars into the pockets of American laborers so that they will have the power to purchase, and so to bring about consumption of the so-called overproduction. That is the point exactly.

The great difficulty we are going to experience in this country along that line, I may say to the Senator, is that we have had things pretty easy during the entire history of our Nation. I say to the American people today that the next 25 years, perhaps the next 10 years, will be the hardest years for us, from the standpoint of problems, that we have ever experienced in this country. The American laboring man lives in a sphere of economic existence raised far above that of the laboring man in any other section of the world. As proof of that, for girls working in textile plants in North Carolina and throughout the United States the minimum wage is about $11.49 a week.

In Japan the Japanese girls in the textile plants get about $1.49 a week. We find there a difference of $10. The laboring man in France gets 75 cents or a dollar a day. The laboring man here gets $2.75 or $3 a day. Similar differences exist between other wages in our country and wages in other countries.

I am happy and proud that the American laboring man, who, after all, is the producer of all we have, occupies the strata in the social fabric of America that he does, far above all those in his classification throughout the rest of the world. But in view of the fact that the world is getting smaller, in view of the fact that we have been thrown in close competition with the other nations of the world which pay poor wages, I wish to ask, How are we going to compete in the world markets with those countries which are paying very small wages? How are we going to continue our wage earner where he is at the present time in competition in the world markets with those countries which do not pay their laborers what they deserve? That is a problem for us to solve in the future.

At this point I should like to read a letter written by a mother. After all is said and done, finally we come back to the mothers of America. So I am going to talk about an American mother. I want Senators to know what the American mothers think about Uncle Sam running over the face of the earth and sticking his nose in other people's business, trying to tell them when to go to Sunday school and not to go to Sunday school, trying to tell them how to run their country or not to run their country.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. Does not the Senator believe that those who are telling us to look abroad and dig into other people's business will be the first to apply for dollar-a-year jobs?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly. Listen to what this mother says. I always like to listen to mothers. There is nothing in the world like a mother, Mr. President. As I stand on the floor of the Senate I thank God that mine is still living, and I hope she will be with me many years longer. I have before me a letter published in the Washington Herald. I take great pride in reading it because it is penned by a mother, and this mother has much sense. Listen to what she says:

Keep out of it. Being only a housewife-

She is just a plain American mother.

Being only a housewife I know very little about international affairs, but being also a mother of big boys of draft age—but being also a mother of big boys of draft age, I feel that I am entitled to a voice against the mistakes we are making in meddling with foreign nations in their internal squabbles. Naturally any human group would protest against malicious persecutions of any sort, but having protested time and time again without result, is it not about time that we realize that if we continue to protest and antagonize and ridicule and call names that our own Nation will be sucked into a war that will prove a million times more costly in life and money than anything now going on?

Do Senators get that point? That mother is thinking about those boys being used as cannon fodder.

This is an American mother talking. It is not I who am talking. I am just reading what this American mother says.

I wish Senators could read some of the letters I receive from mothers all over America praying that we shall not become involved in another war. That is quite natural, because we are agreed upon this, certainly, that after all the debt incurred as the result of wars is not liquidated by the payment of the dollars and cents of the currency of a country. The debt incurred in wars is liquidated only by the tears that roll down the cheeks of the mothers who have lost sons, and no amount of money upon the face of the earth can ever heal those bleeding hearts. God bless the mothers of America. They will keep us out of war.

What does this mother say?-

We protested against Italy going into Ethiopia, and against the Spanish War, and now against German nazi-ism. Yet the protests do no good. Why now must we send a whole nation of Americans to slaughter? I believe that most Americans feel the way I do.

Many Americans feel the way this mother says she feels. Many people are afraid to tell what they have seen in Germany. They are afraid if they do that some will say they are pro-German. Listen to what this mother says. I am going to tell the American people what I saw everywhere I went in the world. It is my business to do so. That is why I am employed by the people of North Carolina. I am employed to see what is going on and to tell them and the people of the Nation what is going on.

They want to know what is going on. The people of this country do not have single-track minds. They are broadminded. They are reasonable. They want their Senators to travel over the face of the earth and see what the people of other countries are doing, because they know that the world is growing smaller and smaller year by year, and to safeguard America we have to know what the other fellow is doing.

Listen to what this American mother says:

I believe most Americans feel the way I do but dare not voice their opinions for fear of being called pro-Nazi.

Thank God for this mother.

We are not that. Most of us are not pro-anything. As far as Europe is concerned, we feel that bickering back and forth in others' affairs will prove as great a blunder as the attempt to make the world safe for democracy.

Safe for Christianity! We were propagandized into the last World War.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Senator really believe that we blundered when we went into the World War?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I cannot exactly say that, Senator. I can only answer that by stating it is unfortunate indeed, since we went into the war for the purpose of ending all wars, since we went into the war for the purpose of saving democracy then and for all time, that after the war is over we find that we have not as a result of our participation ended all war.

Mr. LOGAN. It was our own fault, was it not? It was America, our own United States, that quit before the game was played out and declined to have anything to do with making the world safe for democracy?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I assume the Senator has reference to the League of Nations?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Upon that subject the Senator and I differ, because I think I recall that in the fight in this body of Congress in reference to our entering the World Court we had a discussion in regard to it being the back door to the League of Nations, and my recollection is that at that time the Senator from Kentucky favored the United States joining the World Court.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And I was on the other side. But I desire to say that, regardless of the fact that the Senator's opinion and my opinion differed in reference to that question, I greatly admired his stand and appreciated immensely some of the arguments that he put forth. I recall the Senator spoke at length in regard to that matter, and I may state to the Senator's speech and studied it very carefully before I made my speech, because I did not want to find myself in verbal conflict with him about some portions thereof.

Mr. LOGAN. I thank the Senator. I am not questioning the right of any man to be for the plan submitted by President Wilson or against it. The Senator from North Carolina was with the majority of the people of the United States, but a majority of the people of the United States decided that they would take no further part at the most critical time in attempting to make the world safe for democracy and Christianity. So I may say to the Senator that I do not think it was a blunder when we went into the World War. I do not think anyone could prophesy what might have happened had we not gone into the World War. We might have been under the authority of the German Government at this time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I can well appreciate the viewpoint of the Senator from Kentucky about that subject. We could not, of course, prophesy what would take place at the end of the war.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. In the New York Times of this morning there appears quite a lengthy article in reference to the discovery of a propaganda machine that was in use just at and before the time of the World War. That machine furnished propaganda designed to get us into the last World War.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have not seen the New York Times of this morning. I thank the Senator, however, for having brought that matter to my attention, because I shall be glad to read it.

In reference to what the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] has just suggested, I will say that we must of necessity agree that our participation in the World War beginning April 6, 1917, and continuing until November 11, 1918, which was for the purpose of ending all wars, has not ended all wars, because since then in excess of 3,000,000 people have been murdered as the result of wars in the world. Senators, think of it. In this day of Christianity, in this day of enlightenment, in this day of so-called civilization there have been millions of people murdered as the result of wars declared or undeclared. Let us see what the numbers are. I believe the records to date in reference to the unholy conquest of China will show that since the Chinese conquest, not including the conquest of Manchuria, approximately 1,750,-000 Chinese and Japanese have been killed.

In addition, I believe that up to date approximately 1,000,-000 persons have been killed in Spain, 250,000 of whom were noncombatants. That makes a total of 2,750,000. It is said that from 300,000 to 500,000 were slaughtered in Ethiopia. I do not remember the exact figures. Think of it! It is horrifying to bring ourselves to the realization of the fact that over 3,000,000 persons have been murdered.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be happy to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. Are there not things worse than death? And is it not better that 3,000,000 men should give their lives in defense of liberty and Christianity than that they should refuse to give their lives for such a cause? And as to our own 130,000,000 people, should they be denied, without a struggle, the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience, or the right to pursue liberty and happiness, and all the other rights which have been guaranteed to us by the Constitution? Does not the Senator think it would be better that the sacrifice be made in death rather than that our people give up those God-given rights which we have enjoyed throughout the years?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Most certainly. I am thoroughly in accord with that view. If I were a Chinese, I would fight to the death before I would permit the Japanese to conquer me, or my fellow man, or my neighbor. Had I been an Abyssinian, I would have done the same thing in Ethiopia. Had I been one of the 24,000,000 constituting the population of Spain, regardless of which side I took, I would have fought for the rights and liberties to which I felt I was entitled.

Mr. LUNDEEN. And had the able Senator from North Carolina been living at the time of Washington, no doubt he would have been marching in the armies of Washington, the Father of our Country, fighting to cut us loose forever from the quarrels and intrigues of Europe, and the trials and troubles and war taxes of that far continent.

Mr. REYNOLDS. George Washington warned us against any foreign embroilments. He warned us to keep our skirts clear from the entanglements or involvements of Europe.

I have before me a little volume known as Richardson's Messages and Papers of the Presidents. On page 120 we find the following statement by George Washington:

Observations on the value of peace with other nations are unnecessary. It would be wise, however, by timely provisions to guard against those acts of our own citizens which might tend to disturb it, and to put ourselves in a condition to give that satisfaction to foreign nations which we may sometimes have occasion to require from them. I particularly recommend to your consideration the means of preventing those aggressions by our citizens on the territory of other nations, and other infractions of the law of nations, which, furnishing just subject of complaint, might endanger our peace with them; and, in general, the maintenance of a friendly intercourse with foreign powers will be presented to your attention by the expiration of the law for that purpose, which takes place, if not renewed, at the close of the present session.

That was a part and portion of George Washington's message delivered on November 6, 1792, entitled "Fourth Annual Address."

A little further back in the volume I believe there are some lines from his last address.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. HOLT. I like to listen to the Senator. I should like to have him answer the argument that Washington's time is so far back that we should not pay any attention to it. The Senator has heard the argument that Washington lived so many years ago that we should not pay any attention to the Farewell Address.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Conditions are changing all the time, and some of the nations which are breaking treaties say that they are permitted to do so on account of the changing conditions. However, I think the words uttered by George Washington are as important and pertinent today as they were then. That is particularly true because of the fact that we are in more immediate proximity to one another now than we were then, and as a result there is more constant daily association, and we are more likely to become involved unless we watch our course very closely.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator stated a few moments ago what he would do if he were a citizen of one or the other of the several countries which he mentioned. I should like to ask the Senator what he would have done if he had been Secretary of State during the time Japan marched into Manchuria, when the Nine Power Agreement was in force.

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, at the time we had the Nine Power Treaty, and that treaty, according to my recollection, guaranteed the independence and the integrity of China.

Mr. DAVIS. That is true.

Mr. REYNOLDS. If we were going to take a hand, that would have been the time to take it. I say, if we were going to take a hand. Of course, I do not know all the circumstances surrounding that most important moment. However, as I recall, Mr. Stimson was Secretary of State at that time.

Mr. DAVIS. That is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. He cabled the minister in charge of similar affairs of the British Government in reference to joining him in an effort to stop the march of the Japanese troops to the north.

Getting back to Washington-

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more question?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be delighted to yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I know the Senator does not have much more time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to yield to the Senator. Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator should be convinced that some powerful nation was making preparations to attack our Nation, do I understand it to be the position of the Senator that he would not favor doing anything until the enemy had actually reached our soil, and was burning our cities?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Oh. no.

Mr. LOGAN. Is it not best, when you know you have to fight, to strike at the first opportunity?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly. I am in thorough accord with the Senator. In other words, as I stated in answer to the inquiry during the early part of my observations, I think we should always keep our powder dry, and we should be prepared. In physical combat the fellow who gets in the first lick is the fellow who has the advantage, because it rather takes the other fellow off guard. That is what I Just exactly as the Senator stated, we should be prepared. In pursuing that thought, I wish to say that we should not wait until the enemy has approached our shores. destroyed our buildings, and razed all our great edifices, but we should meet him over the waters of the Pacific or the Atlantic, before he arrives at our shores.

Getting back to George Washington, before I close I should like to quote from page 215 of Richardson's Messages and Papers of the Presidents. Washington said this in his last address:

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world, so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements.

In closing, I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate, which has been so kind as to listen to me, a few letters and cards which I have received, and which I have picked up at random. I have thousands and thousands of letters, telegrams, and post cards from American citizens in reference to my attitude, which I have endeavored to impart to the Senate today. I should like to provide the Senate with the opportunity of hearing me read some of these letters, in order that Senators who have today contributed to the discussion and to my observations may know that we are not lost but that we are riding a popular wave. That is to say, we are riding a wave which is made up of about 85 percent of the American people who share our attitude in reference to foreign affairs.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. HOLT. I do not know whether or not I missed that part of the Senator's address; but did the Senator discuss the great danger of our playing a part parallel to the action of England and pulling England's chestnuts out of the fire?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I did.

Mr. HOLT. I am sorry to have missed that part of the Senator's address.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I discussed that question in relation to our position in the Orient-in Asiatic waters.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator has traveled widely and I should like to have his opinion as to whether or not we should point out who are the aggressor nations.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Whether who should point them out?

Mr. DAVIS. Whether we should.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think we should keep our mouths out of the business of anybody else. If we start policing the whole world, we shall find ourselves in war. What we need to do is to look after our national criminals, the criminals here at home, instead of trying to police international criminals. We have enough at home to occupy our attention.

I have selected at random a few cards which I have received from different States. Here is one from New York

DEAR SENATOR: Congratulations on your interview re United States minding its own business. Thank goodness there is at least one man in Washington who can think straight and is not afraid

This is no reflection upon my colleagues.

I agree fully with what you say, and hope you will continue to publish similar sentiments. Understand Germany can use 4,000,000 bales of cotton, but all they get from us is abuse. Something wrong

I see my beloved friend, ED SMITH. I always call the senior Senator from South Carolina "Mr. Ed." I know he will be interested when I read about Germany using 4,000,000 bales of cotton.

Here is a card from Pittsburgh, Pa.:

DEAR SENATOR REYNOLDS: Allow me to express my fullest approval of your statement warning United States to mind its own business and not start out to run the affairs of other countries.

Here is one from far-away California:

We read your article about the United States minding its own business, and we think it is the soundest, most reasonable, intelligent article as a whole and as to each item that we have ever read. C. K. Johnson, Republican.

James Hervey Johnson, Democrat.

I have both the Democrats and the Republicans with me. I see in the Chamber the able junior Senator from Texas, the Honorable Tom Connally. In a few minutes I shall read a letter from Texas. People in Texas are writing to me.

Here is one from Fabius, W. Va., dated January 10, 1939:

Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,

Dear Senator Reynolds,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Reynolds: This morning I see in the Baltimore Sun an article about your speech at Providence, R. I. You are exactly right when you said that it was none of our damn business what kind of a government Germany, Italy, and Japan has for their needle. their people.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. REYNOLDS. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is that a literal quotation from the Senator's speech? [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. Figuratively speaking, it is.

I try not to be partial or prejudiced, but it astonishes me how our Government nags and antagonizes the leaders of those countries, which of course puts the people of those countries against

We should have the good will of those people instead of the ill lil. If they have no government at all it is nothing to us, if they are satisfied.

Here is a letter from Pennsylvania. It is headed "Wilson High School" and reads:

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have just read your admirable statement urging the United States to stay at home, mind its own business, and solve its own domestic problems.

It seems to me that this is the sanest piece of advice that could be given at this time.

I want you to know that Pennsylvanians, as well as citizens of your own State, will back you 100 percent.

I trust that you will courageously support any resolutions offered that are designed to keep the United States out of European entanglements.

Sincerely.

I will ask the reporter not to embody in the RECORD the names of the writers of these communications, for the reason that I have not been provided with an opportunity of writing them or telegraphing them asking their permission to use their names, and I think I ought to extend to them that consideration.

Here is a letter from Massachusetts which reads:

DEAR SENATOR: Your recent declaration that the United States hould "mind its own business" in foreign affairs is splendid wisdom.

These letters come from every State in the Union. Everybody apparently is in accord. Nobody wants to get into war. Everyone wants us to attend to our own business and put our own house in order here.

As you point out so clearly, it is true that the dangerous "red" elements in this country are incessantly attacking such nations as Italy or Germany, while they say nothing, of course, about "red" Russia from which they take their orders. As an example, I refer you to the February issue of the magazine Click, showing "red" propaganda at its most unspeakable worst.

I hope you continue to fight for our grand American ideals and traditions.

With all good wishes, I am, Yours very sincerely.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, if there is any danger of the Senator running out of letters, I can bring him several bushel baskets full which have come from the State of Minnesota and in which the writers express themselves along the same line as the writers of the communications the Senator from North Carolina has read.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator. I may say to the Senator that I delivered a Nation-wide radio address yesterday, although it only occupied 30 minutes, upon this same subject, and I have bushels of telegrams from all the States since its delivery.

I read now a letter from Newton, in my State of North Carolina. I see the Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwel-LENBACH] in the Chamber and I wish to say to the Senator, who so frequently compliments my section of North Carolina, that is western North Carolina, and my home city, the little gem city of the mountains, that Newton is only about 75 miles from Asheville.

This letter, as I have said, is from one of my constituents.

NEWTON, N. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I heartily endorse your views upon foreign affairs and your stand against overdoing armament spending. I was in Europe in 1936 and Alaska, and find your views confirm mine that we let Europe strictly alone. They will not and cannot bother us. We should have a powerful Navy in both the Atlantic and Pacific, Panama defenses, and enough airplanes, not too many for they get obsolete. Beware of Japan. They can't be trusted. Prepare against them in Alaska and other points.

This is a good, sensible letter.

Our official policy against Germany and Italy is uncalled for and is to our national disadvantage.
Yours sincerely.

Here is a letter from Providence, R. I. Let us see what

My Dear Senator Reynolds: Thank God there are one or two people in the country who can still think for themselves and who have the courage to speak out in these hysterical times—

Perhaps he is referring to me [laughter]- when, though we are not at war, we little folk are almost as afraid of reprisal if we say the wrong thing according to the standardized mind as though it were in '17.

We read with delight the short summary in our Evening Bulletin of remarks you made in Providence yesterday. You could not have made them in a more needed spot, for the Bulletin-Journal is notorious for its bitter bloody-shirt waving now, just as it was a leader in German baiting and atrocity stories during the war. We have only one newspaper serving our State, and we have had a steady diet of news, editorials, and cartoons over a period of years with one aim—to so stir up the people that war will be a pushover when the armament program begins and the death of our neutrality program has been consummated.

I submit that the great, voiceless, and thinking American people would agree to the following—

Let us see what he wants us to agree to-

We do not want any war, for or against Russia, for or against the Fascists, for American investments, to democratize the world, etc. We will war only for the defense of our country here.

The writer seems to be a pretty sensible man.

We will not be fooled again to cross the ocean to meet the foe

"before it comes to get us."

We reject the thesis that it is all right for us to insist that other we reject the thesis that it is all right for us to insist that other countries be democracies, though we deny the right of other systems to protect their ideologies, going even so far as to class as political propaganda the attempt to sell their goods in lands we once considered our private market places.

We want neutrality. We cannot have a meddling policy of labeling one nation in each quarrel an aggressor. There has always had to be one aggressor in every war.

had to be one aggressor in every war.

We want peace so that all our millions may live out the short and miserable span of life they are granted but once.

We feel there will be wrongs till crack o' doom, and that it is futile for us to try to do again what we failed to accomplish in our last foreign venture.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator if the writer of the letter is the one who said, "Thank God for Bob REYNOLDS"? [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. This is the same man, and I think he meant it. [Laughter.]

We know that a neutrality act which permits anything but an absolute hands-off policy to both sides is not a neutrality act at all. We know that declaring an aggressor and employing an embargo to one side will possibly draw us into others' quarrels.

And, I add, lead us into war.

We do not approve of classifying constantly and publicly the na-we do not approve or classifying constantly and publicly the nations into the devils and the angels, especially when our hands are not too clean in many of the acts we accuse the devils of.

We feel that our "diplomats" should observe the ordinary courtesies, even though they are rabid partisans and zealots of another ideology, which is also foreign to America; that they should not allow their unrestrained language and stupid insults to cause difficulties with countries which are doing us no evil, or harming

We feel that the same treatment should be given to all outside propaganda; that all Communists and communistic efforts be given as much unfavorable publicity as are those of the bunds.

We for the most part, the silent folk, want to preserve our traditional democracy. We do not feel it has to be completely made over. We do not classify any extremes, either of the extreme right or the extreme left, as democracies.

We refuse to thin a united front with any nations either with or the extreme left, as democracies.

We refuse to join a united front with any nations, either with Britain and France, or any other, least of all with Soviet Russia, no matter how alluringly dressed up in the verbiage of a democracy. We want armament for decent defense, knowing full well the absurdity of claiming that any nation is going to attack us, knowing well we will have no trouble if we have a decent regard for the rights of all other nations.

We know that Britain, by reason of their being imperial, will always have a finger in every nation's pie, and always be in on any shift in the balance of power, and therefore will always be in trouble. We do not want to be associated with any nation for this wery reason.

We beg you, Senator, to keep up the fight, for you will give courage to others less brave, to come also to your aid. You will be able to stem this flame which will soon be an all-engulfing holocaust which will end our generation, our freedom, our civilization. We beg you to keep us out of any commitments or acts which will further antagonize others, knowing that if no nation feels it can count on our support to pull its chestauts out, there will be no great war. We here you too to use your influence to stopping the victous. war. We beg you, too, to use your influence to stopping the vicious system of agreements which aims, in part, to starve out of commerce certain nations, hoping thereby to bring to an end the governments of these countries. We hope you will teach our fellow Senators the truth that a prosperous world, a world with all countries having a modicum of business, trade, prosperity, will not go to war.

I, too, have just returned from Europe, where I have been for 4 months. I was amazed at what I saw, and at the amount of propaganda that was swamping my country, giving absolutely incorrect notions for obviously definite purposes. I am back appreciating my democracy more than ever, but determined to fight for a live and let live policy as far as other governments are concerned, feeling that as you said "it's none of our damned business."

That's the spirit. Again, thank God for such a statement. Wishing you success in this truly American and patriotic and humanitarian program, and promising you our support in the firm conviction, that there are millions more who try to think and read between the lines, and aren't gullibles, I am, Cordially yours.

I have here another letter, from California, reading as

Here is another letter from North Carolina, from one of my constituents:

JANUARY 16, 1939.

Senator Robert R. Reynolds,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Reynolds: I was delighted to note that you planned to make a speech on the floor of the Senate entitled "What Has Germany Done to Us." and I have been sorry to note that you have postponed the speech. Your general remarks in the newspapers as to your position on America taking part in any European issue certainly appeals to me.

European issue certainly appeals to me.

What I can't understand is our sudden alarm over the welfare of minorities. Personally I have no German or Italian ancestors, insofar as I know, but have always been told that I was part French and part English; therefore my views are not affected in any way by inheritance.

I have a deep feeling of sympathy for all of the persecuted minorities throughout the world, but it is beyond me to understand why our President and State Department made such a great effort to establish relations with Russia during probably one of the most extended persecutions in the history of the world and why our Government failed to criticize the Russian persecutions that have been probably the bloodiest in history. Our neighbors, the Mexicans, have in recent years persecuted the religious groups to an extent that probably would be on a par with anything that has happened in Germany, if the truth was known as to the extent of actual persecution there. Yet the actions of our Government toward Mexico if anything leaves the impression that we approved of the administration in power.

All that any of us know, unless we travel as you have, is what

All that any of us know, unless we travel as you have, is what we read; and from what I have been able to read Germany and Italy have acted like perfect little ladies compared with Mr. Stalin and his crowd. Yet one would believe from the recent agitation and his crowd. Yet one would believe from the recent agitation that existing conditions in Germany, and now Italy, are the worst that ever happened anywhere before in the history of the world.

It is my humble observation that the trouble lies not in the persecution of the minorities but in the same fact that drew us into the World War, and that is that neither Russia nor Mexico have as yet been a threat to the British Empire. Therefore, it was unnecessary for British influences to exert themselves in connection with our foreign policy. In the case of Germany and Italy, however, they are a threat to the British, but that would not be sufficient to arouse the feelings of American people. Therefore, the same propaganda machine that aroused Americans in 1914 to save the world for democracy is now running full steam ahead to save the persecuted minorities and incidentally to protect the British Empire. British Empire.

That is the object of all this propaganda that is coming from Europe.

The writer of this letter winds up by saying:

It seems to me we should not forget that only a few years ago the British in their smug superiority referred to Americans as Shylocks simply because we expected them to repay us the money lent them and incidentally which they were financially able to pay. Now we are the White Hope of the democracies because again they need our resources and manpower.

I do hope that you will have the courage to express and to continue to express your convictions on this subject.

Here is a letter from New York:

Hon, Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS:

Dear Sir: I have read with the greatest of pleasure, your remarks making clear your stand as to the policy we should pursue in regard to foreign countries. It is indeed cheerful reading especially at a time when too much concern has been shown over the conditions overseas. I sincerely hope that you and others of your line of thinking can amalgamate and form a powerful "Mind Our Own Business" bloc to more than offset those who seem to Own Business" bloc to more than offset those who seem to under the impression that we are supposed to act as monitor to the rest of the world.

I see in the present a large trend toward that pious conception of the United States of America as the savior of the world which got us into the last fiasco. There is altogether too much of the same Anglo and Francophobia in the air as well as too much anti-German feeling. This was another powerful factor in embroiling us in the last war to save the hides of the Limies and

I think that we see eye to eye when I say that we are neither pro or anti in our attitude toward any other countries but that we are entirely pro-U. S. A.

As an American-born citizen, a voter, a worker, a taxpayer, a veteran, and as one who has the best interests of my country at heart, I want you to know that I think it well worth my time and effort to let you know that I wish more power to you and to those others of the country's representatives who see things

The country is in no more danger of attack from Germany than it was during the time of the Kaiser. Both he and Hitler have had or now have their hands full right on their own home grounds. And it gratifies me to know that there are men in public life who recognize this fact and who have the courage to come out and say so in blunt, plain terms.

Again, hoping that you and others of your way of thinking can succeed in persuading the majority in Congress to accept your views on so vital a matter, I am,

Just a plain citizen.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that it is 20 minutes past 3, and I am desirous of replenishing the inner being with foodstuffs, I ask permission of the Senate that the official reporter be permitted to embody in my address, as a part thereof, the remainder of the letters on this subject, which I have snatched at random from my files.

The letters are as follows:

JANUARY 12, 1939.

Hon. ROBERT REYNOLDS.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR STR: It does one's heart good to read occasionally in the local "kept" press of an individual who is not afraid of voicing the unadulterated truth, even though it might entail possible political suicide. I fully endorse your stand on immigration stoppage, only as one who rubbing elbows with refugees every day in the week can appreciate its value.

However, it was your statement on January 11 to the press regarding the possibility of our going to war against the German Nation to fight the refugees' battles, which has filled me with great admiration for your political honesty and courage.

I am really sorry that I am not one of your constituents, so as to be able to vote for you.

Keep up the good work.

Very sincerely yours.

JANUARY 14, 1939.

Senator Robert R. Reynolds,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: After reading your splendid article in the Baltimore-News Post of January 12, 1939, and being heartily in accord with the sentiments as expressed by you, I think it befitting at this time to let you know that your thoughts and feelings are the same thoughts and feelings that are paramount in millions and millions of American minds today, and this country is blessed in having a man of your intellect and courage to openly state your opinion on subjects that are of a vital issue to every American today.

Every true American is also asking himself the question, as you so ably outlined in your recent article, What business is it of ours (the people of the United States) what sort of government the people of Germany, Italy, Japan. or any other country on the face of the earth has? Why should we continue to stick our nose into the business of other nations when the sniffling around is absolutely assembled for absolutely uncalled for.

This likens itself to a family who has some very sick children in their own home and gives their own children very little attention, yet is terribly concerned about the health and welfare of their neighbor's children and spends most of their time in their neighbor's home.

The unemployment situation in this country is one of the worst plagues that has ever stricken a God-loving nation, and while there have been measures adopted in an effort to relieve this horrible plague, there are millions of deserving men and women who are absolutely destitute, broken in faith and spirit, and feel the only possible visible relief is self-destruction, and this, at an age when life should hold the most for them.

The enclosed newspaper clippings and pictures tell a more realistic and truthful story of what problems thousands of Americans are facing today, and while the headlines of our American newspapers blazened just a few short weeks ago, with horror, of what fate was befalling other poor unfortunates in foreign na-

what fate was betalling other poor unfortunates in foreign nations, right here at home we have thousands of our own American-born citizens who are facing the same fates—nonemployment, loss of homes, and need of food and clothing.

With all local relief agencies in nearly every community taxed to the limit, with W. P. A. unable to take care of all those qualified, and with decent jobs in private industry at premiums, yet despite these facts, we read that refugees will be given a 6-month time extension in order to let them continue in their employment as teachers or college professors.

In the thousands of miles I've traveled as a wholesale representative, during 1936, 1937, 1938, I found the same acute need for employment and subsistance, regardless of whether it was a town of 500, 5,000, or 50,000 population.

We need more men like you, Senator Reynolds, in our National Government today, and it is my fervent hope that you may live long to perpetuate the humanitarian ideals you so capably expressed in your newspaper article aforementioned in this letter.

I hope your bill relative to the stoppage of all immigration into this country will be speedily passed and every effort will be concentrated on the relief of the horrible unemployment situation here in these United States, because, after all, charity begins at here in these United States, because, after all, charity begins at home.

It is not only my desire but the desire of others with whom I have discussed your stirring article within the past few days that you will continue to write and make public your views.

I will await, with interest, your next article.

Very truly yours.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., January 9.—The accused murderer of Harry Barck, 74, Hoboken's tight-fisted overseer of the poor, was applauded today when led into court to stand trial.

There was a scattering of handclaps for the 37-year-old defendant, Joseph Scutellaro.

His defense is being financed by nickels and dimes contributed by fellow relief recipients.

Hungry, jobless

Scutellaro, hungry and jobless, fatally stabbed Barck with a desk spike in his office while pleading for an $8 relief check which was delayed in the mail, according to police. At home, Scutellaro's wife and two small children were starving.

Scutellaro's attorney, Samuel Leibowitz, said only outright acquittal will be acceptable to the defense. He indicated he would not advise his elient to plead guilty to a lesser charge if the electric chair is not demanded by the State.

To fight evidence

Any evidence tending to show that Barck was unduly tight-fisted with public relief funds will be fought by the State, William George, assistant prosecutor, asserted.

An undue stinginess with public relief moneys attributed to Barck by several relief clients has attracted considerable public attention.

FINDS RELIEF SITUATION NEAR ACUTE STAGE-WAXTER SAYS EXPENDI-TURES EXCEED ESTIMATES AS CASE LOADS MOUNT-BLAMES REFUSAL OF W. P. A. TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT FOR NEW CLIENTS

With relief expenditures exceeding all estimates and case loads mounting steadily, the situation in Baltimore is becoming acute, Thomas J. S. Waxter, director of the department of welfare, said rhomas J. S. Waxter, thretter of the table of the yesterday.

Refusal of the W. P. A. to provide employment for new relief clients in the city, which resulted from a general curtailment in the works program in the city and State, is responsible for the present problem, Mr. Waxter added.

The director said the relief case load has mounted more rapidly in the last few months than in 3 years.

Many await employment

Approximately 2,000 persons have been certified for employment on W. P. A. projects in the last few months, but have not been given jobs because of the curtailment in the works program.

Meanwhile, between 400 and 500 persons a day have been filing applications for relief. applications for relief.

Since November 1, when the W. P. A. stopped providing employment for new relief clients, the relief case load has increased by 900, reaching a total of 5,629 as of January 1.

In October, 850 relief cases were closed, but this number fell to 532 in December.

Reports 2,969 unemployable

Of the 5,629 case load carried into January, 2,969 comprise cases which are unemployable, 2,431 which are employable but cannot be given W. P. A. employment, and 522 involving persons who are capable of performing light work only.

The case load for all four types of assistance—direct relief, oldage pensions, aid to dependent children and to the needy blind—was 18,143 as of January 1. Approximately 8,000 of the cases involved Negroes

In addition to the relief case load of 5,629, the case load for the other types of assistance are: Aged, 7,598; aid to dependent children, 4,528; and aid to the needy blind, 388.

Mayor Jackson recently said if the relief situation was to be met it would be necessary for the W. P. A. to continue to provide employment for new relief clients in the city.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull disclosed, meanwhile, that he had asked Myron C. Taylor, former head of the United States Steel Corporation and first American delegate in the work to help refugees, to return to London to stimulate assistance for the hundreds of thousands of German refugees needing new homes. Hull said Taylor plans to sail November 26.

Hull said George Rubles, the American director of the intergov-ernmental committee on political refugees at London, had been prepared for some time to go to Berlin to consult with the German Government on practical measures for solving the refugee problem.

[From the Baltimore News-Post of November 30, 1938] ANOTHER KIND

Now, it's hard to understand why the mail should include anything like that.

But this sort of letter is easy to understand: 'I am writing in regard to our family situation.

"We are in need of food, and my husband needs work terribly badly. He was employed by the W. P. A. but was laid off in July and has not been recalled as yet. He has been to the relief, and they tell him that they can't do anything for him because he is eligible for W. P. A. work. But when he goes to W. P. A. they tell eligible for W. F. A. work. But when he goes to W. P. A. they tell him they have nothing except laboring work, and he can't do that, as he is a disabled war veteran. They tell him he will just have to have patience until they find clerical work for him.

"We have seven children, ages from 3 to 15 years, and I am asking you how we can feed and clothe them on patience.

"My husband receives $26.25 as compensation, which just pays our rent and $1.25 over. Right now we have nothing in the house except coffee.

"I am sure you can realize just what a situation this is. That is am sure you can realize just what a situation this is. That is why I am writing to you to see if there is someone you know who can give us some food or give my husband some work. He has written three letters to the American Legion without results. "He cannot get Maryland veteran's relief because they say he was a Pennsylvania veteran. And Pennsylvania won't send him any relief because he lives in Maryland.

"As for my husband and myself, we could stand the situation for a while but it is terribly hard for the children. We surely hope you can help us, and it will be appreciated more than we can say."

All kinds

Letters like that come in every day. It's easy to understand why they are sent. They are sent in sheer desperation, because the writers don't know anywhere else to turn. Unfortunately, it is possible to be helpful in only a small minority of these cases, because the relief organizations are bound by all sorts of rules and regulations. For the general run of cases, these regulations are sensible. But special circumstances often leave families in a sort of no man's land, caught between rules.

Anyway, this may help explain to you why the daily mail is a daily fascination.

Dear Sir: I wish to thank you for the article in today's New York Evening Journal entitled, "Senator Reynolds Warns United States to Mind Own Business." I wish every Member of Congress felt the way you do on this subject. We have been listening to a lot of false prophets and warmongers too long for the good of our own country. Visitors from Europe here are amazed at the amount of war talk. They all say one hears more of war in this country than one does in Europe. What is back of all this? This is an interesting question.

DURHAM, N. C., January 11, 1939.

Hon. Robert R. Reynolds,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.
Dear Senator Reynolds: You asked the question why we should hate Germany. Bear in mind all of us have not had the opportu-nity to take a trip to Germany. Perhaps we have not had the opportunity to have Germany put a deceivable rose pinned upon our chest. The rose they will pin upon anyone has such an offen-sive odor that it spreads all over the world. How on earth can you have a feeling for any nation who wants to destroy humanity and religion and above all the house of God. This is to remind you, Robert, the people of North Carolina have stood by our playboy. Robert, the people of North Carolina have stood by our playboy. This is not time to start any playing under our critical condition. If you love Germany, I would suggest to you to resign as our Senator of North Carolina and withdraw your citizenship of the United States, and make your departure from our country, who stands for liberty and freedom and above all a nation who permits any person to worship God as it sees fit, just as long as it worships God sincerely and conscientiously. Thank God we have such a nation to have for our leader a man whom we all know as Franklin D. Roosevelt, who stands for humanity and liberties. Your attitude is so shocking and it really sounds unbelievable, when the people of our religion have stood by you and has spent thousands of dollars to put you where you are today. Germany might have given you some deceivable and personal privileges to cause you to try to cause us to enjoy some good feeling toward her, but, Robert, I want to remind you what happened 20 years ago when the Kaiser of Germany valued an agreement as just a scrap of paper, and how on earth you can feel that way toward them is absolutely inhuman—deceivable nation.

Robert, again how on earth you can have a good feeling for a nation who doesn't enjoy living in peace after they have had their lesson and medicine who have hear economicine way for 20 years.

nation who doesn't enjoy living in peace after they have had their lesson and medicine, who have been conspiring war for 20 years against the world. If you, Robert, appreciate such a nation, I can't understand why.

Hoping you will give your further careful consideration regarding your attitude in this Nation toward Germany.

JANUARY 12, 1939.

Hon. Senator Reynolds, of North Carolina,

Congress of United States of America,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Reynolds: I read with great interest the Associated Press report of January 10 of your visit and your opinion of conditions in Carponian of conditions in Germany.

You are to be commended for your honesty and sincerity in bringing this message to our people in its true form. Our 10,000,000 unemployed and the danger of black plague of communism within our borders should be our first consideration.

To start a war with any foreign power at this time just to please a few munitions manufacturers will positively be the end of our democratic form of government. Next a dictatorship.

My dear Senator, please do everything in your power to prevent any such catastrophe and get us back to our own Americanism and preserve the American traditions.

Please send me your speech that you were going to make in the Senate.

the Senate.
With every good wish, I remain.

JANUARY 12, 1939.

Dear Senator Reynolds: I started to read my paper this evening, the Minneapolis Star, and I read your article on our country minding its own business. I consider it my duty to write you to say you are my idea of a real American. It seems today in this country there are a lot of people in high places that are everything but American. I agree with this statement of yours in its entirety. Being a member of the Foreign Relations Committee you are in an ideal most to make yourself heart. It would seem to me the people. Being a memoer of the Foreign Relations Committee you are in an ideal spot to make yourself heard. It would seem to me the people of North Carolina ought to be mighty proud in having an American Senator. I wish you good health and may you fight hard to keep this country out of a war, that the propagandists are trying to promote.

FORT WAYNE, IND., January 14, 1939.

Hon. Robert R. Reynolds,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.
My Dear Sir: It is not a habit of mine to comment to public officials upon their published statements. So far as I can recall, this is the first time that I do so. I do so at this time merely to strengthen you in what evidently is your resolve to speak out fear-strengthen you in what evidently is your resolve to speak out fear-lessly and with undaunted courage for a truly American course with reference to international policy of our Government.

The Fort Wayne News-Sentinel, January 12, 1939, issue, carried an article by you copyrighted by the International News Service dated Washington, January 12, in which you state that "America should mind its own business in present crisis." Let me commend you most highly for that sane stand which you take, and may I encourage you to continue to speak out fearlessly in favor of your present position, which, in spite of what propagandists would have us believe, is still the position of the great majority of the people of our country. of our country.

Senator REYNOLDS, United States Senator from State of North Carolina, United States Senator from State of North Carolina,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Reynolds: I have enclosed another article from the Louisville Courier-Journal regarding the Baptist minority in Rumania. I have been a Baptist all my life, and, while I think that everything that is reasonable should be done to help the Baptist minority in that country, it does not call for any warlike action by our country against the Rumanian Government.

I also believe that the Baptists as a general rule do not want any warrange action because of the present action of the Rumanian Goveextreme action because of the present action of the Rumanian Government. This is in sharp contrast to the actions of another minority group in the present time, who are doing everything possible to drag our Nation into an early war with a strong European power. This is one of the most vital and far-reaching questions of our

THE RUMANIAN BAPTISTS

To the Editor of the Courier-Journal:

The Edmanian Baptists

To the Editor of the Courier-Journal:

There was a recent article in the Courier-Journal about an edict from Rumania, limiting the activities in that country of all the evangelical groups. This new action by the Rumanian Government makes it possible for them to close most of the churches, including the churches of over 70,000 Baptists.

I have been a Baptist all my life. I think that everything that can be done reasonably should be done to help the evangelical groups in that country. However, I do not think that this new edict should call for any warlike action from our Nation or even any threat of war from our Government.

I predict that the Rumanian Baptists and other evangelical groups will adapt and adjust themselves to this new law. I also predict that they will not, in that country, ask us or try to drive us into any warlike action because of their present trouble. Even though their course will be hard, and the people may be forced to suffer having the churches closed for a time, at least, these Rumanian people, I feel sure, are the type and kind of people who can "take it" when the "going is rough."

Furthermore, they will not go in for a lot of world-wide sympathy and calls for help from this side of the Atlantic. Neither will they ask us to throw down the bars of the American immigration laws, and cause our Nation extra trouble and added expense. In short, I predict that their conduct will be to make the best of a very poor situation, and it will be in sharp contrast to others, who are doing their best to drag this Nation into a new European war.

others, who are doing their best to drag this Nation into a new European war.

They will adjust and adapt themselves to the new laws of their country in the same manner we ourselves in this country do.

That is by making the best of a situation, no matter how poor it may be, and not to be forever crying for help when things get rough.

Senator Norris, passing through St. Louis recently, told news-paper reporters that he deplored the treatment of Jews in Germany, and added that he didn't see what we could do about it, as it was Germany's affair, not ours.

It is certainly very imprudent for a Cabinet member of the United States—and I mean Mr. Ickes—to make the violent and vicious remarks he made about a friendly nation.

I wish we had more level-headed men, such as you, Senators

NORRIS and CLARK

Such men as these are the real, true type of Americans.

DEAR MR. REYNOLDS: As a teacher and preacher I have been very much interested in all phases of our Government, but have never before written to any public official. My Dear Sir: I have read with a great deal of interest your very good comments regarding ill feeling here in the States to the Nazi Government.

I, like your self, also visited in Germany and cannot for all the world see why the feeling here at home is so awful bitter.

I recently informed a rector who is forever attacking Hitler, and the Nazis as a whole, to preach Jesus Christ awhile and give the Germans a rest. It has reached a point wherein many people are taking it much too far.

Please keep your good work up. I only wish we had more men

Senator R. R. REYNOLDS,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator: You and I did not agree on the Supreme Court reorganization, but I am certainly with you on your speech yesterday in the Senate on our foreign relations.

I went to Paris in 1927 as a member of the American Legion, traveled over the different countries, finally landed in London, and can say that we found more jealousy in England than any of the seven countries we visited. We were nothing more than a big sucker in the last war, and after sending millions of our men and billions of our dollars, which any sensible person knows won the war, the only thanks we have received is, as you said, a repudiation of their debts and never a word of praise, but on the other hand a spirit of jealousy. spirit of jealousy.

You are the best prepared man in the Senate on foreign affairs, so go to it; the people are with you.

Senator ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,

Senator Robert R. Reynolds,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Reynolds: My wife and I read with a great deal of interest as well as approval what was published in our daily Journal and attributed to you.

We are happy there are a few men left who realize we are meddling too much in the other country's business, and especially is that true of our President's Cabinet. We should be above petty bickering, for the more we say ugly words about our neighbors the more liable we are apt to be fighting. A soft answer turneth away wrath.

You know we elect our Government officials to run our Government smoothly. You all have plenty to straighten out here at home without going to war about minorities in other countries or to make our munition makers richer and our financiers put more gold in their pockets. Rich men nor elected officials of our Government do not fight. If the racial minorities want to fight Germany and Italy, let them go. 1939

The sad part of the last war is that we are paying for it now, and shall be maybe 50 years from now. We were taken for a bunch of poor suckers once to fight and pay for a war that was none of our business. We hope enough of the faithful men of our Senate and Congress shall get together and put that referendum through giving the people a chance to vote on whether we want any war of aggression. People in America hate war even though the press seems to try to make them war conscious.

We thank God there is a man like you speaking so forcefully

We thank God there is a man like you speaking so forcefully against war now when it is much more effective than waiting when it is upon us.

Again and again we thank you for speaking out now and ask God's richest blessings on you always.

NORTH BERGEN, N. J., January 12, 1939.

My Dear Senator Reynolds: In tonight's Evening Journal I have read your article of we Americans criticizing every nation upon the face of the earth. At this point I am with you 100 percent.

You are asking what have the German people done to the people of the United States. To my opinion, nothing.

In reference of putting our own house in order, there you are right, before worrying about someone else's house.

For this country to go to war for the minorities of any country, I am absolutely against it, as I am a World War veteran and I know what war is. I hope that everyone would read your article and feel the same as I do.

With best wishes and good luck to you from

I contact a great many people in Texas and numbers of them think as I do, although they may not trouble to write you.

Some one should set forth the idea that it is worth while to be a plain American and to pull for the United States. Soon it will be difficult to do that if the propagandists have their way. Please carry on. Maybe there are a few Americans left, if we include the Indians.

Evidently, England is setting the stage now to slip the "big britches" on somebody. I wonder who will be next—France or the United States of America?

SIR: I have just finished reading your address, which was reprinted in the New York Journal of this date.

The American people should kneel down and thank their God that they have at least one Senator who is interested in the good of all the American people.

As you have stated, we should put our own house in order; never mind what Germany, Italy, Spain, and Russia are doing.

As I understand it, we are going to be taxed to death to take care of the refugees from Europe, and everyone that gets a job here will put an American out of the job that he is entitled to as an American citizen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long, but I wish to submit some thoughts which, in my opinion, should be considered by this body in the determination we are to make of the pending business. I am always loath not to follow the recommendations of a committee, and particularly of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, a committee composed of men who have given many years' study to their work and who undertake to ascertain the facts before reporting to this body. But, in my opinion, we are now confronted not so much with a theory as with a condition which we must meet.

I cannot bring myself to support a proposal to reduce the relief funds so long as the unemployment problem in this country is as it is today. I am as ready as is any other man to economize, but I shall not be a party to economizing at the expense of human misery.

A few of the figures carried in the hearings before the House committee and before the Senate committee should be and are sufficient, in my opinion, to convince this body of the duty it has to perform. Taking the month of December 1935, we find that at that time 3 years ago there were 2,740,000 citizens upon the W. P. A. rolls. A year later, in 1936, there were 2,192,409. A year later, in December 1937, there were 1,629,271 on the rolls, while in December 1938 there were 3,021,233, to which 91,000 should be added, making a grand total of 3,112,233 citizens of this country who were on the work relief rolls in December 1938.

The pending proposal is to reduce the number in a rather arbitrary manner, without giving any reason, rhyme, or excuse, except that what is stated in the report. The report filed by the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], contains this statement:

The records of previous years show that in the year 1936, between February and July, there was a reduction in the relief rolls of 786,495, and that during the same period in 1937 there was a reduction in the relief rolls of 576,745. In view of the large sum of money being expended in the construction of public works projects, which now aggregate one and one-half billion dollars, the rearmament program in progress, the very definite uprise in business conditions—

I am quoting from the committee which asks the Senate and the Congress to reduce the amount of the relief appropriation to $725,000,000. The report continues:

there is every reason to expect as large, if not a larger, decrease in relief rolls in 1939 as occurred in either 1936 or 1937.

Let us assume that such a decrease might occur. Still, that being true, an appropriation of $725,000,000 would be insufficient even to meet the roll which existed in 1936.

On page 60 of the hearings before the Senate committee will be found a statement as to how the $725,000,000 would be expended, and the number it would provide for on relief. think this table has already been put into the RECORD.

Then let us turn to the House hearings, page 9, and consider the figures as to those on relief in 1936, the year to which the committee asks us to look as a criterion, and the year they cite as the justification for this smaller appropriation. There will be found the figures for the month of January 1936, the only month when the number of men on relief was lower than the number which the committee says might reasonably be expected to be on relief in 1939.

In the month of June 1936 there were on the W. P. A. rolls 2,255,898. The committee says it is thought that the unemployment situation will improve, so that we can look to 1936 by way of comparison. Yet they bring in a bill which, according to their own calculation, in the month of June 1939 will show 1,950,000 men on the rolls, leaving entirely unconsidered nearly 400,000 men, aside from the 750,000 who are now certified and unable to obtain employment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'Mahoney in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. A good deal has been said about the 750,000 men who are already certified but who cannot find work on W. P. A. projects. Of course, that figure does not take into account, probably, a much larger number of men who cannot be certified because, although out of work, and although their families may be as hungry and as destitute as those of the 750,000 referred to, they cannot be certified because it may be that they happen to own a little piece of property somewhere.

Men have come to me in my home town who had a little shack worth $200, and they could not even get on the certified list because they happened to be what are called "property owners."

No one can eat a shack worth $200, and very few such shacks, if sold, would support a family very long. I myself have wondered a good deal whether it is wise and just to discriminate against a man with a family simply because he has in the past tried to be frugal enough to own a little piece of property, which in these times he would have difficulty in selling and which, if he could sell it or if he were required to sell it in order to support his family, would bring very little in the present market.

I wonder if the Senator has any knowledge as to how many such border-line cases there are; cases of men who cannot get on the rolls but who are just as deserving and just as destitute as some of those who can get on because they do not happen to own anything that we call property.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I may say to the distinguished leader of the majority that I have no figures, and I know of no way to obtain even an estimate of the number of men who come within that category; but we all know from our experience in our own States that there are a great many of them. The truth about the matter is that the only indictment against our relief program is that it has neglected the man and woman who have heretofore worked and tried to take care of themselves but who, because of circumstances, now find themselves destitute and the owners of some property which cannot be made liquid, and upon which they cannot live.

Suffering among that class goes on just the same; and yet efforts are made to reduce the amount of the appropriation in the face of this dire necessity and need.

Mr. President, we have heard learned Senators discuss the point that in the spring of the year farming operations will start and that many of those now on the W. P. A. rolls will necessarily go off the rolls. Let me call attention to the fact that in the month of October there were on the W. P. A. rolls in the United States 3,337,470 men and women. The month of October is the month of harvest in every State in the Union. Yet we had that tremendous number on W. P. A. in October. I am speaking as one who at least thinks he knows something of the conditions in the South. Very little relief can be expected in the agricultural South so long as the present farm program continues. In other words, we are going to have the relief program with us just so long as the Government continues to stifle and restrict production and does not pay more attention to the labor question and to the questions of transportation and distribution of products. Our economy of scarcity simply will not work. Until we get our feet on the ground and undertake the solution of the fundamental problems, we might just as well make up our minds that American citizens must be fed, and that the cost must be paid by the American Congress with money taken from the pockets of those who have.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask the Senator from Arkansas if the minimum wage paid by the W. P. A. in what may be called the agricultural South is only $26 a month?

Mr. MILLER. That is correct.

Mr. PEPPER. So if the farm laborer received the minimum W. P. A. wage he would not receive more than $26 a month, which is not quite a dollar a day.

Mr. MILLER. That is true. The people of the South are frugal. The people there can get by if they are given half a chance, and they will get by. But, after all is said and done, some money must be furnished; there has to be employment. I can take Senators into many places in Arkansas where employment does not exist and cannot exist under our present scheme of things, unless the Government furnishes employment; and that condition prevails not only in my State but everywhere.

Senators may talk all they care to about economy. I am just as willing to lop off as many battleships and nonessential things as is any other Senator, but I am not willing to see suffering among our own fellow citizens merely to satisfy someone who may be crying "economy."

On page 42 of the Senate hearings, Colonel Harrington, in testifying, stated:

As I was saying, we do not think that there should be a straight-line reduction in W. P. A. Instead we believe that during the winter months employment should be maintained substantially at the level of 3,000,000, which will be reached in January 1939, and that thereafter, beginning on April 1, a gradual reduction can be made which would bring the number employed on the Works Progress Administration program to an average of 2,700,000 in June, which would mean the employment of approximately 2,650,000 by the end of that month.

In other words, that is the formula for the expenditure of the $875,000,000, with a maximum of employment of 3,000,000 persons, which number is gradually to be reduced by the end of the present fiscal year to 2,700,000. As I have said, a table has been set forth which indicates the figures of employment under the $725,000,000 figure which is now before the Senate. Beginning with 3,000,000 persons employed, the number would be reduced gradually, and decline to 1,930,000 in June.

The committee says that we should look to June 1936. In June 1936 there were about 400,000 more employed than the figure given of those expected to be employed in June of this year. The committee says that conditions will become as good as conditions were in 1936. Even if that be true, every dime of the $875,000,000 will be required.

The average employment for the first 6 months of 1939, under the $875,000,000 figure, will be 2,375,000 persons under the formula announced by Colonel Harrington.

During the last 6 months of 1938 what was the average employment? It was 3,197,909 persons. What are we going to do in the face of that situation? We find quite a difference between 2,375,000 and 3,197,909 persons.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. There have been so many different tables and figures given that I am quite sure all Members of the Senate are somewhat confused. I listened very attentively to Colonel Harrington's testimony, and if I understood him correctly he stated, not once but several times, that if the $875,000,000 shall be appropriated it is not proposed to reduce the rolls of those employed below 2,700,000 as of July 1.

Mr. MILLER. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. How did the Senator get the figure of 2,300,000 as an average between now and then?

Mr. MILLER. I probably was in error at that point. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it—2,375,000, instead of the number mentioned, is the average number that will be employed under the $725,000,000 appropriation instead of the other figure. I thank the Senator sincerely for calling my attention to that. In making my calculations I took the figure $725,000,000 and a total of 19,177,458, the number who will be employed during the 6 months, and dividing by 6 obtained the figures I presented.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with the quotation from the committee's report which the Senator read a moment ago, anticipating a larger private employment due to P. W. A., the rearmament program, recovery, and all that, I should like to point out that, as I stated yesterday in a colloquy with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the proportion of persons taken from the relief employment rolls and absorbed in private employment is 1 to 4. Not all of the 3,000,000 persons who are now on the rolls are suitable for all kinds of private employment, and when construction or other work is in progress men, of course, will still have the right to choose whom they will employ.

The figures show that one out of every five absorbed in private employment is on the relief rolls, so that in order to transfer 200,000 men from the public pay roll to private industry, 800,000 other unemployed persons who are not on the rolls will have to be taken into private employment.

According to the figures submitted by Colonel Harrington, an appropriation of $875,000,000 for the remainder of the present fiscal year will mean the dismissal of 300,000 persons between now and July 1. In order for those 300,000 to be absorbed into private employment it will be necessary for private employment to take on a million and a half persons between now and July 1. Let us take the figure of the committee, $725,000,000, which contemplates a reduction of 1,050,000 persons by July 1, which means from this date the taking off of about 2,000,000 persons from the pay roll of the W. P. A. If the same proportion should apply in the absorption of these persons into private employment, then in order to get those 2,000,000 persons back to work in private employment it would be necessary to take on 8,000,000 persons who are unemployed and are outside of the W. P. A. rolls. So that would contemplate absorption of all the unemployed now existing in this country, which everyone knows is a dream which we should like to realize by the first of July, but which would be utterly impossible. So the 2,000,000 which it will be necessary to strike from the rolls by July 1 cannot hope to be reabsorbed into private employment.

Mr. MILLER. I thank the Senator.

During the last 6 months of 1938, at a time when employment ought to have been at its maximum, as I say, we had an average of 3,197,909 people on the relief rolls. Under the committee's program the maximum employment that can be furnished during the next 6 months is 2,375,000 per month, leaving a difference of 822,909. Who in this body is prepared to say that private employment can absorb 822,909 persons a month during the next 6 months?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Are the Senator's figures taken from the table on page 77 of the House hearings?

Mr. MILLER. I have looked at that table.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was wondering what examination the Senator had made. Yesterday the distinguished junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] had this to say:

In January 1938, only 12 months ago, we thought 1,900,000 was a high figure under the terrible conditions then existing.

However, I find from the House hearings, on page 77, that in January 1939 there were 3,651,000 persons on the rolls. In speaking about figures, I am wondering where the Senator from South Carolina obtained his figures. I wonder if the Senator from Arkansas has studied that matter.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the Senator that I have not, because I have tried to take the record of the testimony and to find some plausible reason or excuse for reducing the appropriation to $725,000,000. I am naturally opposed to spending money. However, when we are faced with the stark necessity which exists in this country today, we must choose whether we are to try to maintain harmony, tranquillity, contentment, and peace within our own borders, or whether we are to engage in other undertakings.

What is being done with the money appropriated for W. P. A.? We are spending huge sums of money. Senators whom I admire, who are my personal friends, protest in the utmost good faith against the expenditure. Let me ask any Senator if he recalls any nation or any government which ever fell because of the expenditure of money for internal improvements. I can think of none. Today the W. P. A. in this country is building 37,031 valuable work projects. thousand one hundred and nine of those projects are highway and street improvements. Five thousand six hundred and seventy of them are necessary public buildings. I ask each Senator to think of his community and his own State and see whether or not there has been a highway built which is not necessary, and which is not serving the people, or a public building which is not serving the people.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. A large proportion of those public buildings, I should say probably 90 percent, are schoolhouses for the education of the children of the country.

Mr. MILLER. I think that is correct. I should say 90 percent of them are schoolhouses.

Mr. BARKLEY. I may be wrong about the percentage. However, a large proportion, more than a majority of them, are schoolhouses.

Mr. MILLER. That is true.

Twenty-one hundred and eighty-four parks and other recreational facilities have been built or are now being built. Thirteen hundred and thirty-two conservation projects, such as flood control and other projects, have been built or are in the course of construction. Those are projects for which the Government must spend money. They are being built by men on relief.

Three hundred and twenty-seven airports are being built. There are 9,192 so-called white-collar, education, recreation, and clerical projects, and 3,735 sewing projects.

When we are tempted to shed crocodile tears about the expenditure of money, we should consider the projects for which it is being spent. I wonder how many Senators ever went to a sewing project and saw the widows and wives of disabled men, men unable to work, earning a living on such a project. If the project is taken away the families will be destitute, and they will have to be provided for in some way. There is nothing else left to do. There is more real work being done in the sewing projects of this country than in any other single class of projects of which I know.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator subscribe to the view, which is entertained by some, that W. P. A. workers are a rather unworthy class of our citizenship?

Mr. MILLER. No; I do not. I think some men on the W. P. A. rolls are undertaking to make a career out of it; and I think such men ought to be dealt with in no uncertain manner. There is a provision in the joint resolution, which I hope will be rigidly enforced, providing for an investigation and so-called purging of the rolls. No doubt there are men in the Senator's State, and in my own State, my own county, and perhaps even in my own city, who have no business being on the rolls. But what is the use of punishing nine deserving men merely because one is receiving something which does not belong to him, when we are responsible for all of them?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. In 1936 the W. P. A. made a very close and intensive study of the rolls by investigating the affairs of the individual clients. Less than 5 percent of those on the entire roll were found to be disqualified, either by reason of property or for some other reason. If the present roll is investigated in that manner it will cost $3,000,000, because when the examination was made in 1936 it cost an average of $1 per case. If the investigation is made by means of questionnaires sent to the relief clients to be filled out, it will cost $750,000.

Mr. MILLER. If any Senator or any man connected with the Government can point out any better way in which we can meet the unemployment problem than that which we are following, he will have a disciple and follower in me. We hear much said about the expenditure involved and about the cost of this enterprise. We have some records as to the cost of administration. During the fiscal years 1936, 1937, 1938, and the first 5 months of the fiscal year 1939 the figures show that the W. P. A. expended \$5,647,861,857, and the administrative expense was 4 percent. In some States it was much lower. In Arkansas the administrative expense is  $3\frac{1}{2}$  percent. In other words, of every dollar expended, at least 96 percent goes to the purpose for which we intend it to go.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I have often wondered why we attach so much significance to the administrative expense in connection with the W. P. A. In my own experience-and I assume it is the experience of most Members of the Senate-I have encountered many men who were accustomed to doing clerical work, or some form of administrative work, and who have been absolutely unable to obtain work anywhere, although they were capable, trained men. Every Senator has had that type of human being brought to his attention, and has been solicited to aid them in obtaining work. Because they are given a spot in the W. P. A. to do administrative work, I see no reason, in that sort of a situation, to challenge the fact that a portion of this money—the Senator indicates that it is about 4 percent of the total cost-is expended for administrative purposes. I do not see anything in that situation to challenge our attention as a dangerous thing, because if these men are unable to find work elsewhere they also are entitled to consideration at our hands. Obviously, some one must handle the administrative work. We would not turn that work over to unfit and inept people. Personally, I see nothing wrong in retaining the best minds and the most skilled men we can obtain to handle this very vital and important work.

The Senator has adverted to the fact that we have built schoolhouses and airports. Mr. President, those things are socially useful and socially necessary additions to the great economic plant which we call the United States of America. They are things of worth-while value. They are permanent and valuable additions to our plant. Our plant deteriorates year by year, and I doubt if we can find it in our hearts to say that a schoolhouse is not a valuable contribution to society. While we are spending this money for relief, I think we are doing something worth while to make this a better country for every one. So it is not money thrown away. It is money spent for additions which are very valuable to us and to our children.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not wish the inference to be drawn from these statements that the committee has in any way challenged the administrative expense or the benefits which have been conferred by construction. Everything that the Senator from Washington has said in reference to the benefits conferred, and everything that has been said by the Senator from Arkansas, has the full support of the committee. I have stood on the floor of the Senate advocating and managing every one of the recent relief bills, pointing out those very things; and it seems to me it is necessary to make it clear that there is no warrant in the arguments which have been made for the inference which might be drawn from the suggestions and statements which Senators have made, because no attack has been made on this floor on the efficiency or the economy of the program so far as the type of work and the benefits conferred are concerned.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I desire to absolve the able Senator from Colorado and his associates on the committee of any responsibility for any such charge. I think all of us realize very keenly the difficult position the Senator from Colorado is in. He is a very able Senator; he has done a fine piece of work for his committee, and he has a most disagreeable job on his hands.

I would not leave any inference that he is in anywise culpable or has done anything wrong. He has done his duty as a member of the committee. Certainly no Member of this body can complain of his activity on the floor, because that is his duty. I should not want anyone to think the Senator from Colorado had leveled a lance at a decent purposeful human being. I know he recognizes my own attitude toward his work, for I have repeatedly said on this floor that no blame attaches to the Senator from Colorado for handling a bill on the floor.

This much may be said, it seems to me, about the overhead expense, that it has been the target of criticism in the newspapers; it has been utilized by critics of the relief program as something that is reprehensible. That is why I mentioned it on the floor, not because the committee has said anything about it, for the committee, so far as I recall, has not adverted to it in a critical way. The Senator from Colorado is right; it has never been the subject of criticism at the hands of members of the committee.

Mr. ADAMS. During previous sessions the Appropriations Committee has been responsible for putting a 5-percent limitation on administrative expenses, and the Works Progress Administration has kept well within that limit. Their expenses have been less than 4 percent.

Mr. BONE. The Senator is absolutely correct. I refer to it only because it has been the subject of criticism, and I think that the criticism coming from outside quarters is not just. I was only impelled to refer to it because the able Senator from Arkansas made mention of it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, what I said with reference to administrative expenses of the W. P. A. was certainly not said as a criticism of any Senator on this floor, nor as a criticism of the committee. I think the committee has done a splendid job, and that the W. P. A. has done a splendid piece of work in the administration of the law. I know a good job has been done in Arkansas. I referred to the question of administrative expense, however, to dispel the idea which seems to prevail all over the Nation. There are many chamber of commerce speeches being made every day in which the speakers attack the relief program and talk about overhead expenses. Such speeches are not made in the Senate; no one here or elsewhere in a responsible position makes such charges, but we hear them; we have heard them on the stump; we have heard them in campaigns; we have heard them almost everywhere, and we are going to continue to hear them. Now and then some newspaper takes it upon itself to enlighten the people without giving the actual facts as to the cost of administration. I quite agree with the Senator from Washington that we have a class of men who need to be furnished employment, and if they are competent to work for the W. P. A. let them do so.

Something was said a few days ago in the Senate about the contribution of local interests to W. P. A. projects. Let me call the attention of the Senate to page 26 of the House hearings. Cumulative up to November 30, 1938, the contributions made by local interests averaged over those years 16 percent.

That was the percentage of expense contributed by the various States. Not all the States made the same contribution. Some of the so-called richer States made smaller contributions than were made by the poorer States. For instance, my State of Arkansas made a contribution of 17.4 percent to all W. P. A. projects. Other States contributed much less, while some others contributed more. I merely mention that fact to establish the point that in W. P. A. relief the various communities themselves are interested.

I do not know what the experience of others has been but my experience with W. P. A. in Arkansas has demonstrated to me that it is doing today a splendid work; much good is being accomplished. To be perfectly frank, I do not know what we in Arkansas would do without it. If someone will just tell me what we would do without it he would render me a distinct service. Certainly I do not know. I do not know how we could continue to build roads and houses and other structures without the assistance of the W. P. A. So I do not think the Congress should quibble over $150,-000,000, when in less than 2 months from now we will be called upon to appropriate a half billion dollars for other purposes that are not so material to the welfare of this country as are expenditures made by the W. P. A.

Some people are naturally opposed to relief; some are opposing the larger appropriation which is proposed because they are opposed to relief. I may say that none of us like to have to be called upon to provide relief, but, as I said in the beginning, we are facing a condition and not a theory, and so far, Mr. President, no one has pointed out a better remedy than that which has been adopted. Taking the figures for the last 6 months of 1938—and I know of no way of judging the future except by the past—of the number on the relief rolls, I know that necessarily there will be the same number, or approximately the same number, on the rolls during the first 6 months of 1939. So, until someone can show me that the larger appropriation is not needed, I am going to support it and support the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, not being a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have listened very attentively to the discussion on the floor during the past 2 days. I desire to express my approval of everything that has been said by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Miller] with reference to the record of W. P. A. I know that what he has said today with reference to his own State applies with equal force to my State of Montana. I know Montana would have suffered very severely had it not been for the operations of W. P. A. The work that it has accomplished in my State has been of tremendous value, and when the country once more gets upon an even keel what has been done by W. P. A. is going to show its effect. Small dams, reservoirs, schools, and various other projects have been completed, which in the years to come will be of tremendous and lasting value to the people of my State.

Fortunately, we have not had any difficulty in the State of Montana with reference to politics in connection with W. P. A. In that State the W. P. A. has been entirely free from politics. The first administrator appointed in the State of Montana was a Republican. Under him various zone directors were appointed, and after the original administrator left his office those original appointees were retained in office during the entire administration of W. P. A. in Montana, except in instances where they retired of their own volition.

As I have said, not being a member of the committee, it is not possible for me to go into the fine details of the statistics that were brought before the committee. I am convinced, however, that, if the action of the Senate Appropriations Committee is sustained and the deficiency appropriation for the Works Progress Administration is held to $725,000,000, approximately 2,000,000 W. P. A. workers will be dismissed from the rolls by June 30 next. This result is established by the statistics which have been presented during the discussion and at the hearings before the committee. I think no greater mistake could be made by the Senate than to fail to grant an appropriation sufficient to continue the relief program now being carried out by the administration.

In considering this question we must not overlook the fact that we are not merely financing an agency for the relief of millions of the destitute and hungry unemployed workers in this country, but we are, at the same time, financing an agency that constitutes the only means which has been discovered to prevent bankruptcy and ruin from overtaking thousands of business and professional men in every section of the Nation. I know that in the city of Butte, where I live, there would not be a merchant in business today if it had not been for the operations of the W. P. A. during the past several years.

The policy of Federal relief which we have been following has been sanctioned by all the outstanding industrial and business leaders of the country. It is supported by the expert advice of leading economists who have studied the failure of our economic system to overcome this difficult problem of unemployment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. MURRAY. Not at all.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator a moment ago stated that if the $725,000,000 provision contained in the joint resolution as it came from the House were adopted, it would mean leaving off the rolls 2,000,000 persons. At page 60 of the Senate committee hearings Colonel Harrington gives a tabulation which does not conform to that statement. Colonel Harrington makes the lowest number a reduction from 3,000,000 in January to 1,930,000. That is 1,070,000 as the maximum reduction rather than 2,000,000. I assume that the Senator would accept the figures at least of Colonel Harrington.

Mr. MURRAY. I should be compelled to accept the figures of Colonel Harrington. I was relying upon what I heard on the floor of the Senate during the past day or two.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think every person who has listened to this debate has been greatly confused by the conflicting estimates. After considerable inquiry the other day, one of the distinguished Members of the Senate said that all he could get out of the debate was that he could understand that $875,000,000 was a larger amount than that recommended by the committee. I wish some simple statement could be made of the situation, so that Senators who have to vote on the question would not be confronted by these confusing estimates and statistics.

For instance, we not only have the table which the Senator from Colorado says appears on page 60 of the Senate committee hearings, but we have a table which I understood was prepared by the administrative officials and experts of the W. P. A., which appears in the views of the minority, which does not correspond with the table that appears on page 60; and, if my recollection of the estimates made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] is correct, his setimates do not agree with either one of the other two I have mentioned. So before we have to vote on this question I wish someone could present a statement of what the alternatives here really are.

Mr. ADAMS. With the permission of the Senator from Montana, I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that a number of us have been confronted with that difficulty. I shall be glad if I can be of any help in accumulating and gathering together the different estimates. So far as the minority views are concerned, the Senator from Tennessee IMr. McKellarl, who prepared them, said he knew nothing about percentages; and I think that led to some of the figures—I do not say erroneous figures, but unusual figures—which do not correspond with the statements which were given to us by Colonel Harrington. That is, the difference we have here really is the difference between the figures of the request which came from the Works Progress Administration and the other set of figures which the majority of the Appropriations Committee think are more appropriate.

I knew the Senator from Montana did not want to make an unqualified statement which did not conform to Colonel Harrington's own figures.

Mr. MURRAY. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to say that I have the utmost confidence in the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], and I am always perfectly willing to follow anything he says in connection with this matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that is very kind of the Senator from Montana, but I desire to say that the figures I submitted were not my figures at all. They were the figures of Colonel Harrington, who is the Administrator of this activity. I am still banking 100 percent on Colonel Harrington's figures; and before this debate is over it will be perfectly clear that they are correct, and that no such mistake of $56,000,000 has been made by Colonel Harrington.

Mr. ADAMS. It might be well to get all of Colonel Harring-ton's tabulations together and compare them.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Colorado will have to find not only all of Colonel Harrington's tabulations but a great many others to sustain the figures the Senator has given to the Senate.

Mr. MURRAY. I will say to the Senators that I was following the statement contained in the minority views signed by the Senator from Tennessee, in which appears the following language:

The Senate majority disagrees with the House in its reduction for February and March and requires substantially the same amount to be spent in February and March as was expended in January. So far so good. But when it comes to April, May, and June, there is only $363,000,000 left for those 3 months as against $362,000,000 for February and March. This amounts to a cut from about 3,000,000 persons to 1,050,000 in 5 months. In other words, for those now obtaining relief, there is a cut of two-thirds in 5 months.

The opposition to this policy of W. P. A. Government spending certainly does not stand on firm ground. The desire for rapid curtailment of Federal spending is exactly what caused the recent recession, from which we are only now emerging with a fair measure of success. We are by no means in such a happy and prosperous condition that we can feel certain industry will now be able to take up the slack which will result from throwing millions off the relief rolls during the coming months.

What is there in the situation of business and industry that will give us the assurance that we shall not again meet with the same debacle that came on the country in 1938? Already we find some of our important national industries fluttering and floundering on the verge of another serious curtailment, and perhaps a tailspin such as overtook the automobile and other industries in 1937 and 1938.

The last issue of Barron's Weekly calls attention to the serious reduction in copper production, and points out that there is no evidence of any pick-up in that industry in the near future. I have just received telegrams from the State of Montana announcing the closing of the Leonard mine at Butte, and the laying off of 970 miners, who will be dependent upon W. P. A. for their existence. It is expected that this closing will be followed by similar closings of mining properties and a curtailment of operations in the smelters. Already I have been notified that the zinc plant connected with the Washoe smelter at Anaconda, Mont., has been closed. Prior to the closing of the Leonard mine, there were 312 miners of Butte certified for jobs on W. P. A., in addition to hundreds of other workers whom W. P. A. had no power to employ. It was, in fact, laying off some of the workers already on the rolls. At the present time in the mining industry alone at Butte there is a total of 1,562 miners who will be dependent upon local help for their very existence if W. P. A. is unable to employ them. There is no local help in sight for them. This curtailment in the mines affects the entire State. I also have information that the railroads have laid off some employees.

Barron's Weekly, the financial journal of Wall Street, also calls attention to the fact that the Kennecott Copper Co. has already made a 10-percent reduction in operations in Utah, and it is rumored that the International Copper Cartel will call for further reductions in the production of copper in the near future.

The New York Times, which I have before me, in its financial section of January 24, calls attention to the severe reactions taking place in the security markets. I quote from that issue of the Times:

It is to be noted that the stock market has lacked rallying power of any consequence in recent weeks.

The article further says:

The business news thus far this year has not been helpful on the side of the advance in the stock market, and there was additional disappointment yesterday when the American Iron and Steel Institute estimated a decline in the week's steel output.

* * The New York Times' index of 50 stocks fell 4.04 points on the day to 99.14, the lowest closing level since September 30, 1938. * * * The industrial average dropped 6.56 points to 176.18, and the rail average 1.51 points to 22.11.

Where, then, is there any justification for a drastic reduction in the W. P. A. relief rolls which will undoubtedly have a serious psychological effect on the whole country, upon the theory that business is going to take up the slack?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to intrude in the midst of the Senator's remarks; but I have on my desk a clipping from the New York Times of this morning which I should like to have included in the Record at the end of the Senator's remarks, if I may.

Mr. MURRAY. That is a special article. I am reading from the financial section, which gives the accurate statement. Special articles written by reporters sometimes do not do so.

Mr. ADAMS. This is a report of the Bureau of Labor statistics, from the Secretary of Labor, Miss Perkins. That is the source of this article, which I shall ask permission to insert in the RECORD at the conclusion of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. MURRAY. Whence, then, is this demand for the slashing of W. P. A.? Certainly it is not coming from intelligent business and industrial interests. No request, or even suggestion, has come from the management or leadership of business or industry for this wholesale dismissal of workers from the relief rolls. All over the country it will have a serious effect upon the small business and professional men, who are barely able to get along as it is. I think all this hnu and cry we hear for the slashing of W. P. A. is political in origin. It is designed to cripple the administration in its efforts to carry the country through this period of economic distress and confusion with which we have been struggling. If another setback comes these critics will undertake to point to the failure of the administration.

I challenge anyone to name an outstanding leader of business, finance, or industry who will approve of this move to throw thousands of workers off the W. P. A. rolls in every section of the country. No outstanding businessman can be found who would justify such a mistaken policy. On the contrary, scores of able industrial leaders and economists repudiate such a move. I have here a statement made by 69 economists who have joined in an appeal to the administration to halt this dangerous slash in relief. These economists point out that the Government spending program was the only weapon that could be used in fighting the recession and stimulating recovery. They contend that the W. P. A. program should continue to perform this function until private industry clearly demonstrates its capacity to absorb all those released from relief rolls.

I quote from their report further:

The curtailment of W. P. A. at the present time would be particularly ill-timed from an economic as well as from a humanitarian viewpoint, and we strongly urge that the contemplated policy of curtailment be abandoned.

This article is published in the Boston Daily Globe of December 26 last. The statement contains this further language:

Contemplated reductions of the W. P. A. would "involve a reduction of more than $50,000,000 per month in direct wage payments in addition to some $30,000,000 in related expenditures." Such a cut in purchasing power would "constitute a severe threat to the continuance of the present economic recovery, and might even cause a serious set-back in business."

This statement is signed by 69 of the leading economists of the country, including 13 from Harvard University and 7 each from Yale and Columbia, besides leading economists from various other nationally known universities and colleges. Among these economists is Paul H. Douglas, of the University of Chicago, who appeared before our unemployment and relief committee last year and made an impressive analysis of the causes of the recession, proving conclusively that the cessation of spending at that time was a serious mistake and precipitated the recession.

I think anyone who gives consideration to the events which occurred in the country in 1937 and 1938 must realize that what we do here today is going to have serious consequences in the immediate future. Statistics of the W. P. A. have shown us that the funds appropriated last year were wholly insufficient to take care of the Nation's relief load; 750,000 persons properly certified to the rolls were never able to get jobs. If a more adequate appropriation had been made last year, we would be further on toward complete recovery today. We are, of course, now facing a gradual improvement in business and industrial conditions. Employment has increased and production has advanced steadily and substantially.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lucas in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. In connection with what the Senator said a moment ago, perhaps he will give me the privilege of reading a telegram from another association of businessmen from the small-business men in New York City. They send me the following telegram:

Following businessmen's associations and department-store owners, totaling 10,000 members, have agreed to support the United Labor and Citizens' Committee for Jobs and Recovery in efforts to restore the cut of the President's W. P. A. budget by participating in a store closing for 15 minutes Wednesday night, 6 p. m., and endorsing the Saturday January 28 parade in support of the President.

That is signed by a large number of different organizations in New York City. So they are alive to the danger of this decrease in the appropriations.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New York for his contribution. I have letters from businessmen in my own State along the same line.

The country is really beginning to show signs of confidence in the future. We should, therefore, do nothing at this moment that would retard these improving conditions.

We should take warning from what happened in 1937 and 1938. In 1937 the country had been making rapid progress toward recovery, but the administration then started on a movement to drastically cut W. P. A. rolls. Before the slash began recovery had reached a very satisfactory point. The upturn was well under way, and workers were finding jobs in private industry in constantly increasing numbers. But the urge to cut expenses and balance the Budget took hold of the administration and the drastic cut began. Thousands were thrown out of their jobs before they were able to secure employment in private industry. At the hearings conducted by the Special Senate Committee on Unemployment and Relief last year it was conceded by representatives of business and industry, as well as the Nation's leading economists, that the recession which came on us in the early part of 1938 was directly due to this rapid curtailment in the administration's spending program.

We are going through exactly the same situation again today. Statistics that have been furnished to the Committee on Appropriations prove that private employment today is at a new high point for the past 2 years, but it is by no means all that could be desired. The prospects for further improvement, however, are favorable.

If we want to maintain these conditions and prevent another slump, it is the duty of Congress to make this appropriation sufficient to prevent men from again being thrown off of W. P. A. jobs and creating another psychological condition, ending possibly in another downward spiral of depression. There are at present approximately 11,000,000 unemployed in the country. This constitutes a dangerous, depressing effect upon business and industry. If the curtailment in W. P. A. is permitted to occur as a result of our failure to grant an appropriation sufficient to continue the upward movement of industrial progress, we will have our 1938 experience all over again. As pointed out by the able and distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], the $725,000,000 appropriation would mean the rapid removal from employment of hundreds of thousands of men. This would obviously have exactly the same effect in 1939 as it had in 1937.

The W. P. A. program has never been completely adequate to fulfill the purposes for which it was created. There are at present, as I have said, about 750,000 persons who are certified and in need of work but who cannot be assigned because of arbitrary administrative quotas. If we are to continue the present rapidly improving conditions in industry so as to enable it to gradually absorb the unemployed of the Nation, we must necessarily appropriate funds in an amount that will mean a continuation of the program of work relief.

Instead of cutting the present program Congress should appropriate at least $915,000,000, as indicated by the Conference of Mayors, who have furnished the committee with statistics conclusively establishing that any lesser appropriation means the discharge of thousands of W. P. A. workers during the coming months. These figures cannot be challenged. It is simply a matter of mathematics. Thus, in order to keep within the $725,000,000 proposed, it is necessary to get down to a national W. P. A. quota by the end of June of 1,050,000 workers. With present rolls at about 3,000,000 workers, this means that nearly 2,000,000 workers must be discharged.

I propose that the appropriation should be raised to $915,-000,000, which will merely carry out an adequate program and prevent the discharge of willing and anxious workers at this period. It will mean the continuation of the rapid improvement in business and industry which has been going on all over the Nation. Now is not the time to gamble on recovery. The danger is that even a slight recession, once started, will have cumulative effects. Men thrown out of work buy less, and hence cause trade and industry to produce and sell still less; this, in turn, throws more men out of work in industry, and so on until we find ourselves in the midst of another dangerous industrial slump.

The position of those who are advocating W. P. A. cuts at this time does not represent the real interest and welfare of American industry. I am sure that if the intelligent leaders of industry were consulted they would repudiate this false policy of seeking to achieve recovery by taking it out of the hides of helpless human beings—men, women, and children caught in this debacle of our economic system.

There is no sign on the business horizon to indicate that either recovery or reemployment has gone far enough to justify the reductions on W. P. A. at this time. We are just slowly recovering from the effects of the 1937 cut, which, as I have pointed out, brought on us the recession of 1937 and 1938. The extent of the rise in private investment does not justify any reduction in W. P. A. expenditures. Reemployment to date has not absorbed enough workers to justify a reduction in W. P. A. rolls, whether on humane or economic grounds.

Critics of these relief appropriations love to dwell upon the unbearable and crushing burden of the public debt. These critics are quite willing to incur a much larger public-debt burden for purposes which they may approve. They weep, however, when the Government spending is directed to the general welfare of the people as a whole. Congress did not hesitate to authorize the Government to borrow billions of dollars to protect this country against a foreign enemy during the World War. In 1 year alone we created a deficit of $13,000,000,000, which was equal to the entire cash deficit of the present administration during the past 5 years. Congress is again proposing to spend billions for preparedness; yet, at the same time, we are quibbling about $150,000,000 necessary to help protect our human resources.

Mr. President, I submit that every known consideration indicates the necessity for an appropriation of $915,000,000 to carry on the W. P. A. program for the next 5 months.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator made one comment which I cannot permit to pass without observation. It was stated by the Senator from Montana that we who were favoring the lesser of these two sums were actuated by political motives.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. If he will read my statement, he will find that I did not say anything of the kind. I said that the hue and cry in the country was actuated by political motives.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope I am in error. If I am correct, I trust the Senator will correct his remarks.

Mr. MURRAY. If I made any such statement as that, I withdraw it immediately; but I did not. I will show the Senator the statement.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator incorporated in his remarks quotations from the New York Times. I referred to an article appearing in this morning's New York Times, headed "Industries Hired 200,000 Last Month." now read a portion of the article published in the New York Times:

Private industry in the nonagricultural field absorbed 200,000 more workers in December, Secretary Perkins of the United States Department of Labor announced today. She remarks that the most significant features of the month's gain were the continued increase in factory employment, normally declining at this season, and an unusually large expansion in retail-trade personnel.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics index of factory employment, now 91.1 percent of the 1923–25 average, the Secretary said, is above that for any month during 1938.

I quote further from the article:

Since July, according to Miss Perkins, almost 1,200,000 workers

Since July, according to Miss Perkins, almost 1,200,000 workers have been reemployed in nonagricultural occupations.

"These figures," she commented, "do not include employees on projects of the Works Progress Administration and other Federal emergency agencies or certain temporary workers who are hired only during peaks of activity in some industries."

The article incorporates the index of manufacturing employment. It shows that employment stood at the peak of 91.1 in December 1938. It incorporates the index of pay rolls for 1938 and shows that for the month of December the index stands at 86.6, which is the peak of the pay-roll index for 1938.

I ask that the article to which I have just referred, appearing in the New York Times of January 25, be incorporated at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the New York Times, January 25, 1939]

INDUSTRIES HIRED 200,000 LAST MONTH—FEDERAL INDEX, AT 91.1
PERCENT OF 1923-25 AVERAGE, WAS BEST FOR ANY PERIOD IN 1938—
FACTORIES, STORES LEAD—SINCE JULY, OUTSIDE OF FARMING, 1,200,000 GOT JOBS, SECRETARY PERKINS SAYS

Washington, January 24.—Private industry in the nonagricultural field absorbed 200,000 more workers in December, Secretary Perkins, of the United States Department of Labor, announced today. She remarked that the most significant features of the month's gain were the continued increase in factory employment, normally declining at this season, and an unusually large expansion in retail-trade personnel.

normally declining at this season, and an unusually large expansion in retail-trade personnel.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics index of factory employment, now 91.1 percent of the 1923–25 average, the Secretary said, is above that for any month during 1938. It showed a reduction of 3.4 percentage points from December 1937.

In December there was a gain of 3 percent in factory pay rolls. The Bureau's index of factory pay rolls for December, 86.6 percent of the 1923–25 average, was the highest level since November 1937 and was 2.9 percent above the December 1937 level.

GAIN GREATER THAN SEASONAL

"This," the Secretary commented, "was much more pronounced than the usual seasonal increase of 0.4 percent and represented an than the usual seasonal increase of 0.4 percent and represented an additional $4,800,000 in weekly disbursements to factory wage earners. The Bureau's index of factory pay rolls for December 1938 was at its highest level since November 1937 and was 2.9 percent above the record of the previous December."

Since July, according to Miss Perkins, almost 1,200,000 workers have been reemployed in nonagricultural occupations.
"These figures." she commented, "do not include employees on projects of the Works Progress Administration and other Federal emergency agencies or certain temporary workers who are hired only during peaks of activity in some industries.

only during peaks of activity in some industries.

"In addition to the gain of approximately 50,000 workers in manufacturing industries, about 44,000 additional persons were employed in stores between mid-November and mid-December to handle the holiday trade. Increases in employment, in a lesser degree, were reported in metal and bituminous-coal mining, wholesale trade, brokerage, and insurance. In quarries, dyeing and cleaning works, and private building construction there were substantial seasonal recessions. The building industry decline was much less pronounced than is usual in December.

CHIEF RAILROADS DROP 18,000

"Class 1 railroads laid off almost 18,000 workers. Seasonal reductions in employment in crude-petroleum producing, utilities, hotels, tions in employment in crude-petroleum producing, utilities, hotels, and laundries were not large.

"The small decline in anthracite mining was contraseasonal."

Forty-nine of the manufacturing industries reported employment gains and 63 increased their pay rolls. The employment gain of 13 percent in retail trade between mid-November and mid-December reflected the expansion necessary to handle holiday volume and was the "most pronounced employment increase in this month" for the last 10 years.

Wholesale trade reflected a contraseasonal employment gain of 0.5 percent, which added 6.400 employees to pay rolls, and the figures represented the largest number employed at any time since February 1933. Private building construction again reported a "smaller-than-seasonal" decline of 6.1 percent in employment, the smallest curtailment reported between November and December in the last 7 years. in the last 7 years.

Supragrant and the office of the

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to say, because I desire to encourage the Senator from Montana and to concur with his view, that we are moving forward and moving upward industrially and economically. That brings me to the conclusion that we need not anticipate as heavy a load on our relief rolls as in a declining market.

The Senator reached one conclusion which disturbed me greatly. He said that the decline of 1937, which occurred in the latter part of the year, was due to the withdrawal of Government expenditures. I shall be very apprehensive if it becomes apparent that we can never continue a program of economic advance unless we also continue the program of Government expenditures. Personally, I believe that in this, the richest land on the globe, we can advance, can progress, on our own resources and our own manpower, and that this great country will progress, once properly organized and economically operated, and will not be dependent upon stimulation resulting from great governmental expenditures.

I give one figure in addition. We are today spending for relief purposes more than one-half of the total income of our Government. If while doing that we are in danger of a decline, we are, indeed, in a hopeless situation.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I do not think anyone in this body has listened more attentively or more earnestly to the debate and discussion that has taken place in connection with this very important matter than have I. I am frank to say that as an individual Senator I find it very difficult, in fact, impossible, to determine just what amount this appropriation really should be. Obviously, there is great difference of opinion concerning this matter of the amount. Just what amount is too much, what too little, and what amount just right I am very frank to say I have not been able to learn either from the debate or the study of the report. Be that all as it may, what I want to say now—and this is the reason for my being on my feet—is that my whole interest in this particular connection is much more humanitarian than it is for economy alone. In other words, I know that economies are necessary, but in my own mind the fields of relief and, at this particular time, national defense, are not the most appropriate or justifiable fields for economy for economy's sake alone. In other words, if I vote, as I expect to, for the committee proposal, it will be because as I understand it, Mr. President, that proposal actually gives more protection to the men and women now on the relief rolls than does the other proposal. And that is my chief interest and responsibility.

I should like to ask either the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] or the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], who have studied this matter so closely, if it is not a fact that the retention of the people on the relief rolls is left to the discretion of one man individually in the committee proposal? The director can, if he likes, reduce the rolls in the wintertime by 5 percent, but not more than that percentage, and he does not have to reduce the rolls during the winter months by a single person, regardless of how much of the appropriation he has to spend in that period?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Which does the Senator think would give more jobs, the small appropriation or the larger appropriation?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I rather expected that question, and I rather expected it from the Senator from Florida. My own conviction is that it is more likely that under the proposal of the committee there will be more money expended, more people kept on the rolls, certainly, if there is need for it, in the winter months than by the other proposal which has no safeguard in this respect. By the same token, at any time, 30 days, 60 days, or 90 days thereafter, there will not be anything to prevent those administering relief from coming in just as they have come in this time, and asking for another deficiency appropriation. And I will vote for it. So I ask the Senator from Colorado if what I say is not a statement of fact, in both these respects.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is entirely correct. I think the attitude of the majority of the Committee on Appropriations is more in line and more in harmony with the humanitarian motives of this administration and with the heart of the people than is the minority report, because we positively protect each person on relief during the winter months by a statutory limitation, and do not close the door to a further appropriation thereafter.

If the balance of the fund is not adequate to provide proper relief, we specifically invite the President of the United States to ask for additional money to provide it. We have 2 months of maximum employment under the W. P. A. in which to study the problem, to watch the course of economic movement, and then to do whatever may be necessary, be it great or small.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair. Mr. BARBOUR. I yield to the Senator from South Caro-

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from New Jersey has correctly stated the effect of the language of the amendment which is now pending before the Senate, because the amendment specifically prohibits a reduction of more than 5 percent by any administrative action. It does not say that there must be a reduction of 5 percent, 4 percent, or 1 percent; but it says that if the Administrator does undertake a reduction, the reduction may not be more than 5 percent, in the language of the amendment, during these 2 months. After that, in the warmer months, the Administrator is authorized to apportion the balance of the money over the remainder of the present fiscal year. Then specific reference is made to what the Senator from Colorado has called an invitation. As a matter of fact it is the same thought, expressed in different language, that is expressed in the existing law; namely, that if the President finds that the situation demands more money, he shall submit to the Congress an estimate for the amount of money he deems necessary, and that such estimate shall be accompanied by the reasons for its submission. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is true that the 5 percent will apply to the $725,000,000, if appropriated. It will apply in like manner to the larger appropriation, because no fight has been made on that particular provision.

Mr. ADAMS. There have been some indications that some persons did not approve it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator must not jump at conclusions from indications. The 5-percent provision would apply to the $875,000,000 just exactly as it would apply to the $725,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. May I say that we are very glad to find the Senator a convert to that view today.

Mr. McKELLAR. I voted for it in the committee. I do not think it amounts to much, but I voted for it just the same.

That statement cannot explain the matter about which the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pepper] asked. He wanted to know how the money was to be spent so as to make $725,000,000 more effective for relief than $875,000,000. The particular proviso referred to applies only to February and March. After that time the organization is permitted to use the money as it sees fit. The Administration has said how it would use the money if $725,000,000 were appropriated. It has said how it would use it if $875,000,000 were appropriated.

Let me state what the facts will be so far as New Jersey is concerned. The W. P. A. has given the figures, and the Senator will find them on page 8 of the minority report. In New Jersey there are now 103,000 persons on relief. If $725,000,000 is appropriated, on July 1 there will be 35,100 persons on the rolls and 67,900 will have been taken off the rolls in New Jersey. If the Senator wants to deprive 67,900 people in New Jersey of relief in 5 months, he can vote for the $725,000,000. That is what will happen.

Mr. BARBOUR. The Senator, of course, cannot put me in that position, because he knows that is not what I want.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think it is.

Mr. BARBOUR. I want just the reverse of that; and the proposal of the committee will do it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me say to the Senator from New Jersey that if 103,000 persons are on relief in New Jersey, and a reduction of 17 percent is made in the amount, if the Administrator then deliberately should take 68,000 out of 103,000 persons, or 66 percent, off the rolls because of a reduction of 17 percent, something ought to be done to the Administrator.

Mr. BARBOUR. And I should like to be the one to do it.
Mr. McKELLAR. The Administrator has given the facts.
They are in the evidence. There is nothing to the contrary in the evidence. What I have stated is just exactly what will happen in the Senator's State. Two-thirds of the persons will go off relief.

Mr. BARBOUR. I cannot agree with the Senator.

Mr. ADAMS. Does not the Senator think that the Administrator is also a little short on matters of percentage?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know about that. I do not think he is.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield gladly to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is quite a difference between calculating a reduction of 17 percent at the beginning of the period, to cover the whole period, and calculating a smaller reduction for the first 2 or 3 months of the period, but a much larger reduction during the latter months of the period.

That is exactly what the Administrator has worked out. Seventeen percent taken from the rolls for the first 5 months would make it necessary to take them all off at once, and saw off the butt end of the log at the start. However, by spreading it out over the period there would be a smaller percentage of reduction for the first part of the period, but a larger one during the latter part of the period.

That is not the matter about which I wanted to interrupt the Senator. It was the same thought that the Senator from Tennessee had.

The Senator from Colorado, the Senator from South Carolina, and the whole committee, I suppose, contend that regardless of the amount of the appropriation, the 5-percent limitation for the first 2 months ought to apply. If we may assume that it will apply regardless of the amount, the Senator from New Jersey will recognize, of course, that there would be less necessity even to discharge the 5 percent during February and March under an appropriation of $875,000,000 than there would be under an appropriation of $725,000,000.

Mr. BARBOUR. I will tell the Senator that so far as I am concerned I do not want any one at all put off the rolls in this winter. Moreover, I want no doors closed to any appropriation later on if further expenditures for relief are necessary.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am satisfied that the Senator feels that way about the matter, and we all feel that way about it. Of course, with either of these amounts some persons must be discharged from the rolls. With the larger amount there would be less likelihood of anybody being discharged during February or March, or during the winter than with the smaller amount. Even with the 5-percent limitation during February and March, there is no necessity for the Administrator to discharge anybody during February and March.

He can keep them all on the roll. However, if he does, when the 1st of April comes he must make such a precipitate reduction, in order that the $725,000,000 may last until July 1, that it would be like riding in an airplane and striking an air pocket, and suddenly descending four or five hundred feet. So I do not see how anybody can calculate that with the smaller appropriation there would be greater protection to the persons now on the rolls, even with the 5-percent limitation, than there would be with the larger appropriation, especially if the 5-percent limitation is to apply. With the larger appropriation, and with the 5-percent limitation included, it might be possible to go through February and March without discharging anybody. However, I hardly see how it would be possible with the smaller amount, unless we were prepared on the first day of April to discharge almost half of those still remaining on the rolls.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield gladly.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator will look into the Record, I know he will find the figures which I inserted yesterday, and which I shall be glad to hand him now. He will find from those figures that under the committee report there is no excuse for a reduction by July 1 to a figure of less than 2,000,000 persons. No figures presented by the Administrator can change simple arithmetic. The expenditure is figured out at $61 a month from February 7 to July 1. The figures which have been quoted are based upon having only 1,000,000 persons upon the rolls on July 1, when the majority of the Appropriations Committee know that $725,000,000 will provide for no reduction greater than 5 percent during the first 2 months, and never below 2,000,000 until July 1.

Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the Senator very much; and I yield the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, will he state if it is not a fact that the statement he has just made is based upon the premise that there was a larger sum than $190,000,000 on hand on January 1?

Mr. BYRNES. No; it is based upon the fact that the Director has said he had enough money to run him to February 7. Not once did he say it, but at least 10 times before the Senate committee and the House committee. The difference in the figures is that he is now calculating on spreading this money for 3,000,000 persons over the entire month of February, whereas he testified before us that he has sufficient money to run him until February 7.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if the Senator from South Carolina were to assume as a premise that the Administrator had on hand and unobligated $190,000,000 on January 1, would he come to the same conclusion that the Senator from South Carolina has just indicated?

Mr. BYRNES. That raises an entirely different question. I attempted yesterday to say that so far as the unobligated balance is concerned, no two statements submitted to the committee up to this time can be reconciled. Just at the time this debate was started I was reading one that I have now seen for the first time, and it is entirely different from any I have seen up to this time; and that question is not involved in the other question, that of taking the $725,000,000 and spending it from February 7.

I will say to the Senator, however, that if he ever goes into the unobligated balance, he will find that in the testimony before the House committee the Director said that he did not intend to spend more than $750,000,000 in the time from February 7 to July 1. That is in the testimony. Then how does he explain the difference? He says that the balance, $175,000,000, he desires to have to carry over. He now has practically the same amount starting into this period, and he does not count it. In other words, he just says, "I have $175,000,000 with which I shall have to pay pay rolls and pay for materials. I have to have that amount on hand. Now, you give me $725,000,000."

If we give him $725,000,000, and he already has $150,000,-000, I know then that he has $875,000,000; and when he gets to July 1, if he is not going to spend more than $750,000,000 he is bound to have the same carry-over. On July 1 of every fiscal year the statement has been made to us that they have a carry-over to look after the period for the first 2 weeks, and they have to do it. When the Administrator says, as he testified before the House committee, that he does not expect to expend more than $750,000,000, he tells you that he does not expect to spend any more than the House committee has now given him.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like, if possible, for some of us to get some premise from which we may reason, because honest men reasoning from different premises will come to different conclusions. Let us start our reasoning with the assumption that there were $190,000,000 on hand and unobligated on January 1.

Mr. BYRNES. I never like to reason with a gentleman, though, if he starts with a premise as to which I do not

Mr. PEPPER. I am going to state the premise, and then let the Senator state the contrary. I say, let us start with the premise that there is $190,000,000 unobligated on January, 1, 1939, or December 31, 1938, as you choose, as indicated by the testimony of Colonel Harrington on page 31, at the bottom of the page, in the Senate Appropriations Committee hearings, reading as follows:

STATUS OF W. P. A. FUNDS AS OF DECEMBER 31, 1938

Colonel Harrington. Obligations incurred against these funds totaled $1,162,000,000 as of December 31, 1938, leaving on that date an unobligated balance of approximately $181,000,000.

Then he points out that in addition to that there are transfer funds of $9,000,000, which give him on hand and unobligated January 1, 1939, $190,000,000.

On page 6 of the same hearing he gives a table showing $180,599,422 as the balance available for obligation. That is table 1-B, on page 6; and down at the bottom there is a note which says:

These data include $20,800,000 transferred from balances of allocations under the Emergency Relief Administration Act of 1937, but do not include $9,590,482 of such balances which still remain available for transfer.

If we were to take those two statements and that testimony as showing that the Administrator had on hand, on January 1, $190,000,000, then I ask the Senator whether he would come to the conclusion he has just indicated?

Mr. BYRNES. As to the premise, I certainly never could agree. I have in my hand a report issued by the Administrator showing the financial status of funds in the Emergency Appropriation Acts as of January 10, and I find there for the first time the statement, which I shall be glad to show to the Senator, that on that date we had on hand another amount which was not mentioned in that testimony:

Undistributed by programs, $50,137,955.

And then this note in explanation of it:

(1) Appropriated but not yet distributed to specific programs by administrative agencies.

A sum of $50,000,000 on that date which has not yet been distributed to any program of any agency.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator know that it has not been obligated to some agency?

Mr. BYRNES. The statement is specific. It sets out the obligations to the State work programs, the amount that is obligated then to the Federal Nation-wide program, then to administrative expenses, and then it says this amount is undistributed to any program; and certainly until it is distributed to a program it is impossible to obligate something.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is there not a difference between distribution and obligation or allocation? Distribution is actually spending the money. Obligation or allocation may be earmarking it so that the projects have already been approved, but the money has not been actually distributed.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator believes that before this money is ever distributed to the National Youth Administration, the National Youth Administration is going to assume the power and authority to go out and obligate it, he thinks that Administration will assume an authority that I have no idea any administrative official would assume.

I will say to the Senator from Florida that what amount the Administrator carries over is really not involved in this particular discussion as to what can be done with this money, and that is where the Senator is being confused by these figures, as we have so often been. Whether the Administrator brings up to February 7, $170,000,000 or $70,000,000, if, when he comes to that date and he has this carry-over, we come along and say, "Here is $725,000,000," then he has $725,000,000 to spend that does not affect this amount in any way at all. This is an additional amount. The disposition of this $725,000,000, without adding a dollar to it, will provide for the number of persons indicated on the statement I have read, never less than 2,000,000, up to July 1. That is not involved with this additional fund, except that to the extent that there is a carry-over it must be added to the $725,000,000 which we now put into the Administrator's hands.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I know that the Senate to a large degree shares the element of confusion I have about all these figures which are given to and fro. I wanted to pin the matter down to a given time and a given point and let us see what the difference is between the Senator's premise and my premise.

I start with $190,000,000 on the 1st of January 1939, and I can reason from there to a conclusion. Now, let us see what the premise of the Senator from South Carolina is on the 1st of January 1939 and begin at that point to reason. Will the Senator from South Carolina be good enough to state what the unobligated available balance of dollars and cents was on the 1st of January 1939?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I step in here? I happen to have the figures for the 1st of January.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator from South Carolina has the figures for the 10th of January. These are the figures in the President's report:

The unobligated balances of emergency relief funds on December 31, 1938, were $482,800,000, and there are other funds which bring the total to $537,600,000; but emergency relief funds unobligated on December 31, 1938, according to the report the President made, amounted to $482,800,000. I think we should start from that premise and then reason.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator from Florida in good faith that I know that if he is going to attempt to reason from January 1 with the figures supplied to the Appropriations Committee of the Senate by the Treasury, by the President, and by the Administrator it is just a hopeless matter. Therefore I have attempted to say to him that disregarding those figures—because we have to disregard them, no two statements being alike—and considering only the amount of $725,000,000 that we now appropriate and put into the Administrator's hands, and dividing that amount among the number of persons at work at the rate at which he says he figures them, $61 per month, it would provide the necessary amount if he did not have a dollar on January 1 or January 15 or 16, or until February 7.

Therefore I know that it is much easier to reach a conclusion, certainly it is for me, as to what I can do with the $725,-000,000 if you hand it to me on February 7, rather than to go back and attempt to say how much money should be appropriated when no two statements he has given us can be reconciled.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if the committee report to the Senate that they simply do not know how much money is now available, or how much was available at a given time, how can they expect the Senate to pass intelligent judgment on the matter?

Mr. BYRNES. What the committee reports is that the Director does not know.

Mr. PEPPER. I ask the committee to advise me, as one Member of the Senate, how many dollars, unobligated and available for expenditure, were on hand on the 1st day of January, in an authentic figure, so that we will begin to reason from some point and know where we are.

Mr. BYRNES. It all depends on what the Senator regards as an authentic figure. The Senator from Colorado has quoted the figure submitted by the President of the United States, the highest authority we know. If the Senator accepts that, very well. If he cannot, we can submit no higher authority.

Mr. PEPPER. Is it not appropriate to refer the bill back to the committee, and let them find out what the truth is, and come back to the Senate with some figure on which we can depend?

By logic which I think is not refutable, I come to the conclusion that if their prohibition against more than a 5-percent cut is applicable through the month of March they will wind up with approximately a million people on the pay roll at the end of the month of June, and I should be glad to have those figures examined by anybody. That takes into consideration the 90,000 for whom provision is said to be made to the 1st of March. Those figures would provide for caring for the 2,900,000 for 2 months' time, and that would give $354,000,000, which would be the expense of caring for them. Then there would be $183,000,000 to be added to that, which would make $537,000,000 to be required to carry on until the end of the month of March.

The appropriation asked is $725,000,000. To be added to that is $190,000,000, on hand January the 1st, making the total available funds $915,000,000. Subtracting $537,000,000 from $915,000,000 gives a balance of $378,000,000 which will have to carry the load for the 3 months of April, May, and June.

One hundred and eighty-three dollars would be the amount necessary to carry one man, at $61 a month, for 3 months. Dividing $378,000,000 by $183, we get 2,070,000, which means that for the last 3 months we will have to have an average figure of 2,070,000 on the pay roll. How can we get an average of 2,000,000 for 3 months without having as much above 2,000,000 for 1 month and the same amount below 2,000,000 for the third month?

If we do that, we will come to a balance of a million people on the W. P. A. rolls, or approximately that, at the end of the month of June. Therefore, the Senate cannot decide this question. I am willing to take the Administrator's testimony. He is an Army engineer, a graduate of West Point, and a man who is qualified by experience, having been in this organization for years, assigned there by the President of the United States. He has intimate contact with this problem and knows what he is talking about. When he comes before a committee of the Senate and gives his solemn testimony that there was $190,000,000 on hand unobligated and available for expenditure on the 1st day of January, I am going to give credence to his statement, and if I give credence to it I come to an unhappy conclusion which I am not willing to adopt and which the Senator from New Jersey says he is not willing to adopt. So if we cannot start with a point and a premise and a figure that is dependable, how can we arrive at a satisfactory conclusion which can be accepted by the whole Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is one thing which seems to bring confusion to many of us, and that is the question of the carry-over. If we were to abolish the W. P. A. on the 30th of June, and wind it up, there would still be a carry-over, to complete the projects which had been begun, of approximately $125,000,000. That always happens. We do not even have to consider a fiscal year, but take the end of any month, and Colonel Harrington so testified, and he has confirmed it to me personally since his testimony. There is always an average of about $125,000,000 of an appropriation for a fiscal year that must be expended in the next fiscal year, because it is a carry-over.

This $56,000,000—and I might say that it is not that large; it is really about $45,000,000, I believe—is what they carry over from the month of January into the month of February. In other words, they will have enough money out of the appropriation which has already been made to complete projects, or to complete the pay roll for work which has been done in January, up to the 7th day of February. But if we were to conclude and terminate the W. P. A. completely on the 30th of June, the same condition would then exist, and there would be a carry-over which probably would be sufficient to pay those on the rolls up to the 7th day of July, or some approximate date like that.

So we can never end a thing up abruptly, at any midnight, and say there is no carry-over, because there will always be a carry-over after we have terminated it. So it seems to me that very fact is partly responsible for some of the confusion which exists here with respect to how much money was on hand to be expended during the first part of January, and how much will be available to be expended on the 1st of February, or during the first week in February.

I have a letter which I have received today from Colonel Harrington, and which tomorrow, in some very brief remarks I hope to make, I shall include in the RECORD, undertaking to clear up that misapprehension on the part of many Senators regarding the $45,000,000 or $56,000,000. I also have a letter from the Director of the Budget, in which he confirms the statement made by the Administrator and by the President, that although in the Budget only $750,000,000 was estimated for actual expenditure by being actually paid out of the Treasury up to July 1, $875,000,000 is the amount necessary in order to carry on the work according to the program which they have outlined. So there is really no inconsistency between the $750,000,000 they asked for actual appropriation during the fiscal year and the $875,000,000 which they said would be necessary to carry on the work of the fiscal year, with this carry-over beyond the 1st day of July.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I thought I had some comprehension of these figures until I heard all this discussion. Assuming that the Senator from Florida is accurate in the statement he has made—and I followed it very closely—the result would be, with the $725,000,000 appropriation, that by the end of June private industry would have to absorb 2,000,000 of the 3,000,000 now upon the rolls, not counting at all those who are certified who have not yet received employment.

Mr. PEPPER. That is exactly correct.

Mr. WAGNER. So far as our experience goes, is not that utterly out of the question, that private industry during that short period of time can absorb so many from W. P. A.?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. That is the reason why I find it impossible to go along with the subcommittee who recommend the cut which would result in taking all these men off the roll, but who offer nothing so far as putting the men back to work is concerned. What is going to keep these men and their families going if we make this reduction? Has the committee suggested anywhere that these men may find work or find some means of income or something to afford them and their families a livelihood?

Mr. PEPPER. I will say to the Senator from Alabama that, based on that premise, I would just as soon have $190,-000,000 unobligated and available on hand January 1, 1939. The way the conclusion was arrived at was, that there would be 40,600 out of 61,500 cut off of the existing W. P. A. rolls in the State of the Senator from Alabama; in the State of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], as he has already no doubt learned, in the city of New York, there would be 118,400 out of 179,600 cut off; in up-State New York 43,500 out of 66,000; and in my State of Florida, where we now have 52,400, we would have at the end of June 34,600, or I believe something like 67 percent of the ones now on the relief rolls would be off. And I may add that in my State already at least six or eight thousand people have been cut off since the 1st of January. In the Nation at large something like 75,000, or perhaps 100,000, have been cut off since the 1st of January. I have not seen anybody shedding any tears about their welfare. They have already been cut off. Why not let us put them back? The committee did not recommend that. Yet the unquestioned testimony before the committee was that they had been cut off, and there was no place for them to go, so far as I have seen the record disclosed.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. In my own State, in the month of January, 10,000 W. P. A. workers were stricken from the rolls. It is my view that if we should appropriate $875,000,000, we would still save a depletion of those rolls precisely as we did in my State in the month of January. If we were to freeze it at that figure, even with the $875,000,000, I confront the picture in my own State of 16,000 or 18,000 persons being certified who can by no possibility ever get on the rolls. So we have to stand here, whether we will it or not, in the role of executioners. We are purging those people. We are driving them out and creating an army of refugees here in our own America, who are almost as pitiful as those in Europe.

I am wondering if we have to make this election, so that we say 10,000 or 15,000 shall go off the rolls. They all have to suffer. There is no hope, even with the $875,000,000 appropriation, of putting back the number that were on the rolls in December, and the conditions do not justify that. In my judgment, the figure of $875,000,000 will be insufficient to take care of the people who have been certified, and who, without the assistance of W. P. A., are not going to be able to eat.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator explain what he means by being certified and state what he believes to be the credibility and the responsibility of the certifying agency in his own State?

Mr. BONE. In my own State the State agencies have quit certifying because of the inability of W. P. A. to take care of those who were certified. They abandoned that in the month of December. It was a futile gesture to certify men at that time, when the W. P. A. was laying them off. Ten thousand were laid off in the month of December. The State relief agency is unable to take care of them. They are paying $5.60 to each family in the way of direct relief. But that in itself becomes an increasing burden on the State as the W. P. A. rolls diminish.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator have an opinion or any knowledge as to whether the people who were certified were investigated by the State agency before certification and found to be in need?

Mr. BONE. Yes, indeed. I will say to the Senator from Florida that one of the complaints made to me repeatedly in my State was that the certifying agency in the State was entirely too harsh and rigorous; that its judgments were almost Draconian; in other words, they went into a home and literally fingerprinted a person and demanded a birth certificate from the person who was applying to get on W. P. A. Men very deeply resented it. They said it was an intrusion which they did not think was justified. It has caused no end of trouble in the State of Washington in the way of objection to the program.

Mr. PEPPER. Did the State have any experience with complaints as to the length of time consumed in making investigations on account of that situation?

Mr. BONE. Yes. The complaint was made, whether justly or not—and certainly I had enough complaints in my office to challenge my attention many times—that when a person went out to seek certification the State was a long time getting around to it, and people could not eat for a long time and suffered very severely. I suspect that situation exists in a number of other States where they have a form of certification such as that which exists in the State of Washington.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, was that a State agency, or W. P. A.?

Mr. BONE. No; the State agency certifies them as being entitled to go on W. P. A. In other words, the W. P. A. organization has looked to the State to certify them as proper subjects for W. P. A. employment.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, in view of the fact that no one seems to have any authentic figures, and we are all confused about figures—in fact, we have confusion worse confounded—are we not driven in the last analysis to a choice between following the committee as to what the policy shall be in the matter of expenditures, or the Administration, which has had the execution of this law under its charge for a number of years?

Mr. PEPPER. I see no escape from that conclusion. So far as I am concerned, in spite of the deference I have for the committee members and the affection I have for them personally, I think Colonel Harrington knows more about the W. P. A. than these fine, good friends of ours.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator whether or not in all these discussions we ought not to be reminded occasionally that all propaganda of communism and nazi-ism thrives on economic despair.

Mr. PEPPER. Unquestionably so. And not only that, I will say to the Senator from New York, but if the New York business world knew that the Congress of the United States threatened to make any appreciable reduction in public expenditures, in my humble opinion, we should see a very violent and unfavorable business reaction in that community.

Mr. WAGNER. I will say to the Senator that while the distinguished junior Senator from Montana was addressing us I read a telegram signed by 10,000 members of business associations in New York protesting against the proposed cut in the W. P. A. appropriation. So that they have already voiced their sentiments.

Mr. PEPPER. I imagine the Senator would agree with me that the best way to give business confidence is to give business customers.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course. Purchasing power, after all, is the blood of our whole economic system. We ought not to forget that.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I had intended to submit a few more remarks in connection with this matter, but in view of the lateness of the hour, I should prefer to proceed tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was waiting. I thought the Senator would conclude today.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if it would be agreeable to the Senate, I should like to have the privilege of resuming my remarks tomorrow, if there is no impropriety in making such

Mr. BARKLEY. I think it is perfectly proper for the Senator to make the request. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. BONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. Possibly he cannot answer it.

Mr. ADAMS. I have been faced with many such situa-

Mr. BONE. In view of the tremendous difference in the figures presented here with respect to the unexpended and unobligated balances of the W. P. A. funds, can the Senator tell us how it is possible for the President and for the chief executive officer of W. P. A. and other well-informed persons to be so far apart in their estimates of the actual number of dollars available to W. P. A.? Is there not any single key system of books through which all could be made clear?

Mr. ADAMS. There is a single key system of books, and that is all set out in the report of the President of the United States sent to the Congress. All the figures are set out there. Everything is set out in detail. All the expenditures are set out. Even obligations which have not yet resulted in expenditures are set out. The record is a very accurate and a very complete one.

Mr. BONE. Does Colonel Harrington have access to that information?

Mr. ADAMS. He does.

Mr. BONE. How does it happen that he advises us in his statement that the Administration has $190,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. I am not able to tell the Senator how Colonel Harrington obtains his information.

Mr. BONE. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes1 mentioned a figure of $50,000,000 or $55,000,000, and I believe the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] suggested $45,000,000. The problem becomes confusion worse confounded.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Kentucky said there was always $125,000,000 carried over, and according to the Senator from Florida there is a balance of $190,000,000. If the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Kentucky are correct, there is a total of $190,000,000 plus $125,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Which would make $315,000,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I wonder if it is possible for the committee to obtain from Colonel Harrington a further statement reconciling these conflicts.

Mr. ADAMS. It is possible to get a statement. I have no question as to the accuracy of the statement of the President of the United States, with all the details which he sent to us at our request. The statement was sent to us after Colonel Harrington testified before our committee.

Mr. HUGHES. It must be apparent that many of us do not understand the situation. There seems to be a diversity of opinion as to what figures should be taken in arriving at the calculations we have been trying to make. In view of the discussions which we have had, is it not possible to iron out the conflicts by giving us later figures upon which we may rely, securing them from Colonel Harrington or some other source?

Mr. ADAMS. I think we can obtain reliable figures. I would not say to the Senator that I would accept Colonel Harrington as the final word on the matter. I do accept the statement of the President of the United States and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to say further that I understand that the Senator from Kentucky, our floor leader, has later figures. I was hopeful that they would be presented this afternoon, so that we could have them. I wonder if those figures could be presented to the Senate tomorrow.

I had not intended this afternoon to pre-Mr. BARKLEY. sent the figures which I have, because of the lateness of the hour. I shall present them as soon as I can tomorrow.

Mr. HUGHES. Personally, I am very anxious to come to an understanding about these conflicting figures, and, if possible, to arrive at a basis on which I may make my own calculations. I am not any stronger at figuring than is the Senator from Colorado, and yet I know something about ordinary arithmetic. I should like to have figures from which I can make my own calculations and arrive at my own judgment as to what I should do under the circumstances. Without some figures upon which we can rely it is difficult to see just how we can arrive at a conclusion as to whether we should vote for $725,000,000 or $875,000,000.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope that before a vote is taken we can all reconcile the various totals and figures which have been given. The Senator from Colorado reads from some sort of book which evidently is not a part of the hearings. I presume it is a report of the President in his Budget message.

Mr. ADAMS. No; it is a report which was submitted on January 10, 1939.

Mr. BARKLEY. That report is not available to all of us.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, yes. The Senator will find in his office a digest, with the statement that a copy of the report is available to him if he wishes it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose that report includes many other departments.

Mr. ADAMS. No; this is all in reference to the relief department.

Mr. BARKLEY. Including the National Youth Administration and several other branches?

Mr. ADAMS. Including all the emergency relief appropriations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lucas in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, and withdrawing a nomination, which were referred to the appropriate committees

(For nominations this day received and nomination withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs. reported favorably the nominations of several officers for promotion in the Regular Army.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers and citizens for appointment or promotion in the Navy.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Commerce, reported favorably the nominations of sundry ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Coast Guard.

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, reported favorably the nomination of Edward L. Bartlett, of Alaska, to be secretary of the Territory of Alaska, vice Edward W. Griffin, deceased.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters in the State of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar. If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will read the nominations on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, January 26, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 25 (legislative day of January 17), 1939

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 25, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our blessed Heavenly Father, we are deeply thankful when we think of the Lord God at Bethel, in the manger, on the cross, and on the mount. Cause us this day some message of Thy truth to bring; speak through our lives and our lips as we work for things to be. As we pray may we harken unto Thy word: "A man shall be as a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." O kindle our souls with enthusiastic love and devotion. Let the Rock with its restful shadow shelter us. When the wind of trial is fiercest, be our hiding place; when the blasting tempest affrights us and the way leads through the desert of unfruitful experience; when hopes wither and plans are defeated, be Thou a refreshing stream of water in the barren places. In the name of the Saviour. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Journal will stand approved.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that Mr. Lucas, of Illinois, had been appointed as a member of the Joint Committee on Government Organization, in accordance with Public Resolution No. 4, Seventy-fifth Congress, to fill the vacancy caused thereon by the expiration of the term of Hon. Fred H. Brown, formerly a Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. Barkley and Mr. Gibson members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive departments," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

- 1. Department of Commerce.
- 2. Department of Labor.
- 3. Department of the Navy.
- 4. Post Office Department.
- 5. Farm Credit Administration.
- 6. Federal Trade Commission.
- 7. Works Progress Administration.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a letter by Frederic R. Coudert, a leading international lawyer, to the editor of the New York Times which appeared in today's edition in reply to a letter of the Honorable Henry C. Stimson recently published in the New York Times on the Spanish embargo.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I certainly have no personal objection to the matter offered by the gentleman from New York, but on Friday last I made a perfectly reasonable request to extend in the Record a statement and article by one of our own Members. It was objected to. Until that matter is incorporated in the Record, or until we have some understanding as to what the content of the Record shall be, I feel myself constrained to object, and I do object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of the committees.

The Clerk called the roll of the committees.

CODIFICATION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS

Mr. DOUGHTON (when the Committee on Ways and Means was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I call up the bill (H. R. 2762) to consolidate and codify the internal-revenue laws of the United States.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is not a quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 382 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. Doughton, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

CODIFICATION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand there are 500 pages in this bill. I ask the chairman of the committee if it is not true that these bills have not yet been printed in accordance with the rules of the House? They are not on the floor of the House now.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not suppose I can satisfy the gen-There are over 100 copies available. It is a very expensive bill to print, and the committee has been desirous of not incurring any more expense than necessary. I am sure the gentleman has notes of the points of the bill in which he is interested.

Mr. CHURCH. It is my information, Mr. Speaker, that very few copies of this bill are available and there are not more than 18 copies on the floor. This does not comply with the rule of the House or the statute, as set forth on page 455 of the House Rules and Manual, which reads:

SEC. 55. There shall be printed of each Senate and House public bill and joint resolution 625 copies, which shall be distributed—

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHURCH. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman is proceeding on information that is incorrect.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will overrule the point of order.

There are copies available to Members.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I understand there are no more than 18 copies avail-This is a bill of 500 pages. I am therefore constrained to object to the consideration of this bill at this time unless I can receive further information. I am sure I am correct that there are no more than 18 copies of this 500-page bill available for the Members of the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will furnish the gentleman with a copy if that will convince him.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman will permit, I may say that the gentleman cannot prevent consideration of this bill at this time because it is called up under the Calendar Wednesday rule, and the Committee on Ways and Means was reached on the call of the calendar.

Mr. CHURCH. I understand I cannot prevent the bill's coming up, but I have the right to object to bringing up for consideration a 500-page bill which has not been made available to the Members. It has taken all this discussion on my part to even get the one copy just handed to me.

Mr. RAYBURN. The bill is already before the House, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We can easily determine whether the gentleman is correct or not.

I take the position the gentleman is entirely incorrect that there are only 18 copies available.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a further ques-

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton]?

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Church] objects to the request. The House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2762) to consolidate and codify the internal-revenue laws of the United States, with Mr. BEAM in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, this bill, H. R. 2762, would enact into absolute law an internal-revenue code, which would contain in one volume all existing law dealing exclusively with internal-revenue matters. At present the internal-revenue laws are scattered throughout 35 volumes of the Statutes at Large which I have before me. The revenue laws are contained in these 35 different volumes.

A taxpayer, in order to find out what his tax liability to the Government is, may have to search painstakingly through all these volumes to ascertain what may be due the Government under existing internal-revenue laws, and then he cannot be absolutely certain he is correct, because many of the laws have been repealed. It may be difficult or impossible for him to find just where the repealing measure is contained in the various books which are on the table here.

I may say at the outset that this bill has the unanimous support of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Does this proposed codification include decisions on questions involving internal revenue laws?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; it does not contain court decisions. It contains the laws as written, no more and no less.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I mean the construction of those laws.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, this is simply a compilation or codification of all internal revenue statutory law.

There is one practical question presented to the House today and that is whether or not we shall continue with these 35 volumes containing the internal-revenue laws or whether for the convenience and in the interest of the taxpayers and those interested in these matters we shall bring it all together in one volume. That is the only question presented.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am in complete sympathy with the proposal, but I wondered if it also contained decisions of the courts on questions arising from these various

Mr. COOPER. No. I may say to the gentleman it only applies to the statutory law and is a compilation of the internal revenue statutory laws. It does not in any way change or seek to change any existing internal revenue statute.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Michi-

Mr. MICHENER. Is this a codification or a compilation? Mr. DOUGHTON. This is a codification.

Mr. MICHENER. If this is a codification, then the gentleman who just spoke used unfortunate language, because a codification puts together the main substance of the laws and strikes out parts that have been repealed by implication or by direction. If it is a compilation it means nothing more or less than putting in one volume the laws verbatim as they are found as originally passed.

If it is a codification, the judgment of the codifier writes the new law. Codification may change the wording of the original statute.

This House has never before considered a codification more important, and we are making this absolute law. When we passed the United States Code, it was up here for years and years with various committee staffs working on the matter. and I say, and I think anyone familiar with the situation knows, that no committee staff is capable of codifying the law. We found that out in consideration of the code. first made it prima facie. We should do that here.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech. I yielded to him for a question.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has an hour. How much time will he yield to me?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may say if there is any minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means opposed to the bill, the Chair will recognize such member

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, as the ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee I may say that the minority members of that committee are in favor of this codification. I would be very glad, however, to accept the assignment of the hour and distribute it to those Members who may be opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] for 1 hour.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, may I clear up the matter of time. If it is agreeable, I will yield 20 minutes of my hour to the gentleman from Massachusetts to dispose of as he may see fit.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will take my own time under the Chairman's ruling.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield to Members on that side?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.
Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas. Mr. HOUSTON. Has the Treasury Department, the Department of Justice, and the Internal Revenue Department approved this proposed codification?

Mr. DOUGHTON. This codification was prepared and the work done by the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation in cooperation with the Treasury Department officials and officials of the Department of Justice. I am assured that the Treasury Department officials are satisfied and that they are favorable to it and have no objection. I have here also a letter from the Assistant Attorney General expressing approval of it, and I shall ask the Clerk to read that a little later.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is all I wanted to know. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from New

Mr. CELLER. I notice on page 3 of the report a statement indicating the elimination of obsolete matter in these various internal-revenue laws.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Nothing has been eliminated that has not been specifically repealed, or has become inoperative. Of course the numerous provisions of law relating to back taxes have not been incorporated into this code, but the code does not repeal these provisions or in any manner disturb

Mr. CELLER. I am with the chairman and with his committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CELLER. However, I should like to get an expression. in order to clear up a question in my own mind, of whether or not this obsolete matter and these temporary provisions were omitted, and who determined whether they were obsolete or whether they were temporary. Was the determination made by the committee or was it made primarily by the Treasury experts, in whom I have the greatest confidence, I may say.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It was done by all parties.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. Those provisions are not eliminated or not repealed by this law. Where there is a provision by means of which a limitation is imposed or where a law has been repealed it is simply not brought forward as the law in this volume.

Mr. CELLER. Was it clear the provisions were obsolete or was an investigation made to determine whether a particular provision no longer did apply?

Mr. COOPER. No; it is my understanding the provisions of the statute in question itself determine that; in other words, if a provision expires by the provision of the statute itself, it clearly is no longer operative.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. I wish to commend the Committee on Ways and Means for bringing in this bill. I have had occasion during my service in Congress to receive frequent letters from people in my district who desired information and pamphlets with respect to laws governing Federal taxes, and I have had to advise them that such laws are scattered in numerous volumes and that I was unable to furnish them.

Only a few days ago I had an illustration of this situation. A man in my district improperly paid a tax he did not owe because he did not have access to the tax laws with reference to social security. I believe it is a real duty the Congress owes the American people, in view of the large number of taxes we have, to codify these tax laws in one volume. I suggest to the Committee on Printing that when this bill becomes a law, as I am sure it will, copies of it be printed as a public document so they may be available to the people of the United States.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma

Mr. MASSINGALE. If I correctly understand this proposition, the object is simply to make this compilation prima facie evidence of the law.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, no.

Mr. MASSINGALE. What is it?

Mr. DOUGHTON. This is intended to be absolute law, not prima facie evidence of what the law is. If it were the latter, the situation would not be any better than it is now. This is a matter of absolute law, as the matter contained in the different volumes from which this is compiled is absolute law. Mr. MASSINGALE. It is law anyhow.

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is law anyhow, but one cannot find out what is the law without reading through the 35 volumes to find out whether or not a certain provision may have been repealed.

Mr. MASSINGALE. In my opinion, if you want to use this compilation as prima facie evidence of the law, it will not hurt anybody.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is not the purpose of it, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Making up this compilation does not make it law.

Mr. DOUGHTON. This just consolidates and codifies the law into one volume.

Mr. MASSINGALE. It would be worth nothing-and I am just giving my own judgment about it-unless it were made prima facie evidence of the law.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Is prima facie evidence stronger than the law itself? I never understood that before.

Mr. MASSINGALE. We already have the law.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I never understood that prima facie evidence was stronger evidence of what the law is than the law itself.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massa-

Mr. McCORMACK. It is interesting to know that the last time we had codification of the internal-revenue laws was in 1874. If we placed a provision in this bill stating that this particular act would be only prima facie evidence of the law, we might just as well not pass it at all. We might just as well let the law remain as it is and let the lawyers wade through all these volumes. I happen to be a lawyer. It is a good thing for the profession to have all these books, but it is not a good thing for the businessmen of the country. We are trying to simplify these laws, but it seems to me if we are going to have a compilation as distinguished from a codification, I should vote against it. I would not have voted for such a bill in committee. There are 25 members of the Committee on Ways and Means, 10 Republicans and 15 Democrats-and this bill was reported out unanimously.

I respect the observations of my distinguished friend the gentleman from Michigan, and I may say they are pertinent observations, but I assure the gentleman his alarm is unnecessary. Care has been taken in the preparation of this codification. The only way to carry out this purpose is to codify these laws. Then when you or I introduce a bill or when we seek to offer a minor amendment to existing law we have got to make a citation to anywhere from three to a dozen statutes if we are only changing one word. This represents expense to the taxpayers and work on our part. Furthermore, when this codification is made all we have got to do is to amend this measure. The law books we have here continue to be existing law, and our action here today will only apply in the future.

This is a good proposition from a business angle. It simplifies the laws and is in the best interest of the country, and it is in the best interest of business that we met this problem instead of joshing ourselves about a mere compilation. It is much better that we put through a codification. Every State in the Union codifies its laws approximately every 20 years, and we have not codified the internal-revenue laws since 1874.

Of course, there may be a few minor mistakes. This is bound to occur, but the broad thing to do is to accomplish our present purpose and simplify the law for the benefit of the businessmen and the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman for his observation, which contains statements I had in mind.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I read in the report that amendments are often involved and obscure. I also read that the work has been done in the Treasury Department or, rather, reviewed in its entirety by officials of the Treasury Department and the Attorney General's office. The gentleman can assure us, can he not, that all these determinations, as well as the language used in the codification, might well be considered as having been determined in behalf of the Treasury as against the taxpayer when there was any such determination to be made?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No such assumption is warranted.

Mr. GIFFORD. Is not that a fair assumption? Were there any on this committee who, you might say, were represented by counsel-any with a view to protecting the tax-

Mr. DOUGHTON. That was the duty of the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. That was their function, of course, and that is what they were doing all the time.

Mr. GIFFORD. It was done by the council?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Not the council but by the staff.

Mr. GIFFORD. Did the gentleman himself go through

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; and neither would the gentleman from Massachusetts do it if he lived a thousand years.

Mr. GIFFORD. Were the people properly represented on that council, because we know the attitude of the Treasury always when it comes to a decision between the Treasury and the people?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Just as well as the people ever could be represented. I do not know what further safeguards could have been taken or what further precaution exercised than were taken or exercised in the preparation of this codification of the various laws.

Mr. GIFFORD. I once had a little experience in the codification of some laws in my State. The committee appointed to codify those laws, when they completed their job, told me how many liberties they took with respect to phraseology and also told me of the changes they made which would probably pass unnoted.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. COOPER. We have this simple situation here. Along about 1930, under the direction of the Ways and Means Committee, the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation-

Mr. GIFFORD. I know about that.
Mr. COOPER. They were all employees of the Congress, and they began this work of simply copying existing internal-revenue statutes and bringing them together. After they had worked for years and had completed this work, not changing a single word of existing law, only actually copying existing statutes and bringing them together, and after analyzing every word of this work and after they had reached the conclusion it was correct in every respect, then the committee took the matter under consideration. After this it was referred to the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice simply for the purpose of having their attorneys likewise comb it over and see whether they could find any mistakes whatever in the copying of these existing statutes.

Some 25 or 30 lawyers worked practically all summer in the Treasury Department and, likewise, quite a number in the Department of Justice, and they here present satisfaction with the work.

Mr. GIFFORD. I appreciate the fact that this work has been done, I do not criticize it, but amendments or phraseologies are often involved and obscure. Somebody has to make them plain and relieve the obscurity, which is acknowledged.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Amendments? You would have to search through all of these volumes to find the amendments. What procedure would the gentleman suggest that is better than what we have done? This has already cost the Government thousands of dollars. What has been done has been done as thoroughly as possible. What other procedure would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. GIFFORD. I wanted to make sure that there were attorneys for the people there and not all representatives of the Treasury. [Laughter.] Oh, I think that is a fair statement. The Treasury gets all the money that it can and would resolve language of statutes in its favor when possible.

Mr. COOPER. And whom does the gentleman think that we represent?

Mr. GIFFORD. We represent the people, but we delegated that job.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I have here a letter from the chairman of the Committee on Federal Taxation of the American Bar Association, which I think will answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I ask unanimous consent to have it read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION, STANDING COMMITTEE ON FEDERAL TAXATION January 24, 1939.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON.

Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.
MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: An examination of the codification of the internal-revenue laws as prepared by the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue indicates that a highly sensible idea has been brought to a most satisfactory fruition.

Unless one has had experience handling questions which involve the statutes treating with our internal revenue for a span of years (not at all an unusual experience in tax disputes), he can have little idea of the difficulty of achieving certainty as to what the applicable statute law is. If for taxpayers and their counsel these difficulties and uncertainties can be eliminated, the reduction of expense of tax controversies and even the elimination of such controversies should be greatly furthered.

Not only does it seem highly advisable that this painstakingly prepared codification should be enacted into law, but it should be apparent that the sconer such action is taken the more beneficial will be the effect, particularly in the consideration of any revenue legislation during the present session of Congress. An intelligent consideration of any proposal for change would seem to require an assured knowledge of the law which it is proposed to change.

Expressing the hope that this hardly controversial proposal will be enacted into the law promptly, I am

Sincerely yours.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE M. MORRIS.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I also send to the desk and ask to have read a letter from James W. Morris, Assistant Attorney General.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

LETTER TO THE CHAIRMAN FROM JAMES W. MORRIS, ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, January 18, 1938.

Hon. R. L. DOUGHTON,

Hon. R. L. Doughton,
Chairman, Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, Room 1336, House Office Building, Washington, D. C.
My Dear Congressman Doughton: I am in receipt of your letter of January 15, 1938, requesting the views of this office relative to the proposed codification of internal-revenue laws and the enactment of such codification into law. In your letter you quote the statement contained in the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means of January 14, 1938, dealing with this proposal.

The Tax Division of the Department of Justice, in the performance of its function of handling revenue litigation, has been impressed with the need of a codification of the revenue laws which will be recognized as the law rather than as being merely prima facie evidence thereof. We believe that much confusion exists by reason of the number of revenue acts, containing in many instances the same basic provisions, to which reference must be made in the handling of cases arising under the various acts. This confusion constitutes a burden for courts and counsel alike.

Also, several of these statutory provisions were amended by Executive order. Since the changes thus made have not appeared on the face of the statutes, it has been necessary to refer to the Executive order to ascertain the nature and extent of these changes. I am glad to see that this situation has been taken care of It will

I am glad to see that this situation has been taken care of. It will also be helpful and lessen confusion.

It is the opinion of this office that the enactment of a codification of the revenue statutes will be a definite step toward clarity, certainty, and simplicity. Such a codification will bring the substantive and procedural provisions together and will be most helpful.

In doing this work I feel that the staff of the joint committee has made a valuable contribution to the tax law which will be a substantial aid to this Division in the handling of litigation involving Federal revenue.

Very truly yours,

James W. Morris, Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, we feel that this bill that we are presenting to the House is as nearly perfect as it is humanly possible to make it. We feel that it will be a valuable contribution to the taxpayer, to the courts, and to the lawyers, and to those who administer our tax laws. I feel that the bugaboo of errors, which can always be raised, should not deter us from doing our manifest duty in this very important matter.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman say a word about whether or not there are any saving clauses in the statute in respect to pending cases?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, this does not apply to pending cases at all.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time, and I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to use some of his

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, first, in reply to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gif-FORD] about the protection of the public in this matter: We have in Congress a Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. I have been a member of that committee since it was originated, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton] also has been. We have employed ever since it originated a most efficient staff. The head of that staff up to last year was Mr. Lovell H. Parker, than whom there is no greater tax expert in the country, in the opinion of the Committee on Ways and Means. He had under him, as counsel to the joint committee, Mr. Colin F. Stam; and when Mr. Parker resigned from his position, Mr. Stam was unanimously elected by our joint committee to take his place. Therein is the security of the public, that men of such high type as these employees and the persons under them have done the manual work, the actual physical work of codifying the laws on taxation. As much of a partisan as I am, and I am proud of the fact that I am a partisan, and I have made that statement a good many times on this floor and I repeat it—as much of a partisan as I am, I cannot conceive of anyone endeavoring to cover up or hide or prevent a proper classification and codification of anything as complicated as the tax laws. One of the reasons for starting the joint committee was an effort to simplify the tax laws. I am afraid that we have not accomplished our purpose very soundly in that respect, but nevertheless we are doing it now. As my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] said, to think that an ordinary man, in order to know that he is right, that he has the right law, must go through 34 volumes, such as are on the table, seems absurd to me; and while I appreciate the attitude of lawyers wanting to be certain that everything is properly done, I cannot see why we should not accept this effort at simplification through the method of codification, and I ask my colleagues on the majority side if that is not exactly what our Committee on Ways and Means is endeavoring to do. It is simply to simplify these complicated tax laws, and they will be complicated when this codification is passed, but certainly if I am any judge of professional ability, men who will have the interpretation of the law and be employed as counsel will appreciate the effort that is contained within these 500 pages, in having 500 pages to consult rather than 35 volumes. Am I correct?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The primary purpose of this work is in the interest of the taxpayer, to simplify the matter so that it will be more readily understood by him, so that we will not have to employ so many expensive lawyers and then finally know exactly what his duty is in making out his income-tax return.

Mr. TREADWAY. Before yielding to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Robsion] I would like to add one further remark having to do with the correctness of this report. You have not only the experience of this very efficient staff of the joint committee, but you have the approval of the Department of Justice, as expressed in the letter that has been read from the Clerk's desk. There was some little complication or unfortunate circumstance that prevented a definite approval by the Treasury Department, but we are assured that the Treasury Department likewise approves this effort at codification.

When you have your legal profession itself, when you have the departments of government who will have the law to enforce, when you have the word of such a group of men as the staff of the joint committee, and with every interest protected, both for the individual citizen and taxpayer and the council of interests, it does not seem to me possible that there should be any serious objection to this codification.

I realize I am speaking somewhat at a disadvantage, not being a lawyer myself, but I think I am using a little common horse sense, such as we are taught down in New England where I am proud to have come from. Therefore, I take at full measure value this compilation as having been honestly, carefully, and sincerely prepared by efficient people to become the codified tax laws of the country.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I wish to compliment the efforts of the committee to simplify the revenue laws of the United States. I am wondering, however, if this codification has gone further than striking out obsolete statutes or laws. Has there been any restatement of the law?

Mr. TREADWAY. Let me see if I cannot answer the gentleman in this way: When the Ways and Means Committee heard the staff in connection with whether or not this bill should be reported, the distinct question was asked whether there was any change in law, and if there were any inconsistencies, as one of our members spoke of at the time. Those inconsistencies were not obliterated. That is my judgment of it.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Now it is claimed that this is a recodification of the law. That would indicate that there must have been some changes. Otherwise it might be merely called a compilation or bringing together of various laws. Now, I am calling attention to this language in the report:

It was, therefore, made only prima facie evidence of the law, and scrutiny of it was invited for the purpose of correcting errors, eliminating obsolete matter, and restatement.

Now, I understand you have eliminated obsolete statutes. What does that mean? Is it a restatement? Does that mean that these master minds, or these very highly efficient lawyers, have taken the internal-revenue acts or statutes and have restated them with the idea of making them clearer or more easily understood, or is there any restatement at all? Are the statutes copied exactly as the Congress passed them?

Mr. TREADWAY. My understanding is that the statutes were copied exactly as they were in those 34 volumes. It simply puts them all in one volume of 500 pages. There has been no change of any kind as far as the organic law is concerned.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I might say it means that laws that were temporarily enacted were no longer in force, and those have been left out.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Now, that is what I mean. You have eliminated the laws that have expired, but which are carried in those volumes? They are left out?

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman has properly stated the fact.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Does the gentleman from North Carolina and the ranking minority Member say to the House that no words have been added and no words have been taken from the statutes?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Absolutely, unconditionally, without any qualification or equivocation, there has been no change in the law.

Mr. TREADWAY. The only qualification would be a human error unintentionally made.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. With that idea in mind I shall support it, and I think this Committee deserves the thanks of the House for having presented such a splendid bill to the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not want the last gentleman's question to be answered that way. The gentleman from Kentucky knows that there must have been obscurity and involvements and contradictions, as they say there were. When you recodify laws you have to make language plain and resolve into language a definiteness understandable.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. We have the statement from the chairman and the statement from our colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] that no word has been added and no word has been taken from the law.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, that is not possible. They must interpret somewhat at least in a codification of these laws.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. No. They say the text remains as it was.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. Unfortunately I think the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford] misapplies the term "obscure." It is not used here in the sense that there is anything obscure in the wording of the statute. The obscurity arises by reason of being distributed through all these 34 volumes. It is obscure in the sense that it is tucked away somewhere in some of these books; not that there is any obscurity about the language itself, once you are able to find it. The obscurity is in being able to find the statutes and provisions.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; briefly.

Mr. GIFFORD. Taxpayers constantly come to us having sought redress in the courts, and often the Treasury withdraws without carrying the case further because they often simply try to make collections if the taxpayer would prefer to pay rather than resort to the courts. This is not a partisan statement. I trust the gentleman will not consider that. I think I ought to know that in the codification of law, as I have seen it performed before, that there must be some new wording, new explanations, and new definitions applied to relieve "obscurities." It does not seem sensible that they could simply take out obsolete things and place verbatim new legislation in view of the statement they make themselves. I shall vote for it. It is badly needed; but I simply inquired whether the taxpayers themselves were properly represented, as the Treasury seems really to have the last word on this matter. That is all.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I probably am to blame for this controversy today in that I objected to the passage of this bill by unanimous consent when it was requested by the worthy chairman on Monday. I did so, however, to bring out this discussion, and I think it is a very healthy thing for the country and for this Congress that we do have this discussion with respect to this proposed code.

I was not opposed to the code when I objected. I am not opposed to it now. I do know, however, that there are opportunities in the codification of laws for almost endless litigation. Many of the States have had this experience in years gone by when they have turned the codification of their laws or any group of their laws over to so-called experts. wanted to determine definitely that the matter set forth in this code clearly reflects the intent of this Congress. In looking over the code I believe the committee and the experts have done a very fine job, but even in glancing over it as hastily as I have—and I was not able to get a copy of the bill until this morning-certain questions have arisen which I think should be clarified. Because some questions have arisen, there might, of course, be many more; and I hope that the committee today will take all of the time which is allotted to it to try to answer any quesions which have arisen with respect to the code.

We must take into consideration the fact that when we pass this bill we repeal-not by implication but we specifically repeal-all internal-revenue acts passed previous to the date of the enactment of this bill. An attempt is made to safeguard those acts which are not included by a saving clause, the effect of which is somewhat doubtful, in my mind. We find on page 1 of the bill, however, the following language:

In furtherance of that purpose, all such laws and parts of laws codified herein to the extent they relate exclusively to internal revenue, are repealed, effective, except as provided in section 5, on the day following the date of the enactment of this act.

Section 5 merely points out that any provision of law in force on the 2d day of January 1939 corresponding to a provision contained in the internal revenue title shall remain in force until the corresponding provision under such title takes effect.

There is a great deal of doubt in my mind as to whether this language accomplishes the purpose of the committee. Probably if it does not a later session of Congress may remedy the defect. I know it is the purpose of this code to include everything in respect to internal-revenue laws and all other revenue laws. We must proceed rather cautiously, because it must be remembered that the power to levy taxes carries with it the power to coerce, regulate, and destroy. It was because of this that I was insistent that we give a little more consideration to this particular bill.

On page 32 of the draft I find at least an implication that all existing law has not been included in this code, nullifying somewhat the intent of the committee to facilitate the interpretation or the use to which the tax laws are put. Section 61 provides:

All administrative, special, or stamp provisions of law, including the law relating to the assessment of taxes, so far as applicable, shall be extended to and made a part of this chapter.

This does not obviate the necessity of a lawyer searching, and searching, and searching through perhaps not only these 34 volumes which are on exhibit at the chairman's desk, but also through many other laws. If this were a codification in the true sense of the word, all of the laws applicable to this particular subject would be brought together between the two covers of this document. It would, of course, include the regulations, the administrative, special, or stamp provisions of the law as referred to in section 61. There is at least this deficiency which should be called to the committee's attention and to the attention of the lawyers and courts who will have to do with the interpretation of this act, and to the Congress; because, it should not be presumed from any statement made on this floor that this law when enacted is an embodiment of all of the laws affecting our

I think the committee and the experts have done a reasonably good job. I do not think that any charge should be made against the committee or the experts that they have willfully, maliciously, or intentionally done anything which they should not have done in the codification of these laws.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Speaking of section 61, page 32, is not that same provision in the Revenue Act of 1938?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It might be; but if the gentleman will indulge me, the regulations referred to in that section are not in the Revenue Act of 1938 as I understand it. Instead of being written into this act by reference they should be written into it actually, if this is to be a complete codification of all internal-revenue laws. That is my point.

Mr. BULWINKLE. All administrative, special, or stamp provisions of law are a part of the revenue act anyhow. They are all in the code.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman, then, in order to clarify that particular section, for the purpose of the record and in order that the Congress may have the benefit of the gentleman's views of the interpretation of the intent of Congress, point out on the record where in this bill the administrative, special, or stamp provisions of the law are included? Mr. BULWINKLE. I will leave that to one of the members of the committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, emphasis has been placed on certain things.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Just a minute.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I go on?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I want to show the gentleman where it is.

Mr. WOLCOTT. All right.

Mr. BULWINKLE. It is on page 435, one of them, the general administrative provision.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am not going to take the time, nor have I the time, of course, to check up to see if they are all in here. I hope they are, but I do not want the courts or any other lawyer who has to do with this bill to rely solely on the statements made here that they are all included.

In this bill, emphasis has been placed on certain provisions of the revenue laws. I think we must bear in mind that this bill is not only prima facie evidence of the law but is the law itself. In the case of any error on the part of the Government Printing Office in printing a copy of the act, that copy is the law regardless of anything to the contrary. Now, that is not good legislation. It is not good LXXXIV-50 legislation to tie the hands of our courts so that they have to take a copy of an act printed by the Government Printing Office as absolute proof of law. That is a denial to the judicial branch of our Government of the right to go behind the law and to determine legislative intent.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Of course, that is true of any law we might enact in the future. In the case of error, it would be the duty of the Congress to correct the mistake by amending the law as soon as it was discovered.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] 3 additional minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I stated that particular emphasis had been placed on certain law. If this bill is an embodiment of all laws having to do with the raising of revenue, why is it necessary to reenact subsection (e) of section 4 having to do with the publication of returns by corporations and individuals?

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. BUCK. May I explain to the gentleman that the provisions to which he has referred, the repeal and savings provisions, have been copied directly from the bill which enacted the Revised Statutes of 1874. The exact language has been used, because that has already been construed by the courts and has a definite meaning.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I assume the gentleman means the act of 1874 as amended, because I do not think the act of 1874 authorized the publication of income-tax reports.

Mr. BUCK. May I call the gentleman's attention to section 8 of the bill, to which he referred a few moments ago, which is also copied from the Revised Statutes of 1873, the act creating the Revised Statutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is not consistent, then, with the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means a few minutes ago that the existing revenue acts are prima facie evidence only. The gentleman from North Carolina made the statement awhile ago that because we were trying out the advisability of continuing these tax laws all tax laws up to the present time have been prima facie evidence of the law; that because we had tried them out and had found them to be all right, we write this section in here which makes a copy of this act printed by the Government Printing Office and bearing its imprint conclusive evidence of the original Internal Revenue Code in the custody of the Secretary of State. I think if that provision of the law does exist it should be corrected as we codify. I merely want to bring up these questions that I know are the subjects of concern because I appreciate the committee will contribute a great deal if they will clarify and clear up some of them.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I cannot discuss this matter intelligently, nor can any other man in this body discuss the matter intelligently, unless has been a member of the committee and knows something about it. So far as the objective is concerned, we are all for that. I am a little surprised that the lawyers of the committee, however, should bring in as exhibit 1, 35 volumes of existing law and lay those upon the table and give that as the reason we should accept a bill which contains hundreds of pages without reading it and without knowing something about it simply because we want to make the law more accessible. As I stated before, we are all for the objective of the committee. If you can simplify and codify laws, so much the better. If all the laws of the land could be written into a 1,000-page volume, we would all be much better off, but that cannot be done.

Mr. Chairman, with this bill before us today there is an effort to rewrite-and I use the word "rewrite" advisedly-all the laws affecting our Federal tax system. As pointed out by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott], not only is what you have presented in this volume to be the absolute law-not prima facie law-but also all administrative-and I emphasize that "also all administrative"—"all administrative, special, or stamp provisions of law, including the law relating to the assessment of taxes," and so forth, are included in this bill. All rules and regulations which are now law are to become a part of this new law. That is just one of the little things.

Of course, this bill will pass, but you will be back here correcting it. I call attention to that in order to point out the danger of passing legislation of this type without adequate consideration. Why make it absolute?

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. BUCK. Where does the gentleman from Michigan find anything in section 61 that refers to rules and regulations being enacted into law?

Mr. MICHENER. It says "all administrative, special, or stamp provisions of law"-

Mr. BUCK. Of law.

Mr. MICHENER. "Including the law relating to the assessment of taxes, so far as applicable, shall be extended to and made a part of this chapter."

Mr. BUCK. I think the gentleman has made that clear now by reading the entire section to the Members. We are not enacting into law any rules or regulations, merely reenacting all existing provisions of administrative, and so forth, law as it exists at the present time.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman will find in the 34 volumes before him statutes making certain rules and regulations of the department law, and by this bill you say that these statutes or laws are reenacted. The result is that some things not included in this bill are by reference made law.

I am not criticizing the committee. I feel safe in saying that my good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY! is for this bill, and is honestly for it. The gentleman from Massachusetts is a splendid member of the committee. He is a splendid legislator and businessman. He is a splendid hotel man, but he does not know anything about revision of the laws. I can go down through the roster of the committee and show you that you will find a great many persons on the committee who are splendid men in their lines, they are good legislators, but they do not know anything about revising the laws. When you come to the technical job of codifying the law it cannot be done by businessmen as businessmen and it cannot be done by physicians as physicians, or dentists as dentists, or by lawyers without experience. There are certain people who are qualified to do this kind of work. I am not qualified to codify the law, although I am a member of the bar. It takes experts to do that work.

Mr. DOUGHTON and Mr. BULWINKLE rose.

Mr. MICHENER. I should like to get through, but if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton] has a contribution to make, I should be pleased to have it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If the gentleman will look into the matter, he will find that the language he is criticizing is an exact copy of that used in section 61 of the law of 1938. It is an exact copy of what is already in the law. There is no change whatever.

Mr. MICHENER. Exactly? Mr. DOUGHTON. What would the gentleman have us do if we did not copy it exactly?

Mr. MICHENER. If you are going to codify and place all the law on the tax question in one volume, you must write every rule and every regulation having the force of law affecting the matter into that volume or you have not lessened the task of the man who wants to know what the law is or what the rules and regulations are, because if this bill makes reference to other law, you have to go to that other law just the same in order to know what all the law is.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman makes a distinction without a difference. The gentleman is straining at a gnat.

Mr. MICHENER. This same question arose when the United States Code was up for consideration. You remember that down through the years we were trying to codify the law. Several committees were set up to study the codification of the law. They worked for years, they worked for a decade with the staff their committee employed. It was a splendid staff for committee work, but the members of the staff were not qualified as experienced codifiers. Finally a bill like this was brought in and the House passed it, as you are asking that this bill be passed. It went over to the Senate and it was found the bill was so full of holes we were all ashamed that we had ever voted for it. It had the same consideration in this House now being given this measure. We should profit by experience. We have plenty of time. There is nothing to do the rest of the week. Why not put this off for a couple of days? A number of our new Members are outstanding lawyers and might be of much help in putting together these old statutes. They could at least have an opportunity to point out any errors.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Not just now.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I have been earnestly beseeching the gentleman to yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I yield for the gentleman, but then I shall have to ask for additional time.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman knows that in the code we adopted, which is prima facie evidence, and which was drafted by the legal staff of the West Publishing Co. and the Edward Thompson Co., in connection with the provisions regarding the Interstate Commerce Commission. the Federal Trade Commission, and other commissions of the Government, we gave the force and effect of law to the rules and regulations of such commissions, and that has been done in every bill that has ever passed this House.

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the gentleman. The gentleman states the West Publishing people did the work, and that is true. We tried for years to accomplish it by the means you are attempting to use here. We finally secured the experts and the work was well done and for less money.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I was one of those who got the services of the West Publishing Co. and the Edward Thompson Co.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman deserves a lot of credit, and I give it to him. He was on that committee. For years they tried to get somewhere, but everything they brought in here was so imperfect it just could not be used. The committee meant all right, but it just was not correct. Finally the committee employed experts and the code today is the result of the work of those experts.

The Committee on Revision of the Laws, of which I am a member, now has another revision of the United States Code under consideration. If I have my way about it we are not going to do the work with any committee staff, and we will not bring a revision of the laws before this House unless it is prepared by experts. It can be done just as economically by experts as it can be done by committee staffs, regardless of who they are. I am sure the Committee on Ways and Means has a splendid staff, and there is none better in the House, but they are not experts on this kind of work. They have had no experience. This matter is too important to act hastily.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee. Mr. COOPER. In direct reference to the statement made by the gentleman in regard to the present code, I may say the present Committee on Revision of the Laws took the work of this staff and included it in the present code on the internal-revenue laws. They set aside their own work and took the work of this staff. It is in there today.

Mr. MICHENER. I cannot yield further.

I have not read this bill. No one else has, except maybe one or two members of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I doubt if the chairman of that committee himself has read this entire bill through. I doubt if any other member of the committee has read it through.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If I had read it I could only have done it hurriedly, and I have not the confidence in my own reading that I have in the reading and rereading done by the staff a dozen times and the checking of this bill by the experts of the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice. Neither has the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. But-

Mr. DOUGHTON. Would the gentleman himself be satisfied with his own reading of it?

Mr. MICHENER. I do not want to yield further, Mr.

Chairman. My time is about up.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I would be willing to take the gentleman's reading of it if he would certify it is absolutely correct, I do not believe the gentleman would have confidence in his own reading, or as much confidence as he would have in the reading of our staff, who read it and reread it. The experts in the Treasury Department have read it and reread it and checked it for 6 months, and I would put that far above any reading I could do.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman concedes that no one has read the bill. I have the utmost confidence in and respect for the chairman, but why cannot we be given a few days to at least casually examine the bill? Possibly all will not read all of the bill but some will give it study.

We have gone since 1874, the gentleman from Massachusetts tells us, without rewriting this law, and then it is brought before the House and we are asked to pass a new tax law without reading it, and by unanimous consent. Of course, objection was made to passing this law by unanimous consent without reading it and without knowing what is in it. So today the matter is called up without notice and we come in here to discuss this matter which is of vital importance to every taxpayer in the country, and we are asked in the name of the taxpayer to pass the bill instanter.

Now, listen. It seems to me the American people have reached a stage where they want this Congress to proceed cautiously and carefully. In matters of this kind haste makes waste. If the American people ever gave the Congress a mandate, it is that we must know what we are doing; that we must not pass laws that we know nothing about, regardless of the recommendation of somebody down in the Treasury Department, in the Labor Department, or in any other department of the Government.

I stand squarely on the premise that this Congress itself, through its own agencies, should know what it is considering and should vote intelligently upon what is before it. I do not think it is a credit to the committee to come in here and say, "No; we have not read it; we do not know what is in it; we would not know what was in it if we did read it, so we left it to the committee clerk or staff."

This is the situation we find ourselves in. You have left it to the committee clerk or staff. I hope the committee clerk is right. I am sure he has done his best. This bill is going to pass the House. It may become a law, but when these errors are found-and errors will be found-then I hope, when they are found, the Congressional Record will record that some of us have risen on the floor and protested against this procedure, although we are heartily in favor of the objective. I hope those interpreting this law will read the statement of one gentleman of the Ways and Means Committee who says this is but a mere "compilation," that no changes have been made, that the purpose and intent was not to eliminate a word from existing law, and then I hope they will read the statement of the other Ways and Means Committee member who says it is a "codification," that there are changes, but that nothing material has been eliminated. Nothing material has been eliminated! Who determined the materiality? Did the Congress determine whether or not the elimination of a certain phrase was material? No; we left it to the committee clerk or staff, if you please, and then we put our stamp of approval on it without any knowledge whatever as to the facts. This bill may be all right. I hope so. The tax laws need clarifying more than they need codifying. I am opposed to this haste. I am opposed to this procedure. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the last observation of my distinguished friend from Michigan, I am willing for the Record to show that it is my very definite opinion that if we served notice upon every Member of the House and furnished them with a copy of this bill that 6 months from now we would vote on the bill, not a single Member of the House in that time would have read it.

I would like for the RECORD to further show that if we did undertake to read this difficult compilation of tax laws we would not know whether in it were correctly gathered all the tax laws that are contained in the 35 volumes that are now before me on this table.

It is, of course, quite impracticable in a code to include departmental regulations. We already have 86 or 87 volumes of regulations. We could not put those in a code.

My friend from Michigan evidently has not read, or else he does not accept, the statement on page 3 of the committee report to the following effect:

It makes no changes in existing law.

The gentleman asks if this is a codification. Technically it is, but actually it is not the kind of codification that we are accustomed to in our State legislatures, where the codifiers eliminate inconsistencies. To that extent this is a compilation as well as a codification, because no effort has been made to eliminate any inconsistencies in existing laws. They are all here that are still in force and effect.

Now, for my friend from Cape Cod [Mr. GIFFORD], who was so fearful that we would not protect the dear people, I can say that, in addition to precautions taken by the committee to select as agents of the Congress the best experts available, I took their report last spring and submitted it to the chairman of the tax committee of the chamber of commerce, and those of you who are familiar with the work of the United States Chamber of Commerce know that that organization has a lively interest in the tax laws of the United States. I asked that expert, during the succeeding 6 months before we would bring this up for action in the House, to check through it in his leisure time; and if he could find any error in it, speaking now, of course, for the taxpayers of the country, to bring it to my attention, and he found none. Therefore, I say, Mr. Chairman, that we are fighting windmills. This is the work of experts. We have every reason to believe that it has been well done; and if it is not well done, we would not know the difference if we debated it here for the next 6 months.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. If there is that doubt, what is the objection to making this prima facie the same as the code is

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have not expressed any doubt. My friend from Michigan expressed the doubt, and I have felt that he has no ground for doubt. We do not want this code to be prima facie evidence of the law; we want it to be the absolute law. We would not be making any substantial progress if we made it prima facie evidence of the law, because the lawyers would then have to go back to all of these volumes and take them into court and show them to the judge before the judge would be willing to rule on any claim made in a tax case.

Mr. MICHENER. You want to be sure that you will make H. R. 2762 the absolute law of the land, regardless of what the law is?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Oh, the gentleman begs the question. We state in the committee report, and we state it on good grounds, that the codification of H. R. 2762 makes no changes in existing law.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Buck].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, all these arguments that have been brought here today against the immediate adoption of this code were made in 1874. I take this opportunity to read what Senator Carpenter, then a Member of the Senate, said on the floor of the Senate when the revised statutes were being considered, and perhaps it is the answer to all the objections that have been made today:

The great benefit of it is that it gives us a starting point for the law, and if errors are discovered, as undoubtedly there will be more or less, they are to be corrected by subsequent legislation, and every man, every citizen, every lawyer, every judge, knows what he has got to start with to find what the law is. He is to start with that volume, and then subsequent legislation is all he has got to discover. Tell any common man in the complicated relations of official life, who is an internal-revenue collector, if you please, or has something to do with the distillery business, that he is supposed to know all the law on that subject, and it is to be found in 17 volumes, and he is to be indicted if he omits a single particular or mistakes a single provision, and he would as soon go to the insane asylum at once as attempt to wade through it. Now, then, he has got a start; he has got the statute of revision; and then he has got to look to subsequent legislation and nothing else, and is certain he has all the enactments on the subject before him.

I think that seems to be the entire case for the adoption of this code. [Applause].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Church].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, naturally I do not want to proceed to a vote today on a 500-page bill, when I know there have been no hearings. Certainly, there are no printed hearings available on this bill, which is of momentous importance. May I make, therefore, just one or two observations, and trust that the other body will not proceed so summarily. At the bottom of page 2 of the report of the committee I read the words of James W. Morris, Assistant Attorney General, which, in part, are as follows:

Furthermore, several of these statutory provisions have been amended by Executive order, but, since such changes have not appeared on the face of the statutes, it has been necessary to refer to the Executive orders to ascertain their nature and extent. The proposed codification will be particularly helpful in that it eliminates these sources of confusion.

It has been stated here on the floor today that this bill does not affect existing litigation. The very words of Mr. Morris embodied in this report definitely indicate that if Executive orders are in the process of litigation as to their validity, the enactment of this bill decides that question. This bill gives the Executive orders the full force and effect of absolute law. Of necessity, then, all questions as to the validity of these Executive orders are here now decided. We are being forced to take this extremely important step without being able to so much as read the bill. We are unable to consult any hearings, if any, because there are no printed hearings on this bill.

I do not question the good faith of the members of the committee. I favor the codification of laws. I believe it necessary. I was so interested in that sort of thing that I accepted membership on the Revision of Laws Committee at the last session. I am interested in that. That is a good objective. I would like to vote for this bill if I thought it had had proper consideration. I respect the judgment of every member of this committee. But it appears that the committee was limited more or less to the recommendation of 25 or 30 lawyers, appointed, if you please, none of them being the representatives of the people.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. CHURCH. If the gentleman will give me some more time, I will yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will yield the gentleman 1 or 2 additional minutes.

Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the law provided that these Executive orders should become law unless they were disagreed to by the Congress within a certain time, which was not done?

Mr. CHURCH. But does not the gentleman know there are many cases in the courts where question of legality of Executive orders is being tested? There are also questions as to the confusion of laws and the overlapping of laws involved, so that the courts are being asked to construe the intent of the law, as well as the legality of these Executive orders, and for these reasons the rights of the people are involved. This absolute law which you are asking us to enact today in this fashion will settle those questions in litigation for all time.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Reed].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Reed] is recognized for 14 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the very fine addresses by those who are apparently opposed to the codification of the revenue laws.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think possibly that statement ought to be just slightly corrected, in that at least two of the gentlemen who have made statements criticizing the report, have said on the floor that they appreciate the work that had been done, and intended to support it; not that they were definitely opposed to codification.

Mr. REED of New York. I would rather suspect from the language that we had been damned by faint praise.

It has been stated on the floor of the House that this committee was not competent, in and of itself, because of certain professions, business, or trade in which they were engaged, to pass upon legislation in this House. Personally, I resent that so far as these men are concerned. I have been a member of this committee for some time. I know that the members of the committee go into session and consider these matters in a nonpartisan way and endeavor to bring legislation to the floor of this House in such form and for such purposes as will protect the interests of the public. Everybody on the floor of this House knows that the revenue law, scattered through a host of volumes, has been perplexing and bewildering and has bedeviled the people of this country. We have had appeals coming in here for years to simplify the revenue laws.

Only last year we had a message from the President urging the enactment of a tax law and urging the simplification of the tax law. Any Member who has been in Congress very long knows that the lawyers in the country, not always having available all of these acts, write here for information in regard to them. It is a herculean job for any man to wade through this and try to correlate the amendments,

As far as the ability of the members of this committee is concerned, what do most committees do? On matters relating to engineering or what not they call in the best talent they can get. I believe the Joint Committee on Taxation has engaged as fine a lot of experts as can be found. They are experts in one definite line of legislation, namely, the revenue laws. The lawbook companies are interested in these things, of course, but when it comes to revenue law they take the very codification of these experts that we have here. They have not found errors in them. Now, for at least 3 years these experts have been working on the codification of the revenue laws. They have gone to the Department of Justice, as has been stated here. Thirty lawyers have gone over this with a fine-tooth comb. They know something about tax laws. They have gone to the Treasury Department and they have searched carefully through this work to see if there are any errors, and they report none. Now, it is about time that instead of fussing around here we take the findings of these experts and give the people something that they want; that is, a codification that will clarify, bring into one place the laws relating to revenue. Every lawyer will throw up his hat for joy when this act is passed.

They say no hearings have been held. Why, there have been hearings on every item of the revenue law on the books that is now being codified. We are not enacting any new law.

We are here codifying laws that already exist that have been passed by the representatives of a sovereign people.

Let us for the sake of illustration take the estate-tax law alone. To find all the laws dealing with estate taxes a lawyer must wade through the following volumes-and I ask unanimous consent to insert this list in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from New York that he will have to secure that consent in the House.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the Chairman.

Why play into the hands of a few tax lawyers whose retainers in some cases run as high as $50,000 before they even start to work? They, of course, like to have it so that no one is infallible on tax matters except themselves, for it means money to them; but why milk the public by complicating this tax situation through our inability to act upon the work of experts who are worthy of our confidence?

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate at this point in my remarks the names of the men who have passed upon this codification and who have told Congress that the work is well done and is accurate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from New York that he will have to secure that permission in the House

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the Chairman.

With the passage of this act we shall have performed a monumental work in the interest of the taxpayers of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the laws of the United States hereinafter codified and set forth as a part of this act under the heading "Internal Revenue Title" are hereby enacted into law.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the bill and that the bill be not printed in the RECORD, for, as I understand, it would cost between $14,000 and $15,000 to print it, and copies of the bill are available to every Member of the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, this is the second reading, or, really, the first time the bill is to be read, and there will be no further reading of the bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; the gentleman is correct.
Mr. MICHENER. I shall not object, but I do want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that we are passing this bill without even having it read. The gentleman from New York suggested certain men in the country were for it. We do not know who they are. He said they told him about it and he wants to put their names in the RECORD, but we do not know who they are.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, let us get the record straight. What I asked permission to put in the RECORD was the names of the experts in the various departments who checked our work and who cooperated with us.

The gentleman from New York said Mr. MICHENER. some of them were experts and that they are for it, but the House has not got that information. The House does not know who they are.

Mr. REED of New York. It is a matter of public record who these men are.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman feel that even if the bill were read it would accomplish any real purpose?

Mr. MICHENER. No. As I said a moment ago, I shall not object.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Then why did the gentleman call attention to it if he thought it would not help?

Mr. MICHENER. It is perfectly all right with me to pass it without printing.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill (H. R. 2762) to consolidate and codify the internal-revenue laws of the United States back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BEAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2762) to consolidate and codify the internalrevenue laws of the United States, had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the

Mr. DOUGHTON. On that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the veas and navs.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 350, nays 16, not voting 66, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Doughton]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, of course, the gentleman has the right under the rules of the House to revise his remarks. In view of the fact we have not been able to have the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barron] extended in the RECORD, I feel I must object.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman under my reservation.

Mr. RAYBURN. I wonder if we cannot come to an agreement until a more definite one may be reached. Frankly, I am hopeful that the Joint Committee on Printing in the near future will bring in some kind of a resolution with reference to matters that may go in the RECORD. I know that extraneous matter cannot be put in the RECORD without unanimous consent.

May we not have an agreement for the present that Members may be allowed to extend their own remarks in the RECORD? It seems to me that is fair to all the Members of the House. In the Senate they do not have to extend their remarks in the RECORD, because they can take all the time necessary to complete their views. The only way a Member of the House who may be yielded 5 minutes can get his thoughts in the RECORD is to extend his own remarks in the RECORD. He may want to mail those back to his constituents. Frankly, I have never been in favor of indiscriminately extending remarks in the RECORD and putting in matters that did not occur on the floor of the House or language that did not come from the Member himself.

If we carry on this policy of not allowing Members of the House to extend their own remarks it is going to be very embarrassing to practically all the Members of the House. I am not going to insist, but I am wondering if for the present, when an objection is going to be made to matters that are not the words of the Member in an extension or did not happen on the floor, we cannot agree that extensions of the Member's own remarks may be permitted?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman think an article by a Member such as the article written by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barton] is the Member's own remarks? They are over his signature, and he is the author of the words. Would that be included?

Mr. RAYBURN. No.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Then we cannot reach an agreement; and, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the call of committees be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker and Members, we have just passed a very praiseworthy bill providing for the consolidation and codification of the internal-revenue laws. was positive need for this codification and I am happy to note that we have passed the bill because thereby the Government, the public, lawyers, and courts will be greatly benefited. It often took a Sabbath day's journey to find or to seek out internal-revenue statutes. Dozens of volumes often had to be examined before one could find a sequence of related statutes.

I note that a great deal of thought and many helpful suggestions were made by the Department of Justice. James W. Morris, Assistant Attorney General in charge of internal revenue, made many splendid contributions. I know of no more efficient or sagacious public servant than my friend James W. Morris.

Others who are worthy of praise in this work are Mr. Preston C. Alexander, chairman of the Chief Counsel's committee, and Mr. Wallace Streater, of the Interpretative Division of the Treasury Department. It is men of the type of Jim Morris and his colleagues who make Government work worth while. They are indeed shining lights in the Department of Justice. They shall have our eternal gratitude.

Incidentally, I desire to recommend to the Members of the House the reading of the decision made by James W. Morris, of the Department of Justice, on the question of taxation of Government bondholders and employees, and his fine statement concerning the immunity ruling in connection with the sixteenth amendment. A more able or more constructive document has never come from the pen of any Government official.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, during the World War we increased the acreage in production of farm products by 50,000,000 acres. Following the World War horses and mules were in many instances supplanted by trucks and tractors, which eliminated a market for corn and hay from between twenty and thirty million acres; at the same time we have lost export markets; consequently, we have had a surplus of farm production and in recent years we have been trying to get the farmers to take some of this surplus land out of the production of commercial crops. Mr. Speaker, I wish to read a memorandum on an amendment issued on January 10 by the A. A. A. to its soil-conservation plan:

The rate for planting trees in the east central region is $7.50 per acre, and the rate for seeding legumes is $1.50 per acre.

It is believed that this will be the prevailing rate throughout the country, provided, however, that the planting of trees (and shrubs) has been approved as a practice for which payments will be made in the particular State and county in which the farm may be

This is going to be a great boon, Mr. Speaker, to wildlife, and all sportsmen and conservationists all over the country should welcome this new addition to our farm plan to pay the farmer $7.50 an acre to plant trees or shrubs that will improve the habitat for wildlife and $1.50 an acre for planting legumes or lespedeza or any of those things that will make a food supply for game. I am sure the Members of the House will be glad to pass this information on to the farmers of their respective districts because this is a great opportunity for the farmers to get paid for doing something that will help others as well as themselves.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I have just placed in the hopper a bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 insofar as its provisions affect cotton. This bill is introduced for the purpose of making it available for the study of the members of the House Committee on Agriculture and the Members of this body. I have gone over the bill with considerable care. While I am not entirely satisfied with all its provisions, in the main it has a great many commendable features. I ask the Members of the House interested in cotton, as one of the commodities produced in this country that are important to all walks of life, to give this bill their attention.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize any other Member at this juncture without the consent of the gentleman having special orders.

For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Peterson]?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, I prefer that the gentleman withhold his unanimous-consent request until I have made my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Peterson], is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise my own remarks. I am asking not to extend my remarks in the RECORD but to revise them.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I may say that under the rules of the House the gentleman has the right to revise his remarks. but he does not have the right to extend them.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the gentleman has the right to revise his remarks.

PROBLEMS OF THE AVERAGE AMERICAN FARM FAMILY

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I shall address myself this afternoon to the problems of the average farm family of America.

During the last 6 years the Congress of the United States has made available for the benefit of the farmers of this Nation appropriations averaging approximately $1,000,000,000 annually; in other words, during the last 6 years a total of approximately $6,000,000,000 has been made available by the United States Government for the benefit primarily of the farm population of this Nation.

This total sum may be divided into three parts. We have made available approximately $3,000,000,000 in direct benefits to the farmers. In addition, we have made available approximately $1,000,000,000 in regular appropriations to the Department of Agriculture, the benefits of whose operations are supposed to accrue to the farmers of America. Further, there has been made available of the $10,000,000,000 or $12,000,000,000 of relief funds appropriated by the Congress not less than from $1,500,000,000 to $2,000,000,000 to the farmers of this Nation. This makes a total of approximately $6,000,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the time is now ripe for the Members of Congress and the people of America to take stock of our activities and see what lasting, permanent benefits have accrued to the 7,000,000 farm families of America by virtue of the expenditure of the stupendous sums which have been made available to them by our great country. I have official facts that have been prepared by those to whom has been entrusted the administration of the laws of this country as they pertain to the farmers, as well as figures prepared by the Census Bureau, showing that during this same period, although the number of farm families in America has increased, the number of tenant farmers in America has been continually increasing and, according to the word of the President of the United States, during this period the increase in the number of tenant farmers has been approximately 40,000 annually.

Further, we find that the number of mortgages on farms owned and operated by the farmer himself has continuously increased year after year. However, there is one group among whom the number of farm mortgages has continuously decreased. During the period from 1930 to 1935, which are the latest figures we have available, there has been a decrease in the number of mortgages of absentee landlords of approximately 400,000.

To sum this up, Mr. Speaker, we find that while this $6,000,000,000 has no doubt been of material benefit to the present-day needs of the farm families of America, insofar as permanent benefits that have accrued to the farmers are concerned, the benefits of these vast expenditures have gone primarily to the absentee landlords of America. The poor little individual owner-operator farmers of this Nation, who earn their own living by the sweat of their brows, digging their living out of the soil day after day, have received virtually no permanent benefit from these vast expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the day is at hand when it is the duty of this Congress to take stock of these emergency measures and to see whether or not we are really enacting legislation which is going to cure permanently the basic problem of that group upon whose shoulders lies the future prosperity of this Nation, the farmers themselves. In doing this, it is necessary that we recount briefly the history of the land policies and of the independent farm families of this Nation.

America is known as a land of opportunity. Why is it known as a land of opportunity?

When you sift it all down, the fundamental reason for this Nation being recognized throughout the world as the land of opportunity is because it has offered to distressed mankind throughout the world an opportunity to flee from the yoke of tyranny and despotism and oppression and come here and in our boundaries find a little piece of free soil where he could rear his family in freedom and independence as he earned for himself and his family the necessities of life.

From the day that Columbus and his little brave crew of men sighted the first soil of America and the great cry of "Land! Land!" went up from that crew down to the present day there has always prevailed in this Nation, whether written upon the statute books or not, the fundamental proposition of free land for free labor, and when you have studied thoroughly and completely the fundamental principles, the very essence of Americanism, you will find, Mr. Speaker, that the free farm home, occupied by free citizens, earning their honest living by the sweat of their brow, is the cornerstone of our free institutions.

Now, we have had depressions—numerous depressions—in the history of this country, as we all know, and you will find upon studying the history of this country that in virtually every instance up until the last 30 years those depressions have been ended by those who have been without employment, who have lost their homes, who have lost their means of existence, who have lost the means of supplying the necessities of life for themselves and their families, getting in their little covered wagons and moving out farther into the vast public domain and there securing for themselves a new free home where they could again enjoy the fruits of their labor and provide for themselves and their families the necessities of life.

This fact is recognized by all who have studied American history, and virtually in every instance our depressions have been ended by a process of this nature.

At the beginning of the present century virtually all of the public domain suitable for farm purposes had gone into private ownership. An interesting fact is that during the period from 1910 until 1920 we find that the only 10-year period in the history of our country where agricultural products occupied a position above parity as related to industrial products, yet during that identical period the mortgages on the farms of this Nation increased from over $3,000,000,000 to around $7,500,000,000.

Immediately after the war period, when this Nation began to readjust itself to normal conditions, we find that many of those who in the wild, inflationary period had seen fit to mortgage their farms hoping to obtain for themselves a better economic position-we find these people up against the proposition of being unable to meet their obligations, and what was the result? There was no new domain, there was no unexplored territory, there were no public farm lands available to them, with the result that the finance companies began to foreclose their farm mortgages and these poor devils and their families were thrown upon society without means of support—the first time that such a condition had prevailed within this great Nation of ours. It was a new problem for the American people, a problem foreign to any that had ever confronted us before, and from that period to this there has prevailed in this Nation among the agricultural group a condition that might be described as chaotic.

Now, what has been the effort to remedy this condition? We find that many well-intentioned public leaders have attempted to grapple with this grave problem in our Nation, but in almost every instance they have approached the problem, not from the American angle, Mr. Speaker, but from the angle of socialism and communism, and it is easy to understand why they have approached it from that angle. because if you will recall, during the last three-quarters of a century our great educational institutions have bloomed into maturity, and in virtually every instance before an educator was considered completely educated, he was supposed to have studied in Moscow or in Berlin or in Vienna or in Paris or in some other nation at the feet of educators who knew nothing of Americanism, but whose whole background was steeped in a civilization centuries behind the great American civilization that our foreparents had built up. Then as the boys and girls of this Nation, whose parents had grown rich under the great system that we have here, were sent to college, they went to colleges where the professors knew nothing of Americanism, but did know all of the details of socialism and communism.

And, of course, they were taught nothing else, and when they came back and occupied positions of prominence, and these problems arose, it has been only natural that these well-intentioned American citizens should attempt to apply these doctrines to American problems. Mr. Speaker, the natural result has been the enactment of laws by this Congress which run contrary to the American ideal—the enactment of measures which do not meet the wishes, the requirements, the needs of the average American citizen.

And so today we find that, in spite of the fact that we have appropriated these huge sums of the taxpayers' money, still the problem of the average farmer of America confronts us as emphatically as it did 6 years ago. What are we going to do about this thing? Are we going to continue forever to spend huge sums of money beyond the income of this Nation, hoping that such course can go on forever and ever? If so, it is a foolish hope, because we all know that the end must come some day. Again, are we going to sit quietly by and permit that end to come and, when it does, find the foundation stone of Americanism shattered into tenantry and serfdom? If so, there is no hope for free government. Mr. Speaker, it is absurd, positively absurd, to think that free institutions can continue to thrive and prosper when over two-thirds of the farm families are tenants and serfs. The only way that we can hope to preserve our free institutions is by the Congress of the United States of America again placing a sufficient number of producers of raw products of this Nation and their families in an economic position so that it is to their advantage to preserve free institutions. It is time, therefore, for us to lay aside these communistic, these socialistic programs which lead only to despotism, to the rule of tyranny, to the rule of anarchy, to bureaucratic control, and return to the simple, fundamental principles of Americanism and reestablish our independent farm units in their basic positions as the cornerstones of our institutions.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Does the gentleman mean to imply that the legislation that we have passed along agricultural lines is leading us to that position?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I mean to imply that, although, no doubt, many very beneficial things have come out of the legislative program that has been adopted, if we stop with that program alone, without reestablishing independent farm units in my district and your district and throughout the country in a position of economic independence so that they can enjoy their freedom and liberty, this great form of government which we enjoy shall crumble and decay.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I challenge the gentleman's statement that the only people who have enjoyed the benefit of this legislation are the landlords. The whole country has enjoyed it, and we today would have 5-cent cotton and 25-cent wheat if it had not been for the legislation passed in this Congress. I do not think the gentleman has the right to indict the work that we have done. I think it has been most beneficial. I agree with the gentleman that the independent-

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield any further to the gentleman. I wish it clearly understood that I am not indicting any legislation that might have been passed by the distinguished gentleman from Oregon or any other Member of this House. As I said in the beginning, much material benefit has accrued to the farm population of this Nation by virtue of these expenditures, but I say further that these expenditures are not sufficient, and, further, that it is absolutely essential for this Nation to again return to American principles of legislation and reestablish the independent farm unit of this Nation on a self-supporting basis if we hope to preserve our free institutions.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. How would the gentleman accomplish what he is saying?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I am coming to that feature now. Since I have been in Congress I have initiated a program designed to accomplish that result—not perfect, I admit, but it is in harmony with the fundamental principles of Americanism, and, as I see it, there is but one way to approach this problem in a sane and sensible economic manner and that is to take the old free homestead policies of America, which have resulted in such tremendous benefit to all classes of this Nation, and amend them so as to make them apply to the present needs of the country.

Mr. KELLER. How will the gentleman do it?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I appreciate the gentleman's asking that question. I have reintroduced this year, and I am proud to say that I have been joined in this by both of our distinguished Senators from the State of Georgia, who introduced an identical measure in the other body, a program which will accomplish this result, and to me the process appears comparatively simple. If this Nation, instead of spending huge sums of money in temporary relief or, I might say, in addition to spending huge sums of money in temporary relief, which, according to all the facts in the case, are not giving permanent relief-if we will proceed at the same time toward liquidating the farm mortgage indebtedness of the little independent owners of this country, placing them back in possession of their homesteads, free of debt, with the condition that they cannot be further mortgaged, with that one stroke we will have attained for each of these farm units a position of economic independence.

Now, I want it understood that I do not propose to force a program of this nature on the American people. If you have not read the measure which we are advocating, I would like to have you get a copy and read it. It is only four pages long, as compared with the bills that have been brought in heretofore containing scores and scores of pages. After I have read them time after time I was not able to understand them, and I do not believe you folks were able to understand them either.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I got the impression from what the gentleman said that legislation which we have passed during the past 6 years to coddle the farmer with one subsidy after another has tended to weaken and in many instances to destroy his spirit of thrift and independence?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I mean to leave that impression particularly, but I do mean to leave the impression that that legislation has not done anything to regain for that farm unit its position of economic independence which I am sure my distinguished colleague from Tennessee on the other side of the aisle is so anxious to see regained for the farmers in his congressional district.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I cannot yield further at present. This is a serious problem. It is one that has not even been broached by this House on this floor. I am proud to say that during the last term of Congress, the bill which I am now advocating was passed by my committee unanimously. It was never brought to the floor for action.

I propose that we should take a small portion of the funds that we are using in emergency relief and proceed to solve the problem of the little independent owner and operator of farms, who is struggling against an insurmountable burden, and place those farm units again in a position of economic independence. That is the foundation of our whole political, economic, civil, and social structure. The farm home, occupied by free and independent citizens, is the framework around which our whole civilization is built.

The President in his message of February 16, 1937, warned the Congress that this unit is vanishing in America, and he states that—

When fully half the total farm population of the United States no longer can feel secure, when millions of our people have lost their roots in the soil, action to provide security is imperative, and will be generally approved.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is time for this Congress to begin to use some common sense. I have voted against every one of these lump-sum appropriation relief measures, because to me it is only driving our Nation and our people deeper and deeper into the abyss of despair and will finally mean complete rejection of all liberties and rights and benefits we enjoy under our free institutions. [Applause.]

Now, I appreciate the applause coming from the other side of the aisle, and I take advantage of this opportunity to remind my Republican friends that their party grew into its greatness and gained control of the political affairs of this Nation primarily on account of the fact that there was written into the platform of the Republican Party of 1860 a plank which would accomplish the identical results that I am pleading for here today.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I do not yield now. I welcome the cooperation of my friends on the other side of the aisle, and I wish to present to them a copy of that plank in their platform of 1860 and read it for their benefit, because I feel that possibly some of you might have overlooked it in recent years, during the time that you have failed to help solve this problem of the average farmer of America.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Not now. This is the plank in your platform:

We protest against any sale or alienation to others of the public lands held by actual settlers, and against any view of the free homestead policy which regards settlers as paupers or supplicants for public bounty, and we demand passage by Congress of a complete and satisfactory homestead measure which has already passed the House.

If you will study the history of this Nation you will find that that clause in your platform is the primary cause for the ascendancy of the Republican Party in this country, and the enactment of that into legislation in 1862 is the primary cause for the great progress that this country made for 75 years, and the fact that the Republican Party failed to continue along that pathway is the primary cause for our great Democratic Party rising and again subjecting you into a position of minority in this country.

Mr. Speaker, this proposition is dear to my heart. It is dear to the heart of every American citizen. "Oh," you say, "it will cost too much." I see some of you gentlemen here, the watchdogs of the Treasury, who say that such a program would cost too much. The United States Government today, under the Farm Security Administration, according to figures presented to me a few days ago, is now buying, with public money, farms for certain individual farmers and paying approximately $5,000 per farm unit for them. The size of these farms is approximately 150 acres. To do that you have had to set up vast new agencies with additional officials, hundreds of them. Under the program that I propose you do not have to have any new agencies or any new officials. The cost will be much less than one-half of what you are now spending.

All in the world you have to do is to go to the General Land Office, permit the General Land Office-which is one of the oldest agencies of the Federal Government—to go onto the market and buy farm mortgages. Then instead of going into the competitive land-buying business as we are now doing, which forces the price of land up, you will be going into the competitive mortgage-buying business, which will force the price of mortgages down. The size of the average farm mortgage in America today is only a little over $3,000. Suppose you do pay 100 cents on the dollar; you would still save $2,000 on every unit. The size of those units is virtually the same as the size of the units that are being bought today by the Farm Security Administration. In my State of Georgia they are paying from $2,500 to $3,000 of the taxpayers' money per farm unit. Under my program, with the average mortgage indebtedness being only approximately $1,100 or $1,200, you could set up twice the farm families for the same cost that you are setting up one farm family under the present program. Under my program you would be reducing the debt over $3,000, whereas under the present program you are only adding $3,000 to the indebtedness.

Consider, for instance—and it is liberal to estimate this way-that the average farm unit under this program of liquidating farm mortgages can be brought about for approximately $2,000. We have recently appropriated, or will soon appropriate, approximately $800,000,000 in direct relief to be expended between now and July 1. By July 1, I dare say there will not be 1,000 families in this Nation upon those relief rolls who will be in any better economic position than they are today. What could be done under this simple program I am urging? With this $800,000,000 under that program you could establish 400,000 farm families, or approximately 2,000,-000 American citizens, in a position of permanent economic independence where they could work out for themselves their own salvation and secure for themselves the necessities of life without any bureaucratic control from Washington or any other centralized point.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. How would the gentleman purchase this land?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I would not purchase the land.

Mr. KELLER. How would the gentleman put the people on it?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I would purchase the farm mortgage. There are many of them in my district and in the gentleman's district—perhaps the gentleman does not have them, but I do.

Mr. KELLER. I have plenty of them.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. The little individual farm unit, farmers and their families who—it might be due to their own extravagance, it might be due to the adversities of life—I know not what, but for some reason—it might have been due to some slick-tongued financial wizard who sold them an automobile and then talked them into mortgaging their farm to pay for it—but in any event whose farm has become mortgaged.

History shows that he does not pay off the farm mortgage. They have never done it in the history of the world—as a rule—and they are not going to do it from now on unless the Government steps in and pays them off in one way or another. That poor devil is up against an impossible proposition. Everything that he makes, if he continues ownership of that farm—the profit on it—has got to go in interest and in sinking fund. Why, the interest alone on the farm mortgages of this Nation and the other farm debts under normal conditions is $800,000,000 annually, according to figures I have here from the Department of Agriculture. Suppose that man has a 100-acre farm. He is up against an impossible proposition.

He must do one of two things: He must continue to be an owner-operator and let everything he makes, all his profits, go to pay interest on that obligation, or he must let his farm be foreclosed and must become a tenant, a serf. There is no other way out for that man under normal conditions.

This is a problem for society. There is not one man like this in America but there are millions like him in America, and nothing yet has been done by act of Congress to alleviate their condition. I propose, instead of all of this new-fangled stuff here that you do not know anything about, and I do not, either, to permit the General Land Office to buy that farm mortgage. Suppose it is a 100-acre farm and that the owner owes $1,000 on it, I would let the Land Office make a proposition to the financial institution, whether it is a Federal land bank, a private citizen, a private bank, or whatever it might be, and buy that farm mortgage as cheap as it can be bought with a provision that under no circumstances can they pay more than the actual value of the farm. After they have bought it they can make the proposition to the man who lives there that now the Government, the Congress of the United States, society, if you please, recognizes his impossible position, recognizes that his purchasing power is gone, recognizes that he not only cannot support his family but cannot buy the processed goods of this Nation, recognizes that he is the greatest purchasing agent of the processed goods of this Nation that there is on earth, and recognizes that his purchasing power is gone, so we are going to set him up not only in a position of economic independence but in a position where his family can earn a livelihood in freedom and independence. It will go back to the General Land Office and become a part of the public domain. Then we will give him a prior right to homestead that piece of land under the Homestead Act of 1862, with the further provision that if he homesteads it he can grow on it what he pleases, do with it what he pleases, be a free, independent agent, he and his family, but that he cannot mortgage it or encumber

In other words, society is going to throw a cloak of protection around you, so that your farm, the means of livelihood not only for you but your wife and those poor little children of yours, if you are not in a position to make a living for yourself, may be saved so that your family can make a living on that soil, and we will protect them while they do it and protect them in the enjoyment of the fruits of their labor. Does not the gentleman think that is pretty good legislation?

Mr. KELLER. I think your sympathies are fine. I have not gone into the matter sufficiently to know whether it is at all practicable.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I regret that the gentleman has not studied the free homestead laws of this Nation, because I will tell him that in his district and throughout this Nation as a whole millions and millions of farms have been made available to the farm families of this Nation under their provisions.

In 1862, when this identical piece of legislation was being discussed on the floor, the question arose as to whether limitations should be placed preventing the farms from being sold, encumbered, or mortgaged. There was a vast domain. There were millions of unexplored acres. There are 2,000,000,000 acres of land in America. Millions of those acres had not been explored in 1862. No one could dream of or visualize the time when all of this public domain would go into private ownership. So when a Member rose on the floor of Congress and began to talk about restrictions so that the farms could not be encumbered, he was laughed out of court or, at least, was not seriously considered.

I can fully appreciate that fact. But now, Mr. Speaker, we are up against that proposition, are we going to completely lay aside the American proposition of free land for free labor? If we are going to now or hereafter reject the proposition of giving the opportunity to distressed human beings of getting a piece of free soil whereby they may live in freedom and independence while they work out their own salvation. The only other alternative is despotism, socialism, or tyranny. There can be no other answer.

Mr. KELLER. I sympathize entirely with what the gentleman is saying with reference to making it impossible for foreclosure. I think that is a fine idea.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Did not the gentleman vote for the Farm Security Administration bill?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Why does he object to my proposition? Has the gentleman read those contracts which they get when they buy those farms?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. There is the case of William J. Langsley, of Jasper, Ala. I made a study of that gentleman. He mortgaged himself to the extent of $4,500. He has 40 years to pay it out, and he is a man, according to the newspapers, 59 years old. When he pays it all out, when he pays up every obligation, he will be 99 years of age. The only hope he can have to enjoy his farm free of debt is to take it to heaven with him.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Not now. If the gentleman will read it further, he will find, if that man moves a fence, places a terrace, or drives his mules to church on Sunday with his family contrary to the specific permission of the bureaucrats here in Washington, they can declare his contract null and void and throw him off for any pretense. Yet you say we have made an independent unit of him.

Mr. Speaker, it is a farce. I must admit this first example was in the great State of Alabama. You will find, further, that that particular man could have bought a farm anyhow. He had several hundred dollars a year in pension money coming to him from the Government. In addition, the first year they paid to him four or five hundred dollars for doing certain building work. If the Government is going to take every farmer who is in such desperate condition and buy a farm unit for him, then turn around and appropriate money to keep it up so that he can pay off the farm debt, and that is exactly what we do. Why is it not much better, more sane, and using greater common sense to get to the bottom of this thing and liquidate the farm-mortgage indebtedness from the bottom on up?

Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the President of the United States stated in this House that it was up to Congress to solve all these problems. It is up to us now, and the duty falls on us. The question is, Are we going to continue in a haphazard manner to lay aside any serious effort to again reestablish the foundation to our American free Government by creating independent farm units and putting these farmers in a position of economic independence instead of fooling around with these untried, fanciful theories that are leading us deeper and deeper into the abyss of despair, or are you going along with the two distinguished Senators from Georgia, myself, and others who are supporting this piece of legislation which will go a long way toward solving permanently the basic farm problems of this Nation?

I sincerely trust this piece of legislation will be reported by my committee and that the Rules Committee will grant us a rule so that it can be brought before the membership of the House, where every Member will be given ample opportunity to consider and study every angle of the matter. Let us work together to get a permanent solution of this problem that will reestablish our Nation and place us again in the position of normal prosperity. [Applause 1] position of normal prosperity. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the legislative program of the day, and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the special orders heretofore made, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes to answer the extension of remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow] entitled "What Is the Matter With New England?" At the end of his remarks the gentleman asked the New England newspapers to please copy. I suggest they wait until I answer the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow]. I shall entitle my remarks "What Is the Matter With Congressman Ludlow?"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the special orders heretofore made, she may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Hill] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes at the conclusion of the 20 minutes allotted me.

The SPEAKER. Under the practice heretofore indulged in by the House, inasmuch as there is another gentleman to follow the gentleman from Washington, the Chair is loath to put that request unless it meets with the approval of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Van Zandt]. Will the gentleman from Washington submit his request at the conclusion of his remarks?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to ask permission to address the House so early in the session, as it has been my observation during the seven sessions I have served here that those who talk the oftenest, the loudest, and the longest wield the least influence in this body. But when on Monday last my simple request to extend my own remarks in the Congressional Record and include therein a 10-minute talk I made on the preceding Saturday over the National Broadcasting System was objected to by the minority floor leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin], my only recourse was to secure time on the floor of this House. Members of this body are fully acquainted with the reason for this objection, but that the people of this Nation may know the tactics adopted by the opposition in this session, I will state the facts.

In the first place, let me say that it has been an invariable custom in the House to concede unanimous consent to any Member to extend his own remarks spoken over the radio. Excerpts from newspapers and magazines have often been objected to. Congressman Bruce Barton, for whom I have a high regard, and with whom I serve on the Committee on Indian Affairs, had published in Collier's an eight-page political article entitled: "After Roosevelt, Then What?"

He is now engaged more or less in a speaking tour of the East, presumably in behalf of his own candidacy for the Presidency in 1940. Last week, during his absence, one of his Republican colleagues requested unanimous consent to extend his own remarks and include therein this eight-page political article by Congressman Barton. This was objected to by Congressman Buck, of California, because of its being a long magazine article. As a result, my request to insert my own brief remarks, which were nonpolitical, was objected to by the leader of the minority. And he or his lieutenants have persistently continued that policy and threaten to continue it indefinitely. These are the facts, and I leave it to fair-minded citizens of this country to pass judgment in this matter. That the privileges of the Congressional Record have been abused cannot be successfully refuted; and I well remember the facetious remark of an intelligent and witty constituent of mine who had been "fed up" on much of the worthless material that finds its way into that ponderous publication. Said he on my first trip to Washington in 1933: "The first thing I want you to do when you get down there is to extend your remarks in the RECORD and include therein the Encyclopedia Britannica so we may have it free!" However, there is no valid reason for objecting to speeches made by Members outside the Chamber especially when they deal with current legislation and are nonpolitical, so here I am going to insert the speech that I asked to have inserted in an extension of my remarks.

The purpose of all taxes should be to provide Government with the necessary funds——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts rose.

Mr. HILL. I am sorry, but you cannot object to this.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I certainly can object to it. Mr. HILL. To carry out its functions of protecting its citi-

Mr. HILL. To carry out its functions of protecting its citizens, safeguarding their inalienable rights, and developing their opportunities for progress, success, and happiness.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Regular order, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman is out of order. Under the rules of the House, the gentleman is not supposed to read from a manuscript.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman is reading his own remarks.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I do not care.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the gentleman is reading his own remarks, Mr. Speaker, I submit that is in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Pace). The Chair believes the gentleman is within the rules of the House.

Mr. HH.L. I wish no more interruptions, please, so I can finish in my 20 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on his point of order?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order under the rules of the House and is not supposed to read his remarks in the Well of the House. I ask for a ruling.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has been provided with a copy of the rules of the House and refers to rule XXX, which reads:

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any Member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Mr. HILL. Is this going to be taken out of my time, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will not be taken out of the time of the gentleman.

The Chair is of the opinion that under this rule the question of whether or not the gentleman from Washington shall be permitted to proceed to read his own remarks must be submitted to the House.

The question is on permitting the gentleman from Washington to proceed to read his own remarks.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Schafer of Wisconsin) there were—ayes 15, noes 3.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is no quorum present. I believe that when the gentleman is making a political speech attacking the Republican Party he should have more than 18 Members present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order so the gentleman may proceed to deliver his political speech to the 18 Members of the House who are present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws his point of order. The gentleman from Washington may proceed.

Mr. HILL. Taxes, to be just and equitable, must be based on ability to pay and benefits received. When thus levied, and when wisely expended, no patriotic citizen should be unwilling to pay his fair share to carry on the Government in a democracy like ours.

It is far wiser to carry on the legitimate functions of government by means of taxation than by borrowing and issuing interest-bearing bonds. Both the taxpayer who pays the bill and his servant, the county, State, or Federal official, who is charged with the prudent spending of the money, will be less prodigal with these funds when unlimited demands on the future are prohibited, the large sums wasted in interest are saved, and the political power of unscrupulous Shylocks is curbed. A graduated income tax is the most equitable, based as it is on the ability to pay and adjusted according to the benefits received. Does not the Government provide the incomes or present the opportunities for private incomes?

A tax on consumption, a sales tax, too often violates the principle of ability to pay. Moreover, it decreases the purchasing power of the great mass of people, thereby decreasing the national income, whereas the aim of economists and high Government officials is to increase the national income from $60,000,000,000 to $80,000,000,000. The flow of money in the economic body is as necessary and vital as the normal circulation of the blood in the human body. This can be accomplished not by taking from those whose wages are far below standard through a tax on their food, wearing apparel, and shelter, but rather by furnishing them permanent jobs at good wages through Government employment when private industry fails, neglects, or refuses so to do. Not only is it the function and duty of government to provide adequate relief for work purposes during these winter months, but it must enter upon a permanent program of public work projects so as to take up the slack, as it is sure to come in years ahead. The United States can well afford to study and follow the wise leadership of the Scandinavian lands as outlined in a book entitled "The Northern Countries in World Economy."

There is another field in which the Federal Government can wisely spend. This is along educational lines. As a teacher for many years in our public schools I am sincerely and heartily in favor of generous Federal aid to education. We have not only erected a splendid edifice of government of which we are justly proud but it is our privilege and duty to maintain and protect it against the raids of communism, fascism, and nazi-ism; also from the greed and selfishness too often characteristic of some of our most vociferous patrioteers. The best weapon against all these subversive forces is public opinion—not that fostered by newspaper propaganda or selfseeking investigating committees, but based upon an intelligent study and exposition of all the fallacies of all these modern "isms." Our boys and girls, our young men and women, all of them, must have access to all the facts and data available; the supervision of intelligent and sincere instructors, and the inalienable right of American citizens to choose for themselves the methods of solving their problems and those of the country in which they live.

I believe in an adequate defense for our country, especially in these serious times when madmen are at the helm in so many foreign countries. Our ship of state will need cool heads and courageous hearts in the coming years. I am, however, unalterably opposed to the building of costly superdreadnaughts to cruise the seven seas in another futile attempt to "make the world safe for democracy." I am far more interested in making the United States safe for democracy and a fit place in which to live and rear our children. The millions wasted on such an armed program leading to foreign entanglements can better be spent on alleviating intolerable conditions at home and making available one of the most essential elements of national defense—an intelligent, enlightened, and patriotic citizenry which no outside force on the face of the earth can conquer. We are all quite familiar with the poverty and unemployment situation about us; it is both tragic and threatening. Temporary relief measures are mandatory. But a more permanent program is essential in the educational field. Three quarters of a million children in the United States have no schooling. About two and a half million children of school age are so handicapped that they need special facilities. One-third of the children of school age do not have the full school year, many of them having only from 2 to 5 months.

All this in our land of wonderful historic achievements. All this in our country of magnificient power and wealth. All this in our land of limitless opportunities.

We boast of our splendid heritage, of our wonderful opportunities, of our boundless natural resources. They are worthy of praise and our best efforts. But let us cherish a greater pride and a more lasting interest in our greatest and best national resource—our boys and girls—the men and women of America's temorrow.

That is the end of my radio talk.

The policy of petty obstruction and the lack of constructive criticism on the part of the Republican leadership both in the country at large and here in the Congress have been quite evident since the recent election. The wine of temporary success has gone to their heads. They speak immoderately and act quite foolishly. You need not take my word for it. Read the sound criticism and advice given the opposition by so seasoned and conservative a writer as David Lawrence in his Star column under the heading "Obstruction Tactics May Turn Tide; New Deal Opponents Attack, But Offer No Alternatives." How deadly true this has been from the first week of the session. Biting, sarcastic criticism of the President's statesmanlike annual message, but not one word of constructive suggestion. They would balance the Budget but where would they begin-not surely on their own pet projects and on long-standing Republican bureaucrats. They, with reactionary Democrats led by the late lamented-I might say lamentable-ex-chairman of the Rules Committee, defeated the reorganization bill urged by platforms of Presidents of both parties for the past twoscore years, which could have been so shaped as to effect great economies in the executive departments. They ridiculed the President's Jackson Day speech, one that shows conclusively that Franklin D. Roosevelt has his face turned toward the east, toward the dawn of the day when Progressives, regardless of past party affiliations, will, for the purpose of self-protection but chiefly to make our splendid heritage of the past 150 years serve the men and women of today in modern terms and in such a way as to render the sentiments expressed in the Declaration of Independence a living and breathing spirit to bless the America of today. I have long cherished the hope of a new party alinement. I have no dislike for the conservatives of the old school. They are genial, intelligent men and their motives are above suspicion. But they do not belong to the Democratic Party of today. They should train and follow through with the reactionary Republicans whose ideas and ideals are similar to theirs. We who believe in the ideas and ideals of the New Deal and have followed the essential principles and policies of the program of reform as well as recovery took charge of the Democratic Party in 1932, continued in charge in 1934 and 1936 and 1938 and by the eternal, under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt we will continue in charge in 1940. Let the issue be met fairly and squarely, let the voters of the United States have the long-awaited opportunity of deciding between all the conservatives of the old school on one side and all the progressives of the New Deal on the other side. I, for one, have no fear of the outcome. But the opposition will hedge, as they are now doing on the W. P. A. relief bill. During the recent campaign in our State, the Republican candidates promised better wages and other emoluments to W. P. A. workers. There has been for years more Republican political activity in relief in our State than Democratic political activity. Even as I speak, a threatened investigation of the Republican relief set-up in our State is on by our State legislature notwithstanding it is controlled by a coalition of Republicans and conservative

Mr. Speaker, there has been a coalition of conservative Democrats and Republicans in this House since the inception of the New Deal. During the first few sessions of the present administration there was no open opposition to the program of the New Deal expressed on the floor of this House. The people of the country were in no mood to tolerate any destructive criticism for those first few years. But we heard considerable opposition and criticism in the cloakrooms on the part of conservative Democrats even that early. They knew, however, that their only assurance of reelection was to support the New Deal. It was purely a matter of expediency with them, not one of conviction. In later years when there has been a reasonable recovery achieved and the novelty of the New Deal has worn off, with all the newspaper and magazine propaganda hurled at it, and a certain amount of popular disapproval of some of the methods used, these Members have come out into the open and are showing their true colors.

I bring no brief, Mr. Speaker, for the President of the United States. He needs none. He can and has taken care of himself superbly. His annual message delivered on the floor of this House and his Jackson Day address show his indomitable courage and splendid leadership better than ever. He is still the progressive leader of the progressive Democratic Party. It behooves us who believe in the same high ideals and progressive policies to back him up in this leadership. We, the rank and file, are the shock troops, if you please, upon whom he will have to depend when his erstwhile supporters desert him in the hour of real battle. I have not always agreed with and supported the President. On the second vote cast in this House during the special session of 1933 our whole Washington delegation saw fit to vote against the so-called economy bill which the Liberty League had so cleverly induced the administration to sponsor. It was not popular in that session to vote against the popular President. I have done so several times since. But I am heartily and sincerely in favor of the policies and program of reform as well as recovery promulgated and advocated by him. It is commonly asserted that he lost the court fight. Did he? Is it a loss to compel a conservative court to completely reverse itself on two such important issues as minimum wages for women and the interstatecommerce clause in the Constitution? Is it a loss to have been permitted to appoint such known liberals as Black, Reed, and Frankfurter to the highest tribunal in the land? Is it a loss to have the Supreme Court of the United States now interpret the Constitution in the light of modern intelligence and modern demands and modern developments? No; the President did not lose the court fight; he won a magnificent victory, not because he is a shrewd statesman but because he is eternally right on that question. Did he lose the reorganization battle? Possibly the first skirmish, but the battle is not yet done. One of the leaders in opposition to that much-needed reform met his Waterloo on the plains of New York on November 8 last. We have just begun to fight that battle for economic, efficient, and expeditious functioning of the executive department of the Government. The Republicans with their conservative Democratic friends may continue their folly of opposing this reform. But when the voters understand what reorganization really means to the orderly processes of good government, what it did for the State of Virginia under Governor Byrd, who now as Senator opposes Federal reorganization presumably for personal reasons, and that platforms and Presidents of both parties for the past twoscore of years have demanded this reform, then this battle, too, will be won.

The President has not gone as far as I would go on the money question, on the farm problem, on social security, and old-age pensions. But he has done more to breathe new life into the Constitution and carry out the purposes as expressed in the preamble of that great instrument and the ideals and principles as enunciated in the Declaration of Independence; he has done more to make the United States safe for democracy; he has done more to urge the rights of the common people than any President since Abraham Lincoln. In the years to come Americans will have good cause to thank God for Franklin D. Roosevelt.

I want to serve notice here and now that all these attacks on the President and the New Deal program will be met by those of us who, possibly too long, have sat by in silence. As much as I dislike to take up the time of the Members of this House in discussing political issues, I shall take the floor whenever I deem it my duty to speak in behalf of the principles I have advocated for many years. And I care not who the aggressor may be. If it be the tall tornado from Texas who has these many months been gathering unto himself a fund of publicity as chairman of the Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities and is now galavanting around the country in behalf of his candidacy for the Presidency and breaking bread with the Nazi agents here, let him come on. In the words of Shakespeare:

Lay on, Macduff; And damn'd be him that first cries, "Hold, enough!"

His sole purpose has been to discredit the administration and the New Deal and not to sincerely uncover subversive un-American activities. Or it may be the ponderous gentleman from Wisconsin, who seems to consider burly brawn superior to brains as essential to qualify a Member for this House. Yesterday in one breath he belabored the Secretary of Labor for not deporting an alien, and in the next breath he wanted this alien shot by a firing squad for treason. Can the gentleman, in his own time—and he uses a good deal of it—tell the Members how an alien can be guilty of treason to this country? Or it may be our gruff-voiced but genial gentleman from Massachusetts, who so often quotes poetry for the edification of his listeners. Only yesterday he bemoaned the fact that my good friend Amlie, a "lame duck," had been appointed to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Mr. Amlie needs no praise of mine.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HILL. I do not have the time.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman must yield. He referred

Mr. HILL. If I get 5 additional minutes, I will yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. And the gentleman misrepresented me, too.

Mr. HILL. I think not.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, yes; the gentleman did. My speech made no reference to Mr. Amlie. His name came up through an interruption by another Member. My remarks fitted Mr. Hopkins and stripped him naked. I said nothing about Mr. Amlie.

Mr. HILL. Oh, it was in the gentleman's talk.

I will simply say that he is as sincere and intelligent a student of economics as ever graced this Chamber with his presence. And I may add that it was a sad day for Wisconsin, of whose State university I have the honor to be an alumnus, when it failed to return such men as Boileau, Sauthoff, Schneider, and Withrow. Their successors will have to go far to equal them in courageous and intelligent service. Speaking of "lame ducks" may I remind the gentleman from Massachusetts that William Howard Taft was the most discredited "lame duck" in the history of our country in 1912. Yet appointed as Chief Justice he made an enviable record, notwithstanding his conservative trend of decisions. And who was more of a "lame duck" than Herbert Hoover in 1932? And yet the opposition sit at his feet today and would gladly see him appointed to any office.

In closing, I want to follow in the footsteps of my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford] and quote the following poem by Ella Wheeler Wilcox:

NO QUESTION IS EVER SETTLED UNTIL IT IS SETTLED RIGHT However the battle is ended, Though proudly the victor comes With fluttering flags and prancing nags

And echoing roll of drums, Still truth proclaims this motto In letters of living light, No question is ever settled Until it is settled right.

Though the heel of the strong oppressor May grind the weak in the dust, And the voices of fame with one acclaim May call him great and just, Let those who applaud take warning And keep this motto in sight, No question is ever settled

Until it is settled right.

Let those who have failed take courage, Though the enemy seems to have won— Though his ranks are strong—if he be in the wrong, The battle is not yet done, For sure as the morning follows

The darkest hour of the night, No question is ever settled Until it is settled right.

This question will not be settled right until we lay aside our partisanship-and we will do it if you will-and carry into effect that fine sentiment of Theodore Roosevelt:

This country in the long run will not be a good place for any one of us to live in until and unless it is a good place for all of us to live in.

I submit that is the purpose of the New Deal under Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, if it be in order, I yield my time for today and ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the conclusion of the special order heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Van Zandt] is recognized for 30 minutes.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to have this opportunity to address the House on a question of absorbing interest to me for two decades—the question of the national defense. But merely because I mention my long interest in this question, please do not misunderstand my purpose. I do not rise to address the House for the first time to impart any information. My purpose is quite the contrary. I am seeking information.

My first real interest in the national defense came with impelling force in April 1917. I promptly left high school to enlist in the Navy. After my discharge at the end of 28 months I enlisted in the Naval Reserves. I still am a member of that splendid organization. Hence it must be obvious that I do not qualify as an authority on the national defense. I merely endorse the policy of an adequate national defense. For, unless our national defense is adequate to withstand any test, we might as well disband the Army and Navy right now and thus help balance the Budget.

Since the World War I have been active in veteran affairs. I was honored three times by election as commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States. While occupying that post I preached the policy of an adequate national defense before veterans' organizations, civic, patriotic, and business bodies, and before committees of Congress, I mention my modest military record and my veteran activities not to point with pride but to indicate that I have little fear of anything I may say on this occasion being used against me to sustain an indictment for pacifism. I am speaking for the national defense, not against it.

Under the Constitution one of the first duties of Congress is to provide for the national defense. The turbulent state of world affairs today lends added importance to that everimportant problem. It is kept before us constantly by frontpage accounts of the wars in Europe and Asia, with discussions of the mad race for armaments by dictator nations and democracies alike. All experts agree that a general war in Europe is inevitable. Some persons in positions to be well informed, such as our Ambassadors to England and France, even set the date for the opening of hostilities as next spring. Is there any wonder the American people have a severe case of war jitters? Indeed, the most acute case of this universal malady seems to be suffered by the President himself.

In his personal report to Congress on the state of the Nation the President so stressed the "storm signals from across the seas" that he made the national defense a prior and a more pressing problem than our most urgent domestic needs. The President referred to a narrowly averted war "which threatened to envelop the world in flames." Peace, he told Congress, is anything but assured in this world bristling with armaments that are swifter and more devastating than ever. Then from a skillfully woven summary of wars and rumors of war the President drew a startling challenge to our democratic institutions, if not an actual threat to our peace and security

Some gentlemen on this floor have been unkind enough to accuse the President of using the wars and preparations for war as a convenient smoke screen to conceal 6 years of New Deal failure in our domestic affairs. Be that as it may, that is not the question I wish to discuss at this time. There should be no partisanship where the national defense is concerned. There may be honest differences of opinion as to what constitutes an adequate national defense, but that is one question which never should be made a political football. The President of the United States still is my Commander in Chief. When he solemnly advises Congress that our national defense needs strengthening, I always shall give him respectful attention, examine the evidence, and then act upon my responsibility as a Member of this House. Right now I am seeking evidence.

The President professed to see in the undeclared wars and the threats of new aggression—both military and economic a direct challenge to three institutions, which all agree are indispensable to Americans—religion, democracy, and international good faith. Then, the President added:

The defense of religion, democracy, and international good faith among nations is all the same fight. To save one we must now make up our minds to save all.

Mr. Speaker, I submit there can be no question about our determination to defend our shores from invasion, to protect our possessions, continental and insular. Surely, if we do that successfully, we shall save our own religion, our own democracy, and our own good faith in international affairs.

America was founded as a consequence of religious persecution. Hence, we abhor religious or racial persecution. America's helping hand always has been and always will be extended to the oppressed minorities in other lands. Yet, it is doubtful whether the American people are prepared to embark upon a crusade to avenge the victims of such persecution in Europe or elsewhere. We would be quick to resent any intervention by any other nation in our strictly domestic affairs, such as lynching Negroes in the South.

What about democracy? More than 20 years ago we went to Europe and fought a great war "to make the world safe for democracy." We all know the result only too well. America poured out blood and treasure without stint in the name of democracy. Yet, only two great democracies survive in Europe today. Dictators dominate Europe and Asia. Are we going to use our Army and Navy to assist in changing the form of government in any other country? I think not. When it comes to economic wars, do we propose to force the people of other lands to buy our goods at the point of the bayonet? Hardly!

So far as international good faith is concerned, by all means we must keep the faith. There can be no doubt about the damage done the cause of international good faith by the dictators. As much as we deplore that, the United States, after all, is not the keeper of the world's conscience. We can set the world a good example, but the day has passed for reforming the morals of any nation by fire and sword.

So, despite the violence done religion and democracy by dictators in their own countries and the damage to the cause of international good faith in the world, I doubt whether the American people are prepared to make these outrages an issue of war so long as our own institutions remain free from the heavy hands of Communist or Fascist dictators.

We all understand that it is advisable in promoting any cause to paint the picture with broad strokes and in vivid colors to arouse interest. Yet, with all the wars and threats of war, it seems hardly necessary to overdraw the picture to arouse the country and Congress to the need of a strong and modern national defense. And although national defense, in the strict sense, merely implies the weapons with which to defend our own shores and our own possessions, I am willing to follow the President a little further along the line in search of the objectives we must have added arms to defend

The President, referring to the "common ideal of democratic government" in the Western Hemisphere, as a bond of mutual respect and a guaranty of peace, declared:

That hemisphere, that peace, and that ideal we propose to do our share in protecting against storms from any quarter. Our people and our resources are pledged to secure that protection. From that determination no American flinches.

Most Americans are in general sympathy with the President's declaration for a doctrine of solidarity of the Western Hemisphere. Even though Congress, under the Constitution, must declare war before we go into any fight, there is general sympathy with the President's grand gesture of friendship toward Canada. In one of his characteristic bursts of enthusiasm the President has assured the Canadians the United States would join in the defense of the Dominion in the event of attack. There is general sympathy with the implications of the Monroe Doctrine and the results of the Lima Conference. We all agree with the determination to keep this hemisphere free from European or Asiatic invasion or political domination.

Now, let us examine world conditions to ascertain, if we may, from whence comes this threat against our own security or against any nation in this hemisphere. Surely neither the United States nor any nation in this hemisphere need fear an immediate attack from Germany. In the first place, Hitler is committed to the east. His eyes are on the rich wheatlands of the Ukraine. He has no high-seas navy. Without a navy not even Hitler is likely to undertake a war overseas. He has no gold, no credit, and his balance of trade is on the wrong side of the ledger.

Germany is reported to be developing long-range bombing planes capable of flying the Atlantic, bombing our eastern seaboard and returning to Germany or bases he might seize along the African coast. Admittedly, the United States could be bombed from almost any place in Europe, but just as a stunt. The planes never would get back and such an attack would have no value. So not even Hitler is likely to launch such an expedition. It would be scarcely less fantastic than Orson Welles' radio broadcast about the attack from Mars.

What if the Berlin-Rome axis began to go into high gear and that precious pair of jealous prima donnas, Hitler and Mussolini, joined forces for a foray against the United States or any nation in this hemisphere? Italy is in much the same economic and financial plight as Germany. Moreover, Mussolini is committed to making the Mediterranean an Italian lake. He has no gold, no credit, no navy capable of waging war on this side of the Atlantic. He still has the Spanish war on his hands, to say nothing of a slight touch of indigestion from swallowing Ethiopia.

Recently a jingoistic Japanese spokesman warned that the Empire of the Rising Sun might find it necessary to sink the American Fleet if we dare attempt to fortify the island of Guam. Japan has stuck her Samurai sword so deeply into the bowels of China she had to go in after it. And what she will look like when she gets back, God only knows. Japan is bleeding her people white trying to conquer the Chinese dragon. Experts assert that conquest will engage Japan for the next century. So that Japanese statesman probably was thinking more about bolstering flagging public opinion at home than sinking our fleet. Japan never has had, not even in her wildest Shinto doctrine, the slightest intention of attacking the United States. Indeed, such an eminent naval expert as the President himself, in a magazine article in 1931, asserted a war between the United States and Japan was physically impossible. He may have changed his mind. He has been known to do that-on the potency of party purges, for instance.

What of Russia? Has Russia any territorial ambitions in this hemisphere? The "bear that walks like a man" is very much engaged at present in watching Germany on one side and Japan on the other, to say nothing of his internal difficulties, which require constant purging. So much for the dictators and the totalitarian states. Now for the democracies of Europe.

Is our threat from England? Decidedly, no. Another Munich, and John Bull may find himself classed with Ferdinand, the bull which never learned to fight. Certainly, John Bull wants to embrace us, not fight us. Our friendship with France has been traditional since Revolutionary days. La Belle France is blowing kisses in our direction today. No, sir; we were the devoted ally of Britain and France in the World War. We supplied the men, money, and munitions to whip the Kaiser. Although England and France, who owe us the bulk of the war debts, are slightly in arrears on their payments, they would like to be in a position to draw on our men, money, and munitions if they fight Germany or Italy, or both. That is a question I shall touch upon in a moment.

First, by this process of elimination, I may well echo the cry, "Whom are we going to fight?" "Are we arming to fight some other nation's battle?"

That is what we all want to know. That is what Congress ought to know. That is what the people are entitled to know.

Let us turn back the pages of history just a few years in our search for the answer. Four men sat down at a table at Versailles in 1919—three hard-headed European realists and a soft-hearted American idealist-and proceeded to redivide a world already badly divided. All the present trouble in Europe dates from that so-called peace conference. And that brings us to Munich, where the phantom menace was born, the phantom terror we are arming to fight in the name of national defense. We will pass over the right and justice of that affair. All we need consider is this: Czechoslovakia was one of the states carved out by the four wise men at Versailles in order to cripple Germany. Among the assorted peoples given to Czechoslovakia were the Sudeten Germans. Under Hitler's influence, the Sudetens began to cry for a return to the fatherland. Hitler finally served an ultimatum on the little Republic. President Benes stood his ground, depending upon alliances with France and Russia to save his country. And England, of course, was supposed to back

Shortly before the show-down at Munich, Col. Charles Lindbergh made certain discoveries in Germany and Russia, presumably about the superiority of the German air forces over those of Britain and France and that little assistance could be expected from Russia. Whatever it was, it was reported to the British and French. No matter whether it was Colonel Lindbergh's discoveries or something else, the fact remains that Czechoslovakia was sold out at Munich by England and France. Hitler got his chunk of land and restored several million population to the fatherland.

Whatever that phantom menace may be, it soon was imported to the United States by our Ambassadors to London and Paris. These diplomats reported to the White House, and then at an unprecedented and supposedly secret meeting of the House and Senate Military Affairs Committee, Messrs. Kennedy and Bullitt revealed the phantom menace. Some members were not impressed by the menace. While we know Germany and Italy constitute the phantom menace, its connection with our national defense still is baffling, but those using it as a bugaboo become better known daily.

Why did handsome Anthony Eden pay his recent goodwill visit to America? He did not come merely to set girlish hearts aflutter as he emerged from a long and earnest conference with the President at the White House. Why are the British King and Queen to make what a London paper called "the first royal visit to a former colony"? Why is there is a rumor in service circles that by 1941 we must have our Army air force and our Navy tremendously increased? Can it be that we are preparing to spend upward of $2,000,-000,000 on the national defense only to use our Army and Navy for the protection of some other nation? Could it be that almost without knowing it we are preparing huge increases in the air force for the benefit of England? It is possible that England is trying to maneuver us into the same position in which we found ourselves back in 1917, when we sent 2,000,000 boys to Europe to make the world safe for democracy.

Before I vote on these vast expenditures, which the President says are necessary for the national defense, I want the answers to those questions. Congress ought to have the answers. The country is entitled to the answers.

England certainly could use our help. Japan threatens Hong Kong. Japanese troops are almost to Burma, where vast India boils. Palestine is restless. Mussolini is astride the Mediterranean. He almost has his hands on Gibraltar at one end of his new lake and is demanding a voice in the control of the Suez Canal at the other. England's highly concentrated industry along the channel and North Sea coasts and London, the largest city in the world, are the most vulnerable aerial targets in all Europe. England, to save London and her industrial cities, sold out Czechoslovakia at Munich. Do you think she would hesitate to sell out America to save her loosely bound empire, an empire bound together by the symbol of a crown?

When you add up the international situation today, there is no possible enemy for the United States to fight unless we leave home to do it. There is no nation on earth which could invade this country today. The only way we are likely to become involved in war is to get in somebody else's war. We can only get in somebody else's through diplomatic blundering. Can it be that Ambassador Kennedy, a fine American of Irish stock, a hard-headed businessman, is as susceptible to the subtle British blarney as Walter Hines Page, our Ambassador to London in the period leading up to our entrance into the World War? Did the British sell Kennedy a bill of goods? What is the President's real purpose? What is our foreign policy?

Now, let us consider the President's message on the national defense, in which he made some specific recommendations for strengthening and modernizing our national defense. Even when we consider that the Regular Army budget calls for $510,000,000 and the Regular Navy budget calls for $720,000,000, and the defense program is set at $552,000,000, making a total outlay of $1,782,000,000 for the next fiscal year, the price seems to be a reasonable one to pay for national security, if that amount is really needed. But do we need it?

The President has spoken. Now, it is the duty of Congress to determine the amount needed for defense. But, whatever the amount may be, once Congress is convinced of the necessity of even this enormous expense, I believe the American taxpayers will pay almost any price for peace and security.

But, as I have attempted to show in sketchy outline, our position for peace and security, even in a mad world bristling with armaments, never has been so favorable since the World War. At the same time I refuse to yield, not even to the President, in my desire to have this country prepared to meet any emergency. The President's vision, from his vantage point in the White House, is longer than mine, of course. He may have been able to discern the new German "invisible troops." He certainly saw some menace that none of the rest of us have been able to discern. So, before I vote for this vast national-defense appropriation, I would like to know something more about this threat to our security. I want to know. Congress ought to know. The people are entitled to know.

Even before we get an answer to that question, I would like to put several others. I would like to know what constitutes an adequate national defense in view of the present world situation, our commitments for hemisphere defense, the possible developments in national alinements, the possible improvement in the destructive power and speed of armaments, and how should we best go about achieving the desired security by the expenditure of nearly $2,000,000,000. Those questions can be answered only by experts on the subject. By "experts" I do not mean merely the Secretaries of War and the Navy, their aides, and the ranking Army and Navy officers now in command of the various branches of the service in Washington.

I do not discount the value or the importance of the facts and the opinions now being given by these officials and officers to the House and Senate committees. That is their job and I have every confidence in them. But I believe there is no disagreement about the assertion that modern warfare is waged by nations as economic units, not merely by the armed forces afield, afloat, and in the air.

If Congress is to legislate wisely and soundly on the national defense, with a long-range view of any emergency that may arise in the future, we should have the benefit of expert testimony on every conceivable angle of the program. It is not enough to have expert opinion on guns and ships, planes and tanks, men and munitions. Information on those vital points can be obtained from the General Staffs. We should have the testimony of military and naval experts who are not now in active service. We should hear from the industrialists, especially the automobile and airplane manufacturers and their experts, and all others who would arm and equip this Nation if it ever again is plunged into war.

Nor should we stop there. The President may be justified in dramatizing the menacing situation which suddenly confronts us. And in doing so, he has set a precedent. He has brought the diplomatic corps into the national defense picture for the first time. Messrs. Kennedy and Bullitt already have appeared before the House and Senate Military Affairs Committees. Mr. Johnson, the American Ambassador to China, is in Washington to give the President and the State Department a report on the progress of the war in China, and confidential information on the Japanese situation. Mr. Grew, the American Ambassador to Japan, is returning, supposedly on a similar mission. Mr. Wilson, the Ambassador to Germany, was recalled "for consultation and report" and still is in this country. Is there any reason why these gentleman should be slighted by congressional committees? They should be called so as to give their jigsaw section of the picture so that we could fit it together and make a whole.

Nor should we stop even there. Inasmuch as our foreign policy seems to be the crux of our defense policy, Congress might save time by asking the man who makes it-the President of the United States. There is precedent for that. President Wilson was questioned by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the Treaty of Versailles and the League of Nations. The result of this quiz, however, need not be the same. In fact, the President should welcome the opportunity to give the House and Senate Committees on Foreign Affairs some of the more intimate details about this new menace. The President could insure easy sailing for this defense program by merely inviting the members of the two committees down to the White House and disclosing his foreign policy, which demands added armaments. Once this menace is cleared up, Congress will vote any necessary defense funds.

But whatever this new menace may be, whatever threats there may be to our religion, our democracy, and international good faith, or to those of our neighbors in this hemisphere, the President has advised us there is no occasion for hysteria. In that event, there is no occasion for undue haste. Meanwhile, we not only should take steps to meet this menace when it appears but we should establish a progressive policy of national defense which will insure the security of this Nation so long as it has defenders.

The National Defense Act of 1920 as amended to 1935, of course, laid down such a policy as I contemplate. That law may be perfect as it stands. I do not know. But I want to know. Congress ought to know. The people are entitled to know. If the law needs any revision or a complete revamping, whatever is necessary should be done. Sound as the law may have been at the time of its enactment and amendment it may be outmoded by the new menace.

What I am proposing is simply this: In view of the President's solemn warning, we should do a thorough job of surveying our resources of national defense before taking any action. The National Defense Act should be dusted off with a view to making any necessary amendments. The Navy should be overhauled fore and aft. The army should be given a rigid inspection. Instead of doing a piecemeal, patchwork job that might find us almost as unprepared as we were in 1917-a matter of which the President reminded us-the national defense should be examined and explored from every angle to the end that an up-to-the-minute policy can be established and place us in readiness to meet any emergency. Once that is done, the program should proceed in an orderly manner. Thus, with a long-range policy that has sufficient flexibility to meet any changes that developments would require, we would be as immune from war scares as from any real danger to our security.

In revamping our national defense policy and the defenses themselves, it might be well to consider the suggestion for establishment of a joint congressional committee, composed of members of all committees which have any legislative responsibility in the matter. Our able and sagacious minority leader [Mr. Martin] has pointed the way. He has named an informal committee, composed of minority members of the various committees considering the national defense, in order that all information on the subject may be pooled for the benefit of all Republicans of the House. But the national defense is not a party matter. The joint committee should be official and the information it gathers from the War and Navy Departments and other sources should be pooled for the benefit of all Members of Congress. And, inasmuch as the President has set the precedent, and brought the diplomatic corps into the national defense picture, we should have all available material bearing on that subject in the hands of the State Department.

In that way we could assure the American taxpayers of a sound investment of their money set aside for the national defense. In that way we could soon learn whether we need upward of $2,000,000,000 now for the national defense or more.

The President's proposal of placing "educational orders" with various munitions manufacturers, so that industry could be quickly stepped up to quantity production in the event of emergency, appeals to me as a progressive step, but we might go even further. In the past, one of the greatest difficulties with keeping the national defense abreast of the times has been the rigid method of Congress in making funds available. All moneys must be earmarked for a specific purpose. As a consequence of that earmarking, I am informed there is a 3-year lag in the defense program. Why would it not be advisable to place in the hands of the War and Navy Departments a certain amount of liquid funds for use in experimental work and development and a limited production of all types of mechanical defense? If Congress can vote billions of dollars in blank checks for relief, we certainly can trust the War and Navy Departments to make judicious use of funds to promote and perfect the national defense. In other words, cut the red tape.

Americans are the greatest mechanical and industrial race in the world. There is no reason why we should not build a mechanized defense as far superior and as far advanced beyond anything the European and Asiatic nations may have as our automobiles are superior to the foreign products. There is no question about our ability to do this if restrictions and handicaps on the War and Navy Departments are removed. We could and should keep a generation ahead of the world on mechanical developments in the national defense if we scrapped the outmoded and cumbersome system of research, experiment, and development of weapons, which is due largely to the earmarking of funds. It would prove an economy in the end, and yet we would get the most improved type of national defense.

Airplanes are a case in point. The airplane, which originated in America, still is in its infancy. So rapid are the improvements and developments of planes that I am informed a shiny new plane becomes obsolescent the moment it is placed on the line to take off on its first flight. The miracle of today becomes the jaloppy of tomorrow. Hence it would seem unwise to build any great number of military planes now with the thought that they would give us superiority and security in the air for any length of time. I would not begrudge the Army and Navy a single plane the experts asserted was needed now, but I would not vote for the expenditure of a single dime for planes that should be in the junk heap instead of in the air in the time of emergency.

While I am well aware of the highly controversial nature of the proposal for a Department of National Defense, with the Army in one branch, the Navy in another, and the air force as a third, we should try to learn once and for all time whether such a plan is desirable, and if so, adopt it at once. While there is a plan for the cooperation of the Army and Navy, in the event of war, it never has been decided definitely where the Army leaves off and the Navy begins to function in the air. We certainly should have a plan to coordinate all branches of the service and promptly adopt it if the menace to our security is anything like the President described.

Naturally there are many other military and naval problems involved in the national defense. I merely have tried to touch some of the high spots that occur to an inexpert layman. I also would like to suggest a few expert witnesses who could shed light rather than heat on the subject of the national defense as well as any possible menace to our security.

Inasmuch as this phantom menace appeared coincident with discoveries alleged to have been made to Colonel Lindbergh, the Lone Eagle himself should be called before a joint congressional committee to tell his own story. I noticed recently that he was expected to return to this country in the near future. In any event, he could be summoned, and I feel sure he would be glad to come and clear up some of the mystery about this phantom menace to our security.

Another witness I would like to hear is Gen. Douglas Mac-Arthur, our former Chief of Staff of the Army and now military adviser to the Philippines, which still flies the American flag. I have known General MacArthur for several years, and I regard him as one of the finest military minds in the world today. I also know him to be absolutely fearless in giving testimony. His testimony should be of great value not only on the National Defense Act, which I understand he helped to formulate, but on affairs in the east. General MacArthur could reach Washington within a week after he were summoned by taking a clipper plane and then flying across the continent after reaching the States.

We should not ignore such outstanding soldiers as General Moseley, Gen. Smedley Butler, and Gen. Hugh Johnson. All of them are now on the retired list, and they would not be restricted in their testimony by any fear of a reprimand following it.

In shaping a new national-defense policy, designed to give a maximum of security at a minimum cost, I would not restrict testimony to military men or industrialists. I would like to hear from the peace societies and any others with a legitimate interest and something to contribute. Above all, I would like to hear from the veterans of the World War, through their organizations. They know the cruel cost of war in maimed bodies and broken minds. These veterans are living reminders that the cost of war has scarcely begun when the last shot is fired in battle. With America still carrying a large share of the financial burden of the World War, that debt will not be wiped out for many, many generations. With our Budget in the red for the past 10 years, with our national debt mounting to almost $40,000,000,000, with the whole world bankrupt as it totters under its unreasonable burden of armaments, I would be dishonest if I did not oppose with all my strength the expenditures of every penny over and above the amount required for adequate national security.

We do not want to pull the chestnuts out of the fire again for Great Britain or any other nation. Let us keep out of this European mess. Let us concentrate on the solution of our own problems. Let us open up this whole question of the national defense and its related foreign policy. Let us get all the answers before we act. That is what I want to know. That is what Congress ought to know. That is what the American people are entitled to know. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Merritt, on account of death in his family.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 26, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a.m. Thursday, January 26, 1939. Business to be considered: Continuation of hearing on H. R. 2531—transportation bill. Commissioner Splawn, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is to be the witness.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs in room 1310, New House Office Building, at 10:30 a.m. Thursday, January 26, for the continued consideration of the President's message on national defense.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives on Thursday, January 26, 1939, at 10:30 a.m., for the purpose of continuing the consideration of H. R. 2880, "To authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes," carrying out partially the recommendations of the Hepburn report.

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday, January 26, 1939.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Public hearings will begin Wednesday morning, February 1, 1939, at 10 a.m., on social-security legislation, in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

328. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to authorize the Secretary of War to provide for the sale of aviation supplies and services to aircraft operated by foreign military and air attachés accredited to the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

329. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 3, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers, on a preliminary examination of Meredosia Bay, Illinois River, Ill., authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 26, 1937; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

330. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 3, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a survey of New Jersey Intracoastal Waterway from Shrewsbury River to Delaware Bay above Cape May via Manasquan-Barnegat Canal and including entrance through Barnegat Inlet and waterway across Cape May County, N. J., to connect New Jersey State Inland Waterway with Delaware Bay, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 30, 1935 (H. Doc. No. 133); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

331. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated October 19, 1938, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on a preliminary examination and survey of Northeast Harbor, Maine, authorized by the River and Harbor Act approved August 26, 1937 (H. Doc. No. 132); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

332. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated December 28, 1938, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on reexamination of Cape Fear River, N. C., at and below Wilmington, requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted January 27, 1937 (H. Doc. No. 131); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

333. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 11, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on reexamination of St. Joseph Harbor, Mich., requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted January 27, 1937 (H. Doc. No. 129); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration

334. A letter from the Executive Director of the Social Security Board, transmitting the Third Annual Report of the Social Security Board for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938 (H. Doc. No. 130); to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 528) granting a pension to Merrill T. Bryant; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 529) granting a pension to Ted Spires; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 530) granting a pension to Thomas A. O'Leary; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 531) granting a pension to John Henry; Committee on Pensions discharged; and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 628) granting a pension to Gus Brunner; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

A bill (H. R. 638) granting a pension to Carl H. Smith; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

A bill (H. R. 653) granting a pension to Katherine Slusher; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 657) granting a pension to Nettle Saylor and Noel Junior Saylor; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 679) granting a pension to Elige Caldwell; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 685) granting a pension to John H. Botner; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. A bill (H. R. 687) granting a pension to Daniel Blanton; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 689) granting a pension to Cora Arlena Ballard; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 696) granting a pension to Addie Higginbotham; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 697) granting a pension to Richard B. Hammer; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

526. By Mr. BOLLES: Petition of sundry citizens of Nesh-koro, Wis., requesting that we adhere to the general policy of neutrality contained in the act of August 31, 1935, and in the act of May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

527. Also, petition of members of St. Rita Sodality, Society of Ladies of the Parish of St. Joseph of Lyons, Wis., requesting that we adhere to the general policy of neutrality contained in the act of August 31, 1935, and in the act of May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

528. Also, petition of the parishioners of St. Patrick's Church in Racine, Wis., requesting that we adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in the act of August 31, 1935; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

529. By Mr. CLEVENGER: Resolution of the Women's Missionary Society, Church of Christ, Leipsic, Ohio, urging that the Government of the United States put into effect a policy of nonparticipation in aggression by discontinuing the shipment to aggressor nations of all goods that can be used by their military forces, and that immediate steps be taken to stop shipment of such goods to Japan; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

530. By Mr. COFFEE of Washington: Resolution of the General Welfare Federation of Washington, Inc., F. H. Raymond, secretary, Tacoma, Wash., asserting that National Social Security Advisory Council's recommendations for oldage security are utterly inadequate, uncertain, and confusing; insisting that such recommendations if enacted into law would perpetuate the present inequalities and iniquities in the Social Security Act; alleging that the General Welfare Act (H. R. 11) represents a sound effort to correct abuses and provide relief to the aged, and therefore urging that the General Welfare Act (H. R. 11) be enacted into law by the Congress at the earliest possible moment; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

531. Also, resolution of the Lumber and Sawmill Workers Union, Local No. 2669, Charles E. O'Brien, secretary-treasurer, Tacoma, Wash., pointing out that the War Department's program calls for the authorization of several antiaircraft National Guard regiments; asserting that the Pacific Northwest is without even a minimum of air defense, though many Federal projects having a direct relationship to war are located in the area adjacent to Tacoma and Seattle; insisting that Washington, being a seacoast State, is vulnerable to attack, yet is without air defense; therefore urging that authorization be granted at once for the allotment and formation of National Guard antiaircraft artillery; to the Committee on Appropriations.

532. Also, resolution of the Willapa Harbor Industrial Union Council, G. H. Hatfield, president, Raymond, Wash., alleging that the majority of American people consider the Dies committee to have functioned as a kangaroo court and as a sounding board for ill-considered expressions of stool pigeons and stooges; asserting that the effect of the Dies committee has been to discredit and defeat New Deal candidates for election to public office; and therefore vigorously opposing the continuation of the Dies committee and insisting that Congress refuse to appropriate funds for that purpose; to the Committee on Rules.

533. Also, resolution of Federated Fishermen's Council of the Pacific Coast, Martin E. Olsen, secretary-treasurer, Portland, Oreg., asserting that curtailment in employment in salt herring industry in Alaska has been caused by excessive importation of European herring; therefore requesting Congress for suitable appropriation to be set aside for survey intended to develop means to revive this industry; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

534. Also, resolution of Federated Fishermen's Council of the Pacific Coast, Martin E. Olsen, secretary-treasurer, Portland, Oreg., asserting that the present policy of the Government to cut down all appropriations for adequate health service for Alaskan fishermen is short-sighted and parsimonious; insisting that such policy is detrimental to marine workers; therefore urging that marine hospitals be created in the Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on the Territories.

535. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of the supreme board of directors of the Knights of Columbus, expressing their opposition to any action of Congress which would result in a lifting of the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

536. By Mr. FLAHERTY: Petition of the American Federation of Teachers, Boston, Mass., opposing the amending of the National Labor Relations Act; to the Committee on Labor.

537. By Mr. HAWKS: Petition of 70 residents of St. Joseph's parish, Madison, Wis., protesting against any change in our neutrality policy; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

538. By Mr. KEAN: Petition of Rev. John O. Buckmann and sundry other citizens of the Twelfth Congressional District of New Jersey, urging consideration of the subject of neutrality as enunciated in the act of August 31, 1935, and the act of May 1, 1937; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

539. By Mr. LEWIS of Ohio: Petition of Frank Nelson and other citizens of Bellaire, Ohio, to adhere to the general policy of neutrality and extending the original act to include civil as well as international conflicts; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

540. Also, petition of John Phalin, president, and William Clower, secretary, of the Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, of Yorkville, Ohio, asking Congress to lift the embargo on the loyalist Spanish government and quarantine the aggressor; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

541. By Mr. KING: Petition of the United Societies of St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church, of Brooklyn, N. Y., urging continuation of the Dies investigating committee and keeping the embargo on Spain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs

542. By Mr. KINZER: Petition of members of St. Anne's Holy Name Society, Lancaster, Pa., setting forth a declaration of policy on the subject of neutrality; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

543. By Mr. LANHAM: Petition of George J. Kreyenbuhl and others, of Fort Worth, Tex., concerning neutrality; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

544. By Mr. MOTT: Petition signed by Mrs. G. H. Macrum and 51 other citizens of Portland, Oreg., urging the Congress of the United States to adhere to the general policy of neutrality enunciated in the act of August 31, 1935, to retain on our statute books the further and corollary principle enunciated in the act of May 1, 1937, extending the original act to include civil as well as international conflicts; also urging that the Congress launch an investigation of those leftist groups which are sponsoring favoring the lifting of the embargo on arms to "red" Spain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

545. Also, petitions signed by William J. Todd and 77 other members of St. Mary's Academy, The Dalles, Oreg., urging the Congress of the United States to adhere to the general policy of neutrality enunciated in the act of August 31, 1935, to retain on our statute books the further and corollary principle enunciated in the act of May 1, 1937, extending the original act to include civil as well as international conflicts; also urging that the Congress launch an investigation of those leftist groups which are sponsoring favoring the lifting of the embargo on arms to "red" Spain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

546. Also, petition signed by Mrs. E. J. English and 17 other citizens of Portland, Oreg., urging the Congress of the United States to adhere to the general policy of neutrality enunciated in the act of August 31, 1935, to retain on our statute books the further and corollary principle enunciated in the act of May 1, 1937, extending the original act to include civil as well as international conflicts; also urging that the Congress launch an investigation of those leftist groups which are sponsoring favoring the lifting of the embargo on arms to "red" Spain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

547. By Mr. MYERS: Petition of John Divine and 23 other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., urging the adherence by the United States to the neutrality acts passed by the Congress on August 31, 1935, and May 1, 1937, respectively; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

548. Also, petition of Rev. John Daly, rector of St. Barnabas' Catholic Church, and 127 other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., urging the adherence by the United States to the neutrality acts passed by the Congress on August 31, 1935, and May 1, 1937, respectively; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

549. Also, petition of Dr. James A. Kane and 240 other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., urging the adherence by the United States to the neutrality acts passed by the Congress on August 31, 1935, and May 1, 1937, respectively; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

550. Also, petition of Frank J. Eustace, Jr., and 20 other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., urging the adherence by the United States to the neutrality acts passed by the Congress of the United States on August 31, 1935, and May 1, 1937, respectively; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

551. Also, petition of John A. Hoffman and 20 other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., urging the adherence by the United States to the neutrality acts passed by the Congress of the United States on August 31, 1935, and May 1, 1937, respectively; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

552. Also, petition of Mrs. G. Culbertson and 20 other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., urging the adherence by the United States to the neutrality acts passed by the Congress on August 31, 1935, and May 1, 1937, respectively; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House Memorial 1

Whereas in the interests of humanity and world peace it becomes necessary that the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States take such action as will deny aid or assistance of any kind to the country of Japan in the furtherance of the war against the country of China; and

Whereas denial of the right to purchase munitions and materials of war would effectively accomplish such purpose: Now, therefore he it.

therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the thirty-second general assembly, That this body memorialize the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States to take immediate action to terminate the selling of munitions and war materials by citizens of the United States to the country of materials by citizens of the United States to the country of Japan; and be it further Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in the Congress of the United States give their support to any measure that will accomplish the purposes of this resolution, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in Congress. State of Colorado in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following House memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was ordered to lie on the table:

A memorial to the Congress of the United States of America pro-testing the reduction of the $875,000,000 asked by President Franklin D. Roosevelt for Works Progress Administration purposes to $725,000,000

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas the House of Representatives of the United States has cut the appropriation for Works Progress Administration purposes to $725,000,000 from $875,000,000, the amount requested by President Franklin D. Roosevelt; and Whereas such a reduction would cause great distress and serious conditions in Montana due to increased unemployment in private industry. Now therefore he is conditions in Montana due to increased unemployment in private industry: Now, therefore, be it *Resolved*, That the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, does hereby protest the reduction of the appropriation for Works Progress Administration purposes and respectfully petition and request the Congress of the United States to restore to the sum of $875,000,000 the appropriation for said Works Progress Administration purposes as requested by President Franklin D. Roosevelt; and be it further *Resolved*, That copies of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, the Honorable B. K. Wheeler and the Honorable James E. Murray, United States Senators, and to the Honorable James F. O'Connor and the Honorable J. Thorrelson, United States Representatives of the State of Montana.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the petition of the Central Labor Union of St. Petersburg, Fla., praying for the continuance of the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor investigating violations of the right of free speech and assembly, and interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Job Stewards Council of the Workers Alliance, San Francisco, Calif., favoring an appropriation of $1,050,000,000 for continuing the Works Progress Administration for the balance of the current fiscal year, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Southbridge, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation removing the tax-exemption privilege from governmental securities and salaries, as proposed by the President, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for retention of the principle of the present neutrality law and extension of the law to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CONNALLY presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cameron, Galveston, and Houston, Tex., praying for retention of the principle of the present neutrality law and extension of the law to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the memorial of seminarians of St. Mary's University, of La Porte, Tex., remonstrating against lifting the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

VIOLATIONS OF FREE SPEECH AND RIGHTS OF LABOR—STRIKE-BREAKING SERVICES (REPT. NO. 6)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent to submit the first of a series of final reports from the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor under Senate Resolution 266, Seventy-fourth Congress, to investigate violations of the right of free speech and assembly and interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively. The report deals with strike-breaking services.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received and printed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution providing for the printing of an additional 5,000 copies of the report which I filed earlier in the day from the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor. I will say that I have conferred with the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. Hayden] concerning the resolution and am authorized to say that I have his approval in asking unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin for the immediate consideration of the resolution submitted by him?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 71) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 6, a report of the Committee on Education and Labor submitted pursuant to Senate Resolution 266 (74th Cong.), entitled "Violations of Free Speech and Rights of Labor," be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

S. 1037. A bill to furnish employment by providing for emergency construction of public highways and related projects, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

AMENDMENT OF PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE ACT

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a bill dealing with the Filipino question. The bill was prepared by an interdepartmental committee that sought to work out certain imperfections in the existing law. In introducing the bill at their request, I do not want to assume responsibility for it as being my own bill. I believe it is, however, a subject upon which a bill ought to be framed, and that the bill as presented will furnish a very fair basis for consideration. With that explanation, I ask unanimous consent at this time to introduce the bill for appropriate reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Maryland, introduced by request, will be received and properly referred.

The bill (S. 1028) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO PUBLIC CONTRACTS LAW

Mr. WALSH. I ask consent to introduce a bill for appropriate reference embodying several amendments to the public contracts law, and request that a brief statement explanatory of the proposed amendments be printed in the

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts will be received and properly referred, and the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1032) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States" and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The statement presented by Mr. Walsh is as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO PUBLIC CONTRACTS LAW

Senator WALSH, of Massachusetts, introduced today certain amendments to the Public Contracts Act, sometimes known as the Walsh-Healey Act. The amendments are as follows:

1. The jurisdiction of the act has been extended to contracts and immediate subcontracts entered into by the contractor for the express purpose of performing his contract with the Government where those contracts and subcontracts exceed $2,000 instead of the present $10,000 provision.

2. The coverage of the act has been extended to include vessels.

The coverage of the act has been extended to include vessels and equipment which, insofar as the Navy is concerned, must be built or repaired in accordance with the provisions of the Walsh-Healey Act, so that the requirement now binding on the Navy will apply to all Government contracts.

3. Nonprofessional service contracts have also been included to prevent service industries, such as laundries, taking Government business by sweatshop practices.

4. The present wage provision of the statute has been amended by incorporating the language of the Fair Labor Standards Act by permitting deductions for "board, lodging, or other facilities * * customarily furnished by such employer to his employees." This will make the provisions of the two acts uniform in this

This will make the provisions of the two statutes are also made harmonious by dropping the present Walsh-Healey prohibition of the employment of female minors under 18 to permit boys and girls over 16 to be employed except in hazardous occupations, where they are prohibited until they are 18.

6. The change made in section 2 dealing with violations permits the recovery on behalf of employees of double the amount due them for underpayment of the minimum wage or overtime in the case of a second offense by the same employer, and treble the amount in the case of subsequent offenses. This provision is necessary and very important because at the present time no penalty is provided for a violation of the statute except the invocation of the so-called "blacklist" provision which allows the Secretary of Labor to put on the ineligible list for 3 years violators of the act. This provision is so drastic that it has been rarely exercised, and employers generally know this and hence are willing to run the risk of being caught, since the possibility of punishment is remote.

7. The final provision of the act makes these amendments effective in 90 days.

It is to be noted the highly controversial provision that has heretofore been proposed by the Labor Department, providing for the blacklisting from receiving Government contracts all violators of the National Labor Relations Act, is not included in this bill.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF-AMENDMENTS

Mr. BARBOUR submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 4, line 23, after the word "appropriated", insert the following: "or appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938."

Act of 1938."

On page 5, line 1, after the word "would", insert the words "manufacture or."

On page 5, line 2, before the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That all building construction under the Works Progress Administration shall be done on a contract basis under contracts which provide that the contractors shall pay the prevailing rate of wages." prevailing rate of wages

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS-AMENDMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of California submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 2868, the first deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 4, line 7, to insert the following:

VITICULTURAL MARKETING REGULATIONS

Amend section 508 of an act entitled "the Liquor Tax Administration Act of June 26, 1936," which reads:
"Exc. 508. This title, except sections 502, 505, and 507, shall take effect when a majority of the members of the Federal Alcohol Administration first appointed under the provisions of section 502 qualify and take office," by adding after the figures "505" the figures "506", so as to make and intending thereby to make section 506 of title V of said Liquor Tax Administration Act immediately effective.

LIBERALISM-ARTICLE BY SENATOR DAVIS

[Mr. Gibson asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "The True Liberal," by Senator Davis, published in the Weekly News of West End, Pittsburgh, Pa., January 19, 1939, which appears in the Appendix.]

AMERICAN PEACE AND HOW TO OBTAIN IT—ADDRESS BY SENATOR JOHNSON OF COLORADO

[Mr. Lundeen asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Record an address delivered by Senator Johnson of Colorado on January 26, 1939, before the Fourteenth Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense entitled "American Peace and How to Obtain It," which appears in the Appendix.]

PEACE FOR THE UNITED STATES-ADDRESS BY SENATOR LODGE

[Mr. NyE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Senator Longe before the Fourteenth Women's Patriotic Conference on National Defense in Washington, D. C., January 24, 1939, on the subject of Peace for the United States, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE-ARTICLE BY COL. FREDERICK PALMER

[Mr. Clark of Missouri asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Col. Frederick Palmer on the subject of National Defense, which appears in the Appendix.1

THE A. A. A. WHEAT PROGRAM-ADDRESS BY HON. MYRON L. WILSON

IMr. MURRAY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a Jackson Day dinner address delivered by Hon. Myron L. Wilson, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, at Great Falls, Mont., on January 8, 1939, on the subject of the Wheat Program, which appears in the Appendix 1

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the time the Senate took a recess yesterday the Chair observes from the RECORD that the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] had the floor; that he yielded for certain purposes, and then the Senate went into executive session. The Chair feels that, in good sportsmanship, he should recognize the Senator from Florida.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to continue my remarks, but I will be glad to yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent to have the clerk read a telegram relating to the subject under consideration. The telegram was received by me from Mr. George Meany, who is president of the State Federation of Labor of the State of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Hon. Robert F. Wagner, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

There can be little doubt that a W. P. A. appropriation of $875,000,000, as recommended by the President, is absolutely vital. This sum is needed to make it possible to continue to meet the minimum relief needs in New York as well as in other parts of the country.

The amount recommended by the President is by no means excessive. To siash the appropriation for W. P. A. to $725,000,000 or to any other figure below $875,000,000 would result in the discharge of many thousands of needy New Yorkers, a lowering of relief standards, and a decrease in the amount supplied to those relief standards, and a decrease in the amount supplied to those who have already endured severe hardships, through no fault of their own, during the last 8 years.

The lessons of a year ago ought not to be so soon forgotten. When W. P. A. rolls were reduced by 1,000,000 men between October 1936 and October 1937 not only that number suffered horribly, but 5,000,000 other workers, up to then employed in private industry, lost their jobs in one of the most violent recessions in our history.

Can any same man want a repetition of that history.

Can any sane man want a repetition of that catastrophe? Certainly "economy" which causes losses 50 and 100 times as large as the sum saved is the falsest kind of economy imaginable.

Organized labor in New York State, having a longer memory than that of persons who advocate the $150,000,000 reduction and being convinced by the harsh teachings of experience that a reduction in W. P. A. rolls at this time would be disastrous in short order to virtually everyone, not excluding those who profess to see benefits in the action taken by the House, urges you to employ your best efforts with the Senate to the end that the $150,000,000 shall be restored. shall be restored.

GEORGE MEANY,
President of State Federation of Labor.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, at the conclusion of the session yesterday we were discussing what figure might be relied upon by the Senate as the basis of our conclusion as to the amount which should be appropriated for the Works Progress Administration for the remainder of the fiscal year. The difference of opinion had arisen from some difference in understanding as to what was the actual amount of funds available on January 1 of this year.

I had referred to pages 31 and 32 of the Senate subcommittee hearings, giving the testimony of Colonel Harrington, the W. P. A. Administrator, that the amount of available W. P. A. funds on January 1, 1939, was approximately $190,000,000. Then I had also referred to a table in the same report at the top of page 6 which confirmed the same testimony on the part of the Administrator, Colonel Harrington.

Some have said that the testimony given by Colonel Harrington was mistaken testimony; and in spite of the fact that he is an Army engineer assigned by the President to this task, notwithstanding the fact that he has had at least 2 or 3 years, if not more, experience in the Works Progress Administration, and notwithstanding the fact that he is known to be a gentleman of probity and ability, the proponents of the $150,000,000 reduction stated that Colonel Harrington had made a mistake in his figures, and they could not be relied upon.

The majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], at the conclusion of the session indicated that he proposed to read today a letter from Colonel Harrington reaffirming the accuracy of his testimony before the committee and reasserting that the funds available to the W. P. A .and that is what we are talking about; not the Farm Security Administration or some other Federal relief agency, but the W. P. A.—were $190,000,000 on the 1st of January 1939. So I am going to reason to a conclusion, based upon that testimony, which I believe to be true, and which I believe cannot be properly contested by the members of the committee. I understand, furthermore, that the majority leader will read a communication from the Director of the Budget in which he reconciles the difference in the estimates given by the Administrator and those understood to have been alloted by the Budget Bureau.

Mr. President, you will recall that the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations hearing this testimony referred to the fact that there were funds available to carry the W. P. A. force of 90,000 that were employed in other Federal agencies until the 1st of March. Therefore, to maintain the figure of 3,000,000 now employed, there would be need for an appropriation for taking care of only 2.910,000 to March 1.

At $61 per person, 2,910,000 persons would require for their employment approximately $177,000,000 for each of the months of January and February. That would make a total of $354,000,000 required for the 2,910,000 for the months of January and February. Then for the month of March there would have to be an appropriation of $183,000,000 to carry the full 3,000,000 through March. This figure is arrived at by multiplying 3,000,000, the number employed, by $61, the amount required to employ 1 person per month. Adding the $354,000,000 necessary for the employment of the presently engaged 3,000,000 up until March 1 to the $183,000,000 required for their employment during the month of March, we get a total of $537,000,000 required to carry the program with the present volume of employment to the end of the month of March.

Then, Mr. President, starting off with the fact that the House appropriated, and the committee recommends, $725,-000,000, and adding to that $190,000,000, which by hypothesis was on hand January 1, we have a total of $915,000,000 available for the program under the scheme of the House appropriation. Deducting $537,000,000 from $915,000,000, we get $378,000,000 available for the program for the months of April, May, and June. It is obvious that that sum of money will yield a uniform and average employment of only 2,070,000 persons for the 3-month period. That figure is arrived at by multiplying $61 per person by 3 months, which will be $183 required to keep 1 person on the pay roll for the months of April, May, and June, and dividing $183 into the fund available for those 3 months, $378,000,000, by which we get an average of 2,070,000 persons that that fund will carry until the end of June.

It is obvious to anybody, by simple arithmetic, that an average of 2,000,000 persons for 3 months would allow us to carry the 3,000,000 and the 1,000,000 for exactly the same length of time in order to reach the average for the 3-month period of 2,000,000.

So that is the reasoning by which the W. P. A. authorities inform us that the number who will be employed under the $725,000,000 appropriation at the end of June will be 1,050,-000; and that will necessitate the reduction of about 2,000,000 persons from the W. P. A. rolls of this country between now and the end of June this year.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PEPPER. Gladly.

Mr. ADAMS. On page 60 of the Senate committee hearings is a table submitted by Colonel Harrington in reference to the proposed appropriation of $725,000,000, in which he says that in June there will be 1,930,000 persons on the rolls. That is his tabulation, which will be found on page 60 of the Senate committee hearings.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I have given the premise and the process of reasoning by which I have arrived at that conclusion. If the chairman of the subcommittee proposes to contest either the premise or the process, the opportunity is open to him so to do. I can only say that I have in my hand a copy of Colonel Harrington's letter to the Senate majority leader, in which he reiterates his previous evidence that the number to be employed at the end of June of this year with the $725,000,000 appropriation is 1,050,000. That is arrived at by the figure 3,000,000 for January, 3,000,000 for February, 2,925,000 for March, 2,600,000 for April, 2,000,000 for May, 1,350,000 for June, and 1,050,000 at the end of the month of June.

Mr. President, whether or not that is so, I desire to call the attention of the Senate and the subcommittee to the fact that nobody disputes that either figure which is proposed to be appropriated will give a single job to the 750,000 persons of this country who have been carefully certified by their own State agencies as being in need, employable, and not able to get jobs on the W. P. A. because sufficient funds are not available for their employment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield. Mr. BORAH. Did the Senator say the number was 750,000?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I thought it was 925,000.

Mr. PEPPER. Well, at least 750,000, I will say to the Senator from Idaho, and the truth is, as Colonel Harrington testified in his testimony before the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee, the W. P. A. has never given employment to more than 27 percent of the total number of the unemployed of the country. There are at least 11,000,000 unemployed men and women in this Nation who are eligible for employment and not able to get jobs under the present program.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. MILLER addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield first to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] interrupted the Senator from Florida and referred to the table on page 60 of the Senate committee hearings, which has been referred to on numerous occasions in this debate as indicating that the testimony of the Administrator was to the effect that if he had only $725,000,000 appropriated, 1,930,000 persons would be employed during June of this fiscal year.

I should like to point out that at the time the Administrator presented that table there was not before him, nor was there knowledge so far as I understand, of the committee's proposal to provide that there should be no cut in excess of 5 percent; and therefore his break-down of what the employment would be month by month on the average under the $725,000,000 appropriation did not take into consideration the Senate committee's recommendation, which now prevents any discharge in excess of 5 percent. Therefore it seems to me that that must in all fairness appear upon the record so far as the Administrator is concerned, because, as will be seen by any Senator who refers to page 60, he has broken down the expenditures and the total employment figures on the W. P. A., providing $725,000,000 should be allowed, beginning with a reduction of 200,000 in February and 400,000 in March, which could not take place under the Senate committee's proposal, because that would provide that not to exceed 150,000 persons could be discharged during those months. Therefore it follows, it seems to me, that there will not be the same amount of money available to carry such a large number of persons beyond the 1st of April.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for bringing out that fact. I have just turned to the copy of the letter I have, which was sent to the majority leader, and I find a direct affirmation of what the Senator from Wisconsin has just pointed out in his statement. The figures are given by the Administrator under the House $725,000,000 appropriation, without the 5-percent prohibition exactly as the Senator from Wisconsin pointed out. Three million would be employed for the month of January, 2,800,000 for the month of February, 2,600,000 for the month of March, 2,400,000 for the month of April, 2,150,000 for the month of May, 1,930,000 at the beginning of June, and 1,850,000 at the end of June. I thank the Senator for clarifying that point, and I hope the chairman of the subcommittee will take note of that contribution the Senator from Wisconsin has made.

Mr. President, why has not the Senate subcommittee told us how much more money would be available to take care of the additional 750,000 who are certified and not able to get jobs? If 2 people out of 5 who are unemployed are able to get jobs on W. P. A., why are not 5 people out of 5 entitled to the same privilege? If it is economically and morally sound to give 2 out of 5 work-relief jobs, why is it not economically and morally sound to give 5 out of 5 work-relief jobs? Yet the members of this committee tell us they are going to save $150,000,000, and that we will be compelled to cut off but a few. Why do they ignore the threequarters of a million who have not a chance to get jobs even if the present appropriation is continued?

Not only that, but there are 1,640,000 people over 65 years of age in this country who are receiving social-security benefits, and those people are not getting social-security benefits as large in amount as the minimum W. P. A. wage. In my State, which happens to be the highest among the Southern States in the amount of its social-security contribution, the beneficiaries are not getting over about $16 a month, whereas the minimum W. P. A. wage is $26 a month, even in the most remote rural sections. If those people just had an opportunity to get W. P. A. jobs which would bring their incomes up to the minimum of $26 a month, that would mean many more millions of dollars; and the committee is not concerned about taking care of that group.

In addition to that, there are in this country 250,000 mothers with dependent children, embracing a total of 630,-000 children, and every one of those mothers receives on an average a sum less than the minimum W. P. A. wage. If they were given an opportunity to get W. P. A. work which would supplement their incomes in many States, only six or eight dollars a month, even up to the minimum W. P. A. wage, that would take many more millions of dollars, and the committee has not concerned itself about those people.

In addition, there are 1,520,000 families, representing five or six million people, altogether, who are receiving direct relief from the States and their political subdivisions, and in their case also the amount of their relief is less than the minimum W. P. A. wage. If those people were given an opportunity to get W. P. A. jobs which would at least give them enough work to bring their incomes up to the minimum W. P. A. wage, that would take some more millions of dollars, and the committee has not concerned itself about those.

In addition to that, there are at least 750,000 farmers in the United States whose total individual annual income is less than the minimum annual income of the employed W. P. A. workers. To give those 750,000 farmers an opportunity to get into W. P. A. work in the off season, when their labor is not required in their agricultural pursuits, to bring their annual income up to the W. P. A. wage would take some more millions of dollars, and the committee has not concerned itself about those people.

There are at least 100,000 farmers who are receiving farm security benefits, a $50 loan, or a $25 loan, a loan of enough money to buy a mule or plough stock, a bit of farm equipment, and because they borrow maybe $30 from the Farm Security Administration they are ineligible for any W. P. A. benefits under the existing rules of the W. P. A., because of the limited W. P. A. funds available.

Mr. President, the committee has not said, "We will give those fellows opportunity to get a little W. P. A. work in the off season so as to bring their annual incomes up to the minimum W. P. A. wage." They too have been ignored in the calculations of this committee, which comes here and tells us that we have to save $150,000,000; and in doing that we have to cut off between now and the end of June at least 2,000,000 people-men and women in this country who have been given at least an opportunity to get a pittance of remuneration and a pittance of a livelihood.

Mr. President, there is something a great deal more fundamental involved in this debate than the question of $150,000,000, important as that is. The Senator from Colorado and some other members of the committee, with perfect honesty and perfect sincerity, have a different political and economic philosophy from that of some of the rest of us in this Chamber who may be entitled to have attributed to them perhaps the same degree of sincerity and honesty of purpose. I do not quarrel with any man who takes the other view of the matter, and there are many, perhaps more, for all I know, in that category; but the fundamental question involved in this debate is whether or not we are going to embrace the philosophy of the Senator from Colorado and those of like view, or whether we are going to express the philosophy which is manifested in refusing to make this reduction requested by our committee and by the other branch of the Congress.

Walter Lippmann, in an article of his which appeared on January 23 of this year, made the following statement about the subject of the present debate:

The essentials which remain are, first, the acceptance as a fact that there is a permanent mass of unemployed; second, the opinion that the able-bodied unemployed must have work relief rather than a dole; third, the conviction that much more than half the cost of relief must come out of Federal funds. Not all public men would subscribe fiatly to all three propositions. But few, if any, I believe, will be found to challenge them when it comes to casting a vote for which they are publicly accountable.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I may say to the Senator that I have no disposition to argue; I am honestly seeking information. The Senator stated a moment ago, if I understood him correctly, that there are some 11,000,000 employables in the United States who are seeking employment and cannot be furnished with employment.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. GILLETTE. Will the Senator state the source of his figures in that regard?

Mr. PEPPER. Specifically, and to give it more directly to the Senator, it was stated in the testimony of Colonel Harrington in the committee hearings, the report of which is now before the Senate. Of course, his figure is an estimate, as the Senator knows, but he tried to reconcile all the various estimates and all the different data which have been available into the best estimate he could make, and that is the estimate which Colonel Harrington gave to the committee, as the report of the hearings will disclose. He said they had not provided for more than 27 percent of the whole number of unemployed.

Mr. GILLETTE. I thank the Senator. Will he yield further?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETTE. The Senator also referred to the 725,000, if I remember the figure correctly, who are on the relief rolls, and who cannot be taken care of under the present program. I wonder whether the Senator has given any thought to the repeated charges which are made that, this fund being distributed on the basis of need rather than upon the ratio of population, there is an incentive to pad the relief rolls in the hope of participating more largely in the funds?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think that charge, whether innocently made or otherwise made—and I am not saying the Senator has made the charge, knowing that he is merely referring to it—does a gross injustice to the devoted, faithful social-service workers in every State in this Union who have held up the matter of certification until they could make thorough investigations of the relief applicants and finally certify those people to the W. P. A. as eligible for work relief.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am very glad to have that information, because I had hoped that that condition prevailed.

Mr. President, I have before me a table which breaks down the distribution of this fund should the population ratio be used; and according to that table, I find that had that system been used the Senator's State of Florida in the last 2½ years would have received $10,315,000 more than it received. My State of Iowa would have received over $56,000,000 more than it received. The table shows that New York received $328,000,000 more than it should have received on the basis of population ratio, and Pennsylvania received around $178,000,000 more. So it was interesting to me to hear what the Senator said. My inquiry was intended to disclose whether in the Senator's opinion there was any basis for the assertions which have been made that there was, in determining the need, a disposition not to use population ratio.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask the Senator whether or not he has found in his State the situation which I have found repeatedly, of people coming to him claiming that they were entitled to be certified, pointing out a need proving as they did to my satisfaction at least, that it was absolutely unjustifiable not to certify them. I do not know how many persons of that kind there are, but certainly it is my opinion that there are as many in that classification who ought to be certified as there are of those who are certified to be in poverty.

Mr. PEPPER. There is no doubt in my mind, Mr. President, of the truth of what the Senator from Washington has just pointed out. Senators heard yesterday the statement of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] in which he pointed out that such a situation in his State had come to his knowledge, and that the investigating units in his State were reliable and were accurate in their determination. I know that in my State of Florida we are from 2 to 3 months behind in the certification of relief applicants, due to the fact that the social-service workers will not certify them until they have taken time to make a thorough investigation, and there is not money available to employ enough social-service investigators to enable them to do that job promptly.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask to interrupt the Senator from Florida simply to call his attention to a statement by Colonel Harrington which appears on page 44 of the Senate hearings, when this matter was being discussed, and the relative accuracy of the investigation of the certifying officers and the W. P. A. authorities were under consideration. The colonel said:

During the 3-month period covering October, November, and December 1938, approximately 75,000 certifications made by public relief agencies were rejected by W. P. A.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator does not point out the method used, or the reason for the rejection. It might well have been, as was pointed out by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] in his debate on this measure, that a man was sent over certified for W. P. A. work, but the W. P. A. authorities found he could not do the work they needed to be done at that time, and he might have been rejected for that reason. Perhaps he might not have been in good health at that particular time. That, however, does not go to the integrity of the certification, Mr. President. I have heard no Senator willing to impugn the integrity of the public welfare agencies of the various States of this Union which have made these certifications of persons in their own communities.

Some Senators are constantly saying, "Let us turn this matter back to the States. We are here in Washington, and do not know who need these jobs." Mr. President, these certifications were not made by the W. P. A., they were not made by persons in Washington, they were not made by persons who were on the Federal pay roll. They were made by persons living in the communities in which these relief applicants live. Therefore, if a person were certified as a relief client and it was a matter of common knowledge that he was not eligible, that fact would stand out like the nose on your face in the eyes of the people, to the great indignation of those in that community.

Mr. President, no one will deny that we have more unemployed than we are giving jobs to. The committee does not deny that fact. Yet many say that we should reduce the number now employed by a figure which the Administrator said will reach 1,000,000 by the end of June of this year.

I know that all of us are aware of what has been going on in the world since the beginning of what we call the industrial or the machine age. We all know how violently the inventions and the discoveries and the genius of the past hundred years have shocked the existing economic and social order.

Colonel Harrington also testified, that we commonly overlook the number of new workers coming every year into the ranks of the unemployable. He said that every year at least 500,000 workers become of working age and working capacity, and they go out into the labor market to get jobs somewhere in private or public employment. If we accept that figure, Mr. President, of 500,000 new workers becoming available each year and coming into the labor market, 3,000,000 new men and women have come to be of working age in the last 6 years, since 1933, when the present administration came into power.

What are we doing? We are giving W. P. A. employment to just exactly that number, 3,000,000, who would be unemployed otherwise. What have we done, therefore, to reduce the number of 15,000,000 or 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 who were unemployed in 1933, when this administration took office? Due to the large number coming in every year, by our W. P. A. appropriations we have done no more than absorb the new entrants into the labor market, and not at all reduced the number net of the unemployed in 1933 when this program began.

Another fact that is not particularly observed is that every year other people are being thrown out of employment by reason of technological improvements which take place within the year. As a matter of fact, the testimony developed before the committee shows that at least 10 percent fewer people were required to produce the income of this Nation in 1938 than would have been required to produce that income if the rate of production per man had been that of the year 1929. As a matter of fact, 1,000,000 more workers would have been required to produce the income of 1938 than were required if the rate of production of 1929 had been the rate of production of employed men and women in 1938.

In 1880 one man upon the farm produced enough to feed five other people on the farm and one-half a person in the city. But so great has been technological improvement on the farm that in the year 1938 the 1 farmer from his farm feeds not only 4 people besides himself but 12 additional people in the city and 2 additional people abroad. Yet we say we are surprised that we should have large agricultural surpluses.

In 1869 the productive power of one laborer in terms of horsepower was 1, and in the year 1938 it was 5 horsepower per laboring person, on an average.

Therefore it is no wonder that we do not need all of our employable and able people to produce what we are now producing with our modern methods of production.

As a matter of fact, in the year 1936 we came within 5 percent of producing as much goods in volume as we produced in 1929, yet while we had 4,000,000 unemployed in 1929, we had at least 10,000,000 unemployed in 1936. Did those 6,000,000 men just get to be unworthy, did they get to be derelicts, did they become of the undeserving class because technological processes in that period of time displaced them from their jobs?

I say if one takes into consideration the number of new workers coming to working age every year, and the number of workers displaced from employment annually by reason of technological improvement, Mr. President, it will be found that our income in 1939 will have to be one-quarter again as high as it was in 1929 to give employment to the same number of people as were employed in 1929. Has the committee taken that fact into consideration?

I think anyone who will view this question with candor and complete intellectual honesty will come to the conclusion that if we think that private industry, however prosperous it may become, is going to absorb these unemployed men and women, we are just cherishing a pipe dream. We might as well tell the people of America now that as long as industry is mechanized as it now is they never will get a job in private industry, and we deceive them if we withhold from them knowledge which teaches us this, and do not tell them the truth as soon as possible. The proof of it is in every book and every treatise on economy and employment that can be picked up. I say that based not only on the economy of America but on the economy of the nations of the world.

This summer I happened to be in Geneva, Switzerland, and visited the International Labor Building there, and saw depicted in graphic form, in the form of a series of blocks, the economic condition and the number of unemployed in the nations of the world. What surprising fact did that disclose? Beside the name "Great Britain" I saw and read the inscription on a block indicating the number of the unemployed of that country as being very great.

Beside that block I saw one with the name "United States" on it. That was even higher than England. Besides that, I saw another with the name "France" on it, and that was almost as high. Beside that I saw another with the name "Holland" on it, and others with the names of other democracies of the world. Every one of them stuck conspicuously up above the table top to indicate to a curious world the fact that the democracies had not solved the question of unemployment.

Then I looked down the table a little farther and I saw one marked "Germany." That was hardly an inch high. I saw another marked "Italy." That was only a little higher. I saw another marked "Japan," and that was lower than those of either Germany or Italy. I made the startling discovery that those nations had resorted to the most extreme methods to combat this national challenge to the ability of the state to maintain its integrity and that of its people.

In my hand is the League of Nations World Economic Survey for the years 1937 and 1938. Reading from pages 192 and 193 of that volume, it says:

During the same period the attitude of governments toward intervention in internal economic affairs has suffered an extreme In the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, complete state control over economic affairs had already been instituted before 1929. In Germany, control over many aspects of internal economic life has been imposed since the post-1929 slump.

Unemployment has been reduced to vanishing point by state activity in public works, in rearmament expenditure and the development of the armed forces, in industrial investment, and the production of substitute raw materials under the 4-year plan. To carry out these objects, prices and wages have been fixed, many raw materials have been rationed, labor has been made liable to conscription for work of interest to the state, and in many other ways industry has been subjected to increasing Government con-trol. These measures have been combined with the control of external economic relations to form a coordinated policy of autarchy designed to make Germany as self-sufficient as possible. Similar but less far-reaching measures have been adopted in Italy. In Japan, as a result of the war against China, the Government has instituted control over imports and exports, capital investment, prices and raw materials; and in the national general mobilization law, passed in March 1938, extensive powers of control were granted to the Government over most of the main branches of economic life.

Even in countries such as France, the United States, and the United Kingdom, in which internal economic conditions remain more or less liberal, government economic interventions remain more or less liberal, government economic intervention has developed considerably since 1929. The Blum experiment in France and the New Deal in the United States have involved the extension of government control over prices, wages, hours of work, social services, monetary policy, the stock exchange, and the new-issue

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. May I respectfully inquire what point the Senator was making in reference to the situation in Japan, Italy, Germany, and the other countries which the Senator mentioned?

Mr. PEPPER. The point I am making, Mr. President, is that with modern machine and technological methods of production no economy in the world-I do not care whether it is located in the Old World or the New-is able to give jobs to the unemployed without the intervention of the government and the opening of the government pocketbook.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. If we are to escape the degree of rigidity, the measure of exactitude, and perhaps the essential loss of our liberties, which are the price the people of the totalitarian states have paid for a degree of economic security, we must do it willingly, through the democratic process of intelligent, free, and generous governmental aid to our economic system and our impoverished unemployed citizens.

Mr. REYNOLDS. As I understand, the Senator makes the point that the general utilization of machinery in the United States, in comparison with the limited utilization of laborsaving devices in the other countries of the world, has of necessity had much to do with our unemployment problem in this country.

Mr. PEPPER. Exactly.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And, as the Senator very properly put it a moment ago in interpreting the lines of the book from which he was reading, the circumstance of the nations mentioned by him having indulged so generously in the production of armaments and war materials has of necessity absorbed the activities of many hundreds of thousands of men and women in those countries. As a result, we must of necessity give close attention to that situation in this country and, as a matter of fact, more than ever on account of the fact that the dictators of the world in the totalitarian countries have brought into practical use for themselves a method and means of bringing about international trade by means of the barter system, in which we, unfortunately, cannot participate on account of the fact that the countries with which Japan, Germany, and Italy are trading are in a position to supply raw materials. We cannot engage in the barter trade in competition with those nations for the reason that we already have the raw materials which Italy, Japan, and Germany are obtaining from the various countries of the world, particularly South America, through the barter system.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator very much for his very valuable contribution to the thought I was trying to present.

Mr. President, so great has been the effect upon our internal economy of modern methods of production and technological improvements that in his antimonopoly message to the Congress last year the President told us that 200 corporations of this Nation own one-fourth of the total wealth of the country and one-half of the nonbanking corporate wealth of the Nation. He told us also that one-tenth of 1 percent of all the reporting corporations in the United States in 1935 earned 50 percent of the net income earned by all corporations in the country in the same year. He also told us that 33 percent of all the property transmitted by inheritance in the United States of America in the year 1937 was transmitted by 4 percent of all the estates in the country in that year.

What has been the effect on the purchasing power and the earning power of the masses of the people of the country? Recently a report was issued showing the income of the various family groups of this country, and the number of families we have. That report showed that there are roughly 29,000,000 American families. It showed that 14 percent of those 29,000,000 American families have an annual income of less than $500. Think of that, Senators. One-seventh of America's families having a total annual income for the whole family of less than $500. How many automobiles can they buy? How much farm machinery can they buy? How much of the products of America's factories can they purchase?

The report further showed, Mr. President, that 42 percent of those 29,000,000 American families had an annual income of less than $1,000. Think of that! Nearly half of America's families have a total family income of less than a thousand dollars a year. How many automobiles can they buy? How much farm machinery can they buy? How much manufactured goods can they buy with that income?

The report further shows that 65 percent of the 29,000,000 American families have an annual income of less than $1,500 a year; that 87 percent have an income less than $2,500 per year; that 97 percent have an income of less than $5,000 a year; and 99 percent have an income of less than $10,000 a year. Only 1 percent of America's families make $10,000 or more every year.

In the antimonopoly message our President further said that  $1\frac{1}{2}$  percent of America's families make as many dollars as 47 percent of America's families.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. Just a moment ago the Senator referred to the displacement of labor by technological improvements, and made a very able discussion of the question. I wonder if, before he gets into another field of discussion, he will comment on the statement, which is borne out by statistics of the Commerce Department, that because of new industries, such as the automobile industry, the radio, the moving picture, and industries in the beauty-parlor field, 7 percent more persons are employed in industry than were employed at the time to which he referred in this comparison. Will the Senator comment on that point?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, we all know, for example, that the invention of the steam engine made it possible for the steelmaker to obtain a job, and it eventually gave work to the miner. It also provided commodities to be transported by the transportation systems. Perhaps it eventually gave the bank clerk a job, and many others throughout the ramifications of our economic life. Yet, Mr. President, we all know that the rate at which new jobs are being provided is not as rapid as the rate of displacements from old jobs. Even if the statement is true that eventually as the result of inventions employment will be given to a number of people perhaps even in excess of the number originally displaced, yet we all know that that is not a result which follows directly the displacement. For example, when canned music was put in theaters there were at least 10,000 musicians thrown suddenly and definitely out of a job in the theaters of the country where they were employed. So we all know that when buggy factories closed down the workers in those factories generally did not have a job to which they could go, and when the tractor comes along and displaces plow hands, for that matter, they do not have anywhere to go for a job.

A little while ago I was in the great sugar belt of my State, where I saw a machine that can harvest sugarcane in such quantities that it can do the work of 200 laborers. There is such a machine. Fortunately the salutary policy of the management of the particular plantation is to give the jobs to people and not to avail itself even of that form of economy made possible by this mechanical instrument. I heartily commend that policy in that particular case, although, generally, I think things ought to be done in the most efficient way and some compensation made for it in some other way to give those who are displaced jobs. But suppose they had started that machine gathering sugarcane; at least 200 men would have received their notice to go to what? Not even to the W. P. A. rolls.

So I know that this problem has grown more and more acute until it has become not a local problem in any part of the world; it is a world-wide problem, because of which some nations have felt themselves so much endangered that to try to meet it they have even mobilized every unit of their economic and human power as if engaged in a war.

Furthermore, in relation to agriculture, 42 percent of the farmers in this country are tenant farmers, and in the year 1935 the rate of increase in the number of tenants per year was 250,000. So more and more are the ramifications of this dislodgment from economic moorings reaching to every phase of our national life. I may add, Mr. President, that as a corollary of that low standard of income and low standard of living and low standard of opportunity in this country, where the Government rests upon the intelligence of its citizenry, we have a million more illiterates than we have college graduates.

Not only that, but recently the President said in his health message that every year at least a million of our fellow citizens die premature deaths and our annual economic loss from preventable disease and illness is at least $250,000,000.

Those who on the pretense of economy talk about not giving jobs to the waifs in the alleys of the cities because it costs too much, those who talk about not giving jobs to the derelicts upon the farms because that costs too much, would better observe the fact that in the United States of America our annual crime bill is $15,000,000,000.

That is the situation generally which our Government found when it came into power in 1933.

There are some of our friends who say that the only thing we need to do to have prosperity is to give business confidence, and by confidence they mean Hooverizing the Government—that is to say, doing nothing; because, surely, the businessmen had nothing to fear from 1929 until the 4th of March 1933. Not even the businessman who did not want to play fair with his fellow businessmen had anything to fear in that period of our national life. That was the period of laissez faire, when men could live in a civilized country by the rule of the jungle—

They should take who have the power, And they should keep who can.

Yet I hear some of our brethren on the other side of the aisle, because of a little petty politics in relief, because it is administered by human beings and not deities or divinities, stand up and castigate it as the appalling wrong of this generation. I think the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Neely] perhaps has sufficiently emphasized the sordid and slimy tale of actual fraud and thievery, reaching to the very highest places in this Nation, that emanated from the corridors of the other party when it administered the people's government. In two Democratic administrations of 8 years each, when in both there was spent at least $4,000,000,000 of the public money, I challenge the other party to show that the finger of suspicion has ever been pointed at our White House.

Has its slimy trail ever led to a Cabinet officer? Has it ever touched the high places in our administrative machinery? No, Mr. President; they do not care to debate the matter on that basis, because they live not only in glass houses but in houses more fragile than glass when they begin to make moral comparisons in the integrity of this administration of public affairs and their own.

As an illustration of the attitude of the administration in 1932, they finally allowed the light of a new day to penetrate sufficiently into their beclouded philosophy to establish the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Let me tell the Senate the wonderful record of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the effort to lift this country's relief load from the backs of the States and their political subdivisions under the Hoover administration.

From 1932, when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created, until January 1933, that agency distributed a total of $80,000,000 for relief purposes in this country, which is exactly the number of dollars that it loaned to Mr. Charles Dawes for the First National Bank of Chicago, which may or may not have been paid back to the Government.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?
The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LEE. Perhaps they thought the letters "R. F. C." meant "relief for Charlie." [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. That is probably correct.

Mr. President, this administration, therefore, having to start a new way, to undertake an entirely new thing in American political life, began courageously to try to do something about this problem because they preferred to go down fighting to sitting and dying without making an effort or drying up nationally to nothing. So this administration created in May 1933 the F. E. R. A. That agency received an appropriation of $500,000,000 on the 12th of May 1933. In turn, that agency was succeeded in November 1933 by the C. W. A., and that agency on the 15th of February 1934 received an appropriation of $950,000,000. Then, in the spring of 1935, Congress created the Works Progress Administration, and there was an appropriation of $4,548,000,000 provided for that purpose.

Remember that we had experimented since 1933 with public works, with direct relief, with aid to the States and their political subdivisions, and finally 2 or 3 years of experience taught us that the W. P. A. set-up, whereby the Government would give jobs only to employables and the States would give relief doles to those unable to work was the best method of handling nationally the relief problem.

In 1936 the appropriation for W. P. A. was $2,234,000,000. Mr. President, the total amount appropriated for relief under the present administration from 1933 until the end of 1936 was approximately $10,000,000,000. Bear that figure in mind, if you will.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has been relating our steps from the beginning as to relief and the W. P. A. Does not the Senator think, though, that Congress has been derelict in not enacting legislation setting up standards to inform the W. P. A. how the organization should be operated? Have we not given too much authority to the Administrator just to take money and do what he pleases with it? As it is now, when an applicant goes to the W. P. A. he does not know what the standard of requirement is. He does not know whether he has any right, if there is such a thing, to get on the rolls or whether he does not, and the public at least has the idea, whether founded or unfounded, that it is up to the local administrator to put him on or not to put him on. Is not that true?

Mr. PEPPER. If there is any such misapprehension as that in the public mind—and to some extent it may be justified—there is no doubt that the matter should be made clear to everybody that by congressional limitation there can be but 5 percent of the W. P. A. funds used for administrative purposes. The administrative personnel does not have to be certified; it does not necessarily have to be in need of a job; but it represents only 5 percent out of a hundred percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas must have failed to make himself clear. I am talking about the whole thing. Does not the Senator think that Congress should have passed legislation to define how the act should have been administered, just as we pass legislation to tell the War Department, the Navy Department, and all the other departments of the Government. Because of the fact that we have not done that, the public has concluded that it is just a matter of local influence and pull, and all that sort of thing. That is bad in the administration of this kind of legislation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to answer the Senator's question, if he will allow me to make one more preliminary statement. The 95 percent can be expended only to people who are certified by State agencies to be eligible. If there is a different idea in the mind of anybody, it ought to be made very clear.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certified as to what? Mr. PEPPER. As to their need for a job.

Mr. CONNALLY. Their need. There is no standardization. There may be one rule in one State and another rule in another State. I think some of the committees that have been busy with this matter should have reported legislation so that there would be some standard to determine whether or not a man was in need of relief. I have letters complaining that men who are drawing income from other sources, for instance, pensions from the Government are still on W. P. A. and drawing additional income, while other people cannot get on the rolls. That is what causes so much dissatisfaction.

Mr. PEPPER. I desire to answer directly the Senator's question. I will say that I favor having all legislation lay down as complete standards for its administration as can possibly be laid down. I think that is the proper spirit and the proper function of legislation. But I do know—and I am sure the Senator from Texas will acquiesce in that statement—that it is literally impossible to prescribe all the details by legislation. A certain amount of administrative discretion must necessarily be employed by any administrative agency; but, as far as possible, based upon our experience and based upon not making rules so rigid as to defeat their own objective, we should broaden the scope of our legislation as much as we possibly can.

I will announce this as my individual view, Mr. President: Personally I think no certification should be necessary for anybody to get a job on public works. I think enough public jobs should be created so that every man or woman willing to work at a job for which he or she is reasonably adapted should be able to get that job at the prevailing W. P. A. wage.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then the Senator also thinks that we have been derelict in not prescribing some formula for the allocation of these funds as between States or districts or subdivisions?

For instance, my information is that New York State has received several hundred million dollars more than it would have received upon any basis of population or other formula, whereas the State from which I come is something over $100,000,000 shy. It is not fair or just for Congress merely to turn over to any single individual the power, we may say, of life and death—life and death over the Treasury to a certain extent—the power of saying, "Why, yes; I will give you $100,000,000," or "Here is $10,000,000," without Congress laying down some formula or some sort of a basis.

Gentlemen who have studied the subject more than the Senator from Texas has done are better prepared to say what the formula should be; but I understand that the law fixes none at all except the sweet will of the Administrator. So the Congress is not performing its duty if it does not adopt some method of saying how these funds shall be allocated, and how the individual shall get on the rolls, and how he shall get off.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, it is entirely agreeable to me, and I think it is proper, that the funds should be distributed on a basis of need, and not geography or population.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the Senator tell us what is need? What is the standard of need? Does a man have to be starving, and not be able to buy food within an hour; or, if he has a small income, is he in need?

That illustrates just what the Senator from Texas has in mind. There ought to be some standard as to what is need. A man who lives luxuriously might think need was one thing. A man who lives impecuniously and abstemiously might think need was something else.

Mr. PEPPER. I am sure that any reasonable State welfare agency would at least be able to tell whether a man or a woman needed a W. P. A. job that would give them, in my State, $26 a month. If there have been instances in which that judgment has been improperly exercised, such persons should be purged from the rolls. Nobody doubts that; but I will tell the Senator what I do resent.

I hear some of these great "watchdogs of the Treasury" state their views of these matters and say people are on the W. P. A. rolls who should not be on them. Such people never speak of those who are entitled to get on such rolls and never get a chance. I should like to say that in the course of my knowledge of human history I have never seen a human being improved in his condition, I have never seen the burden of labor lightened upon the backs of those who toil, I have never seen men's horizons broadened and their vision elevated to better and more beautiful things by any man whose reputation was that he was a "watchdog of the Treasury." I know that in society we have to have both kinds of people. I presume some of us might spend too much if we did not have on the other side some men who were worse, perhaps, to counteract us. But, anyway, I say that what we should do is to give jobs to those who need them. We all know that. If any better way can be devised than is now being employed, I am for that way, provided it is not used as an excuse to achieve some object contrary to what we are all trying to achieve—the best interest of the man who does not actually have a job.

A moment ago I was saying that beginning in 1933 the Federal appropriations for work relief had amounted to approximately $10,000,000,000. I want Senators to remember that figure. Then in 1936 Congress passed the Bonus Payment Act, as a result of which in the years 1935 and 1936 we expended $2,500,000,000 in payment of the soldiers' bonus; and in the years 1936 and 1937 we expended to veterans $1,128,000,000. You will see, Mr. President, that that makes a total veterans' expenditure in those 2 fiscal years of approximately $3,500,000,000. Adding that to the $10,000,-000,000 that we have spent since 1933 for work relief, you will see that during the years 1936 and 1937 we poured nearly $15,000,000,000 of extraordinary expenditure into the channels of purchasing power and trade in America, not to mention the other appropriations of the Federal Government which were being carried on in due course.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I gladly yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Without debating the merits or demerits of relief expenditures, and assuming that it is necessary for the Congress to appropriate for the unemployed, does the Senator feel that we have arrived at a time when we ought to put governmental expenditures on more of a pay-as-you-go basis?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not. I know the Senator from Maryland makes that as an honest inquiry, and my answer is an equally honest "no." I do not believe that we can escape the necessity of continuing to put money in circulation, continuing to increase purchasing power, continuing to increase the national wealth, and that the vehicle by which that must be accomplished in the absence of it being done by private capital is the extension of Federal funds and Federal credit by the Federal Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Assuming that the expenditure of the money which we propose to expend between now and the end of the fiscal year 1940 will result in a public debt of approximately $44,000,000,000, and that thereafter the need for relief expenditures will continue, would the Senator then be in favor of putting the country on more of a pay-as-you-go basis?

Mr. PEPPER. I would not, unless economic conditions had taken some sudden change or alteration in course, so that by some miracle, which I do not anticipate, private industry and enterprise might be able to absorb practically all the unemployed of the country.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator another question, if I may. Assuming that we go to the year 1945, and still have our unemployed, and that we provide for them not by raising revenue but by borrowing against the future, using borrowed money to provide for these extraordinary expenditures, would the Senator then feel that we should begin to go from that point onward on more of a pay-asyou-go basis, assuming that we should have added another $15,000,000,000 to the national debt, which would then take it to almost $60,000,000,000?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, my answer to the Senator would be the same, but I am afraid that in making those answers he will not detect the fact that I am basing them upon this fundamental proposition: I am assuming that this money is not thrown into the sea. I am assuming that it is employed in useful projects which have an economic value to the Nation, and that while we are spending money we are increasing the national income and increasing the national wealth, and that private investment does not absorb the field, so that it is necessary that public investment be a substitute for normal private investment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall have to make a brief statement in order to ask the Senator a question.

It is assumed by many persons, and indeed by the Senator himself in part, if I understood his remarks, that the machine age has made a permanent large reservoir of unemployment. Assuming that the Senator's premise is sound. therefore, through the approaching years, and particularly with world conditions upset as they are, we shall have this problem continually to deal with. If we are dealing with it permanently, on a borrow-against-the-future payment plan, how long can we keep on before we begin to recognize it as a permanent problem, and take care of it out of current revenues?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, it sounds like a paradoxical answer to be made right out without explanation; but the truth is that so long as our national income is increasing, and so long as our national wealth is increasing, it is not a disproportionate thing if our national debt is increasing.

I mean to say that I think we are better off now than we were in 1932 in spite of the fact, as I propose to develop later, that we have spent, we will say, $20,000,000,000 in the increase of the national debt since that time. Yet the figures are well known to all of us, that the total debt of the American economic system, as the President stated in his address to the Congress, as Mr. Wallace has repeatedly stated, and incorporated in his little book, Paths to Plenty, is no greater, appreciably, than it was in 1929.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the ranks of the unemployed are no less than they were in 1929, so we have simply gone around on the treadmill, have we not? What difference does it make, if we have the same number of unemployed today that we had in 1932?

Mr. PEPPER. Of course, Mr. President, unfortunately eating is something one has to do every day.

Mr. TYDINGS. But that is not the question. I am just beginning to wonder where we will eventually come out under a policy which provides for what the Senator claims to be a permanent problem on a temporary rather than a permanent hasis

Mr. PEPPER. I will say frankly to the Senator that I prefer a higher amount of tax as we go along. I should prefer that the amount of the turn-over be greater. In other words, the problem is this: The first farmer who took some seed, which he must have cherished, and threw them into the ground to be covered up must have thought they were lost. But in the harvest of the autumn he saw the enrichment he received from that adventure. So, when we take money from the coffers of those who have acquired it by profit and from those who have acquired it by wage and by salary and throw it back, plant it, and plow it into the economic system again, so that those who had made a profit, wages, and salaries keep on making a profit, and keep on getting wages and salaries, and others may work meanwhile, that is the principle of agriculture with which we are all familiar.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, the Senator is assuming that the farmer owned the seed before he threw it in the ground. In the case we are discussing the farmer does not own the seed; the Government is going out and borrowing the seed. Moreover, it is not planting the seed in the soil of economic production; it is planting it in the soil of relief; and while the purchasing power may stimulate the consumption of goods, and thereby help to some extent economic production, that is the indirect rather than the direct consequence of expenditures of this kind.

The point I wish to make to the Senator is that if the unemployment problem is a permanent problem, if it is going to be here 5 years from today, and 10 years from today, and 20 years from today, and 30 years from today, as the Senator himself, I think, suggested by his comparison of the machine age with the old age-

Mr. PEPPER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. TYDINGS. If that is to be a permanent problem, will we not then have to do eventually what it might be argued it is wise to do now, that is, pay as we go? Certainly if the Senator argues that it is a permanent problem, to solve the problem today with the returns of 10 or 15 years from now is not sound business, in my humble judgment.

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to make three replies to the statement the Senator makes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Probably one will be enough.

Mr. PEPPER. No; I want to cover the three points the Senator suggested.

First, the Senator stated that the seed does not belong to the farmer. It is all part of the same economy, and we are talking about the wealth and the enrichment and the integrity of that economy; so it is all here within the borders of the United States. The farmer does own the seed he is putting out, because it is being distributed by the American people to the American people.

Mr. TYDINGS. But where does the Government get it? Mr. PEPPER. It gets it from the American people.

Mr. TYDINGS. It gets it from the people to whom it is distributing it, does it not?

Mr. PEPPER. Not necessarily.

Mr. TYDINGS. In substance, if we take them as a whole, it comes from them and goes back to them.

Mr. PEPPER. It is a process of movement; yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. At the time they accept it they sign their names to notes promising to repay it in the future.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; it is to be repaid in the future; but it is to be repaid in the future from the revenue of the economic system, of which they are all a part.

Mr. TYDINGS. But suppose the revenue of the economic system does not grow any more than it has grown in the last 5 years?

Mr. PEPPER. That is involved in my second reply; that is, the Senator stated that it was assumed the expenditures had been unproductive. I deny that assumption. In 1932 the national income was $38,000,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, Mr. President-

Mr. PEPPER. Just a moment.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will allow me to interpose, I do not think it is fair argument to take the year 1932, with banks crashing all over the country, and the spiral going down with airplane speed, and say that the condition then was the permanent condition of America, and that, therefore, if we have progressed from that time on, we have made a decided improvement. We could not be any worse after the first 6 months of 1933, when a foundation laid. Conditions were bound to get some better, and I do not think that was altogether due to the economic policies of government.

Mr. PEPPER. I will continue with my second answer to the Senator's observation.

In 1932 the national income was $38,000,000,000; in 1933 it was forty-two billion; in 1934 it was fifty billion; in 1935 it was fifty-five billion. In 1936, after the Federal Government had spent about $4,000,000,000 in the previous year, the national income jumped to $63,400,000,000. In 1937, after the Federal Government had spent $10,000,000,000 since 1933, after the Federal Government had distributed nearly $3,000,000,000 additional in payment of the bonus, the national income jumped to $69,800,000,000. In 1938, after we stopped spending in 1937, after we took in almost as much money as we paid out, if not a little more, including social-security taxes, the income dropped to $64,000,000,000 from $69,000,000,000.

In the spring of 1938, when the spiral of recession was at the bottom, the President obtained from the Congress authority to expend over $3,000,000,000 more; and what happened? The result was that immediately securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange developed a $15,000,000,000 increase in value. The result, generally speaking, was that our economy reflected the enrichment which had come from the investment in that economy of that much money.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then it is the Senator's contention—and he may be right in it; I am just attempting to find out where he stands—that if we continue from year to year this policy of spending borrowed capital, eventually, by that piece of governmental mechanism, we will drive up the national income from sixty-three or sixty-four billions to eighty or more billion dollars. Is that the contention of the Senator?

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct—to a point where the amount of money put into circulation will so compensate for the natural deficiencies of the machine age and the modern industrial structure that there will be something like a balance between income and outgo; and at the same time we will take care of the people who are unemployed by the movement of the system.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am with the Senator up to that point; I understand where he is going, and the Senator may be correct. What he enunciates as a theory—and it is a theory, of course—may turn out to be sound. But suppose the Senator is wrong; suppose the $80,000,000,000 does not come as a result of these devices to which the Senator has referred. What happens then?

Mr. PEPPER. Then every known ingenuity to preserve the modern economic order in its present state to my knowledge will have failed.

Mr. TYDINGS. But how can we then preserve it, when we will have already set in motion, if it fails, perhaps, the very machinery which will ultimately destroy it, namely, taking the savings of the people and using them in this emergency, and then finding that the people have not the earning capacity, because the conditions have not improved, to enable them to repay the sums which they have obligated themselves to pay?

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will allow me to give a simple illustration, a man might start out in business, and he might owe, in the very beginning of the business, $100, and he might have a hole in the wall. He might be able to find someone who would lend him a thousand dollars. and he might take the thousand dollars and increase the size of his store or the magnitude of his business. Then he would owe a thousand dollars, whereas before he owed only a hundred. A bank or some other person having capital to invest might see that the effort he made was tending toward his betterment, and, observing his financial skill, might lend him $10,000. Now he would owe $10,000, instead of a thousand or a hundred. Someone else might lend him a hundred thousand, and he might then get a business upon which he could float an issue of securities to the American public. They might be listed on the exchanges. He might float a million dollars' worth of securities, and he might owe a million dollars. Does it follow that that man has gotten progressively poorer because he owes a million?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; but let us take the Senator's illustration and work it another way. Let us assume there is a man who owns a hole in the wall which he opens up for a hundred dollars. He does a pretty good business and he borrows a thousand dollars; he does an increasingly large business, and he borrows $10,000. Of course, having a larger place, more folks come in the store, and he lays the foundation to float a bond issue, so that he may build a bigger store. He has done all of his business on credit, and after a while the banker who floated the bond issue calls on him to pay, and he finds that in the meantime he has sold the goods, or a substantial part of the goods, upon which he obtained credit. What happens to that particular individual, if what I have supposed in my illustration comes to pass?

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator assumes as a premise that the man does not get back dollar-for-dollar value for the money he borrowed, of course he goes broke. However, I am assuming that the money that we have spent, as I said in the beginning, has not been thrown in the ocean. I am assuming that it has been spent on things that enrich the national economy.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator mean that the building of a schoolhouse produces not spiritual but material wealth? Mr. PEPPER. I do; definitely.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the Senator believe that the building of a new town hall in place of the old town hall produces material rather than spiritual wealth?

Mr. PEPPER. I do; definitely.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should be interested in knowing just how much wealth a new town hall can produce. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not know just what material value the Senator might attribute to a church, and yet I will tell the Senator, and I am sure that when he reflects upon it he will agree with me that if it had not been for the churches that have been built in this country we would not today have anything like the material value that every community has.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not assuming the spiritual side, but I can today take the Senator to an office building, and, for the sake of my illustration, I will assume it is unoccupied. I should like to know what material wealth that unoccupied office building contributes; what it contributes to the sum total of human happiness or economic development.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I do not agree to the assumption that the building is unoccupied. If the Senator will assume an occupied building, I will answer the question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us take a town hall which is occupied with town hall officials. What wealth does that produce? Does it make a suit of clothes? Does it make a loaf of bread? Does it make a pair of shoes? Does it make an automobile? Does it make an asbestos roof, or does it make a pearl button, for that matter?

Mr. PEPPER. I will answer the Senator this way. The girl who sits at a typewriter-

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I think Senators ought to define "wealth." Let us know what is meant when Senators say that wealth is produced or is not produced. Wealth is not composed of material things alone.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say to the Senator from Idaho that I asked the Senator from Florida if he was talking about spiritual or cultural wealth or material wealth, and as I understood his answer, he was assuming that what we were discussing contributed to the material wealth of the country. That was the reason for my pursuing this line of thought, so that I might inform myself with respect to the Senator's point of view. I should be the last one to deny that a church or a schoolhouse has great refining, educational, and cultural advantages. But from the standpoint of bread and butter and shelter it is only indirect. And I was assuming the Senator was arguing that it contributes directly to the material side of clothing, shelter, and food.

Mr. PEPPER. I mean just exactly that, Mr. President; and if the Senator will allow me, I will say why. The figures are available to show that the average income of a boy who has a grammar-school education is one figure. The boy who gets a high-school education in a schoolhouse earns about twice that figure. They boy who gets a college course has an advantage immensely greater than that of one who has not. By which I mean to say that that schoolhouse has made an economic and material contribution to the enrichment of the whole economy, because men have learned there a greater skill. They know how to take Nature's resources and make something more out of them. That is just as material enrichment as there is anywhere.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to debate that. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. PEPPER. I do not wish to yield until I complete my statement. A man who takes a little punch in his hand and punches a notch on a little green piece of paper, so far as the test proposed by the Senator from Maryland is concerned, would not be making any material contribution to the enrichment of his country, and yet that is what a railroad conductor does as a part of his job. Taking a piece of white paper, and putting it in a typewriter, and hitting the keys of that typewriter, and taking out a piece of paper covered with figures, so far as I know, does not give something that is worth much in dollars and cents, and yet the clerk is a part of the economy of the world and makes a material contribution to the world's wealth. So does the schoolhouse, the sewer, the church, and the town hall, and the highway. Does the Senator deny that a public road makes a contribution to the economy of the country?

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not use that in my illustration. What I did use was the town hall primarily, and I am going to ask the Senator a question based on that. I, of course, concede that the cultural advantages of spending money are great. For example, if a sum of $10,000 were to be provided to give every Senator in this body a course at the Beaux Arts at Paris, for example, I have no doubt that he would be enriched terrifically in his artistic appreciation of Millet and Michelangelo and Leonardo da Vinci and many others whom I might mention; but what I do not understand is how the man living down in the Everglades is going to get any more bread to eat by reason of the fact that I am an authority and have received a great cultural inspiration in the art of painting or portraiture.

The point I want to make to the Senator is this: Here is a little town that has a city hall. For some reason or other it decides it ought to have a better city hall. The people of the town admit they can get along in the old city hall, but it would be finer for the town if it had a more imposing edifice. The cost of that city hall is $100,000. The town agrees to bond itself for 55 percent of the cost, and it raises $55,000 of borrowed money, and then it goes to the Capitol and it gets $45,000 of what is called a grant, which is nothing more than the Government borrowing the money to add to what the town has already borrowed, and so the whole $100,000 is finally provided, and it does some good. It provides work for a while in rebuilding that city hall. But the people in the town owe, first, $55,000 to the city government, which is themselves, and they owe $45,000 to the National Government, which is their share of the national borrowing for such purposes. In other words, when the transaction is completed, for an old city hall which they owned without any debt whatsoever, they have a new city hall on which they owe completely $100,000.

The city hall is built. They have got to tax themselves for 30 or 40 years to pay off the principal and the interest on that loan. They have got to take that much out of their purchasing power. They have got to take that from their wages and hand it over to the Government, when they need it to send their boys and their girls to college, but because of the accumulation of all these expenditures they cannot quite make the grade. Then they look at the city hall and they say to themselves, "I wonder when that city hall is going to produce a suit of clothes, or when it is going to produce a loaf of bread, or when it is going to produce a tin roof," because where is the permanent food, clothing, and shelter? Where in what we call money is the equivalent wealth that can be produced from that city hall? And it turns out to be only a monument to the town's civic righteousness, and as an economic production proposition year after year it is a deterrent, because it usurps a part of the income of every taxpayer in that little town. That is what I am driving at.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that centuries ago, when the devil offered the Saviour of man the whole world. He replied:

Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

Meaning, as I suppose, he must have moral and spiritual

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but a man cannot live without bread, either. Let us not lose sight of that fact. Let me say to the Senator from Idaho that anyone who will try to live on the spiritual side of this world for about 60 days, I think, will find that bread has its usefulness in the scheme of existence. Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think it has. Therefore I shall vote to give 925,000 persons, who have no bread, enough money to buy bread for the next 6 months.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but that is not arguing what we have been arguing. I am arguing that we cannot feed people on spiritual things. I am arguing that we cannot create wealth on spiritual things except indirectly. The farmer who toils down the furrow, the miner who digs in the ground, the lumberman who cuts down the forest may have very little of the spiritual side, of the cultural side, of the educational side, but all those who have the other civilizing influences, which are very valuable, must come back to those three individuals for food and for clothing and for shelter, and in a time of great emergency I would rather put forth efforts to revive the economic, material side, so that people may live, than to encourage the painting of pictures or the writing of books or any such things as a concomitant part of a recovery program.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we cannot make good citizens without doing all these things, and, after all, the citizen is the wealth of this country.

Mr. TYDINGS. We cannot make good citizens by allowing an economic condition to go on from one year to another, which the Senators who argue for increased relief say is permanent, and by postponing the day of paying for that program to some future generation for whom all our cultural ambitions and urges and efforts are ultimately directed.

Mr. BORAH. That is true, but it is also true that we cannot postpone the day or the hour when we are going to give people food which is necessary to keep them alive.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. But it will be said 10 years from now, "I do not think we ought to begin paying for that now"; and 20 years from now it will be said, "I do not think we ought to begin paying for that now." Every Senator who argues for increased appropriations for relief says upon the Senate floor that the unemployment situation is permanent, and that our way of handling a permanent problem should be to postpone the payment 30 or 40 or 100 years in the future.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator must pardon me for correcting him in one respect. I am not arguing that the unemployment situation is permanent.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not referring to the Senator individually.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think the unemployment situation is permanent at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Neither do I, if the Senator will permit

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I want to apologize to the Senator from Florida. When I rose to ask him a few questions I had no idea that I should usurp so much of his time. If I may conclude, my only reason for asking him the questions was that I was hopeful that if he recognized unemployment as a permanent problem, we would meet a part of the cost of that problem now, and not build colleges and other things for the cultural and spiritual helpfulness of the generations which are to come, loading them with such an economic burden that their education would not be worth anything when they had to step under the load to be borne.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Maryland has just given me the most astonishing bit of information I have ever heard from the lips of a United States Senator. I never thought that an intelligent man who was a college graduate, and who himself had a wide culture and experience, would absolutely and flatly contradict the material value of every spiritual and educational stimulus in the world today.

A while ago I said that a schoolhouse makes an economic contribution because it is a place where men are educated to do things better than they otherwise could have done them. I said that a road has an economic value because it makes it possible for men to move from place to place, which in the long run produces an economy, an inspiration, and an enrichment which otherwise would be absent. Although, of course, we all know that there must be a balance between productive and nonproductive projects, I say that even the city hall, even the church, makes a valuable economic contribution to the society of which it is a part. The Senator said a moment ago that such things as going to the Beaux Arts and obtaining an education and cultural attainments have no practical value. I will let the Senator argue that question with Mr. Walter Lippmann, who is able to take care of himself in an argument.

A short time ago Mr. Lippmann wrote one of the most clarifying columns I have ever seen come from his rich pen. In that article he said that the trouble with America today is the fact that our leaders do not have the deep knowledge and the rich cultural background that the founding fathers of this Government had. The fathers had the ability to see, as Carlyle said Mirabeau could, and to define courses of human conduct and progress.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. PEPPER. It might be, Mr. President, that if we had a deeper and richer culture and a broader vision, somebody might be able to see the way out of this thing, and we would not be going from one trough to another, as the Senator and I are, and as our generation is in trying to find the way out.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida again yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield to the Senator from Maryland to ask me a question, but not to make a speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida wish the Senate rule enforced in regard to protecting him against interruptions unless he yields?

Mr. PEPPER. I value the mental ability and agility of the Senator from Maryland. I am willing to discuss any question with him. However, I will request him to ask me questions and not make a protracted speech in my time.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be very glad to comply with the Senator's request.

The Senator does not mean to contend, does he, that the Senator from Maryland is opposed to all art or all education?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Maryland has indicated in his treatment of the subject today that he does not think very much of them.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Florida does not think he is being fair in making that observation, does he? The Senator from Maryland said, did he not, that the Senator was talking about food, shelter, and clothing, and was asking the Senator how the building of a city hall, outside of creating some temporary work in its building, contributed to the production of food, shelter, and clothing? Is not that a fair statement of the position of the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. PEPPER. May I ask the Senator from Maryland a question? He can answer it categorically "yes" or "no." Does the Senator take the position that everything upon which we spend money which does not directly provide food, clothing, or shelter, has no economic or material value?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, does not the Senator—Mr. PEPPER. Answer the question "yes" or "no."

Mr. TYDINGS. That is like asking, "Have you stopped beating your wife?" Let me answer the Senator by asking him a question. Did not the Senator from Maryland say that indirect benefits would flow from such a policy? But did not the Senator from Maryland contend that there would be no direct benefits other than temporary employment, and that the primary purpose of the relief measure is the production of food, clothing, and shelter, the three essentials to life? Does not the Senator feel that he is taking advantage of his ability to hold the floor and shut the Senator from Maryland off by contending that the Senator from Maryland wants every college, every high school, every public school, every art gallery, and every cultural activity wiped off the face of the earth?

Mr. PEPPER. And every city hall.

Mr. TYDINGS. And every city hall. [Laughter.]

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to ask the Senator one more question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, of course the Senator may ask me anything he wishes, but it is not fair to ask me questions if he is to demand categorical answers.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well. Let me ask the Senator this question: Did he take the position that all the money that was contributed to anything that did not directly yield food, clothing, and shelter had no direct economic value?

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course not. I took the position that a city hall or a schoolhouse did not directly produce food, clothing, or shelter; and up to this good hour the Senator from Florida has been unable to show me how either the schoolhouse or the city hall produced a loaf of bread, a pair of shoes, or any clothing, except that it educated men and women to produce them better. In the meantime, the people who are without are waiting on the appropriation bill.

Mr. PEPPER. I think the Senate probably is able to form its own conclusions about this subject from what has been said

I wish to remind the Senate, Mr. President, that I was attempting to show, in what I thought was a logical way, that in 1933 the Federal Government began to spend money, and up until 1936 it spent $10,000,000,000 for work relief. In addition to that, in 1936 the Federal Government paid the soldiers' bonus, and the amount of the expenditure for veterans' purposes in 1936 and 1937 amounted to a little over $3,000,000,000. I say that those were two factors contributing to the improvement of economic conditions in this country which came about in 1936 and 1937.

I point out a third contribution which emanated from the Federal Government and this administration. That was the undistributed-profits tax, which had the effect of putting more money into circulation than otherwise would have been put into circulation by the business of the country. In 1935 65 percent of the corporations' profits was distributed to the owners of their stock in dividends. In 1936, as the result of the undistributed-profits tax, the amount of money distributed into the hands of the stockholders for consuming purposes was 79.9 percent. So those three factors were an integral part of the Federal program for improving the economic conditions of the country.

Let us see what happened. In 1935 the monthly average value of stocks and bonds upon the New York Stock Exchange was $37,900,000,000. In 1936, under the impetus of this program, the figure jumped to $50,200,000,000 in value, and I say that was material value. It represented an increase of more than $13,000,000,000 in the value of the securities on the New York Stock Exchange alone, which came directly from the impetus of the Federal program.

In January 1937 the value of those securities on the New York Stock Exchange had increased to $61,900,000,000, another increase of almost $12,000,000,000 in value of those securities alone, upon the impetus of that program in 1 year.

Then what happened? In July 1937 after the cessation of that Federal spending program, under the lash of the economists of the Congress of the United States, these same securities dropped to $59,000,000,000 in value, and in January 1938 to $39,200,000,000.

I have said that the $13,000,000,000 paid out in work relief and for veterans' purposes gave us an increased value in securities on the New York Stock Exchange. I have already pointed out what it did in increasing the national income from $38,000,000,000 in 1932 to $69,000,000,000 in 1937, and slightly less than that in 1938. So, Mr. President, if a program will give an increase in value to the securities of the exchanges of this country, if it will give an increase in the national income, if it will enhance the wealth and assets of this Nation, I proclaim, Mr. President, that it is neither an expenditure nor an extravagance; it is a wise investment; and shortsighted is the man who would not agree to a policy which has practically demonstrated that result in its operation.

The farmer who buys fertilizer and puts it under his crops might be considered by some to be an extravagant man, wasting away his substance, but when the harvest time comes and he realizes what his yield would have been without the fertilizer and compares it with the yield of the crop which had the fertilizer, no wise man has difficulty in making a choice as to the proper course. So if the value of securities, if the national income, if the value of real and personal property in this country has shown the direct effects of that program, then, may we not determine whether or not it has been a wise and successful program?

What happened in 1937? What was the cause of the recession of that year? Why was it the national income fell off? Why was it that the value of securities declined? Why was it that the number of unemployed increased? Why was it that the economic order fell again into a tailspin and a recession ensued almost as drastic as the depression of 1932? I do not ask the Senate to take my word for it. I hold in my hand a World Economic Survey, issued by the technical experts of the League of Nations for the years 1937 and 1938, dealing with our own economy. I assume they are impartial; I assume they are disinterested; and I assume they know what they are talking about. So I go to them. Let us see what they say the cause of the 1937 depression or recession in the United States was. I read from page 15 of that volume:

The figures for the production of investment goods and of consumption goods show that the recent recession was marked by a rapid fall in investment activity with a very much smaller fall in the production of consumption goods. Between August and December 1937 the production of investment goods fell by 51.7 percent while the production of consumption goods fell only by 13.3 percent. In the same period, steel output fell by 69.7 percent, motorcar production (after making allowance for seasonal variations) by 50.3 percent, and the value of contracts awarded for residential building plans by 25 percent. On the other hand, pay rolls showed little tendency to fall until November, and between August and December fell by 22 percent; and department store sales (after making allowance for seasonal variations) also were maintained at a practically constant level until November, falling between August and December only by 3.3 percent. These figures leave little doubt that the immediate cause of the recession was an abrupt fall in investment activity and in expenditure on durable consumption goods such as motorcars, and that it was only the consequent fall in incomes which later caused a reduction in expenditure for current consumption.

Many explanations have been offered for this abrupt fall in investment. These explanations are usually in no way contradictory, and it is probable that the recession in investment was due to a conjunction of many unfavorable factors, only the most impor-aused a reduction in expenditure for current consumption.

Many explanations have been offered for this abrupt fall in investment. These explanations are usually in no way contradictory, and it is probable that the recession in investment was due to a conjunction of many unfavorable factors, only the most important of which can be discussed here. According to one theory, which is well illustrated by these recent events in the United States, the level of investment activity depends upon the rate at which the demand for consumption goods is expanding. When the demand for consumption goods is expanding rapidly, investment activity will be high in order to provide the new capital instruments with which the greater output of consumption goods may be produced. On the other hand, the production of capital instruments will soon fall to a low level if the demand for consumption goods ceases to increase, even though this demand remains at a high level; for new capital instruments are needed only when the output of consumption goods is increasing. From the first of the two graphs on page 14, it can be seen that department store sales, which may be taken as an index of the demand for consumption goods, started to rise in 1933.

Which was the same time, Mr. President, if I may interpolate, that Federal expenditures began to be made.

After a relatively rapid rise during 1936, the expansion of consumers' demand ceased and department-store sales remained remarkably stable for 12 months after November 1936.

By August 1937 this remarkable stability of consumers' demand had continued for some 9 months; and this would have given time for producers to appreciate the fact that consumers' demands had ceased to expand and for existing orders for capital construction to have been completed.

Why, may I interpolate, would they have had notice that consumers' demand was about to be diminished? Because the Federal appropriation had been cut down to the point where the Federal Government was not putting out any more money than it was taking in.

In consequence, at this point, investment activity, as represented by the index of production of investment goods, reached its peak and subsequently fell off abruptly.

It remains, however, to explain why consumers' demands ceased to expand at a time when the recovery might be thought not fully to have run its course. It is not difficult to find certain definite factors which may have caused a rapid expansion of consumers' demand in 1936 and a subsequent failure of further expansion in 1937. In the first place, in January 1936, the Veterans' Bonus Act was passed, which enabled the veterans of past wars to claim immediately in cash the payment of the full face value of their pension rights. Some 3,500,000 veterans were to receive nearly $2,500,000,000 worth of bonds, which could be cashed on demand; and the following table shows the effect of this measure on the Government's expenditure on pensions. When it is remembered that the whole American national income for 1936 was approximately $63,800,000,000, it is clear that there may have been a very appreciable expansion in consumption during 1936, due to this particular cash bonus. Since the bonus payment was not repeated, the increase in consumption which was caused by it was one which could not be expected to last for long.

In 1936 the tax on the undistributed profits of corporations was introduced.

Then the survey goes on to point out that the proportion of profits paid out in dividends may have been raised approximately to a higher level by this tax and that might have caused the expansion of consumption which might well be stabilized at a higher level.

Then the survey shows in a table how, in 1935, the percentage of profits that went into dividends from corporations of the country was at least 65 percent, while under the undistributed-profits tax of 1936 the amount of profits going into dividends—that is to say, into consumption power—was raised from 65 percent to 79.8 percent.

In 1936 and 1937 the Federal Government and the States began to raise taxes mainly for the future finance of old-age pensions and of unemployment benefits. Pay-roll taxes on employers, together with taxes on workers' wages, were levied during 1937 for these purposes, although the main benefits were not to be paid out until later. Part of the proceeds of these taxes were paid to the Federal Treasury to be invested in special obligations of the Federal Government. In effect the borrowing made necessary by the nominal Budget deficit of the Federal Government was covered by these special taxes. For example, on January 5, 1938, the net deficit in the Federal Budget for 1937–38 (exclusive of expenditure on debt retirement) was estimated at $1,088,000,000, against which there were trust funds of $1,194,000,000 available for investment in the special obligations of the Federal Government. The corresponding figures, estimated at the same time, for the Budget of 1938–39 were: Net deficit, $950,000,000, against which were trust funds of $1,163,000,000 available for investment in Government obligations. These figures may be compared with a net Budget deficit of $4,361,000,000 in the year 1935–36.

Then the survey proceeds to show a table that indicates that from old-age benefits a fund of $592,000,000 was derived by the Government in 1937; for railroad retirement pensions, $68,000,000; and for unemployment insurance, $568,000,000; making a total of $1,228,000,000.

This taxation, by withdrawing income from the employer and the wage earner in the absence of any corresponding payment of benefits, may have had a marked effect in putting a stop to the expansion in expenditure which might otherwise have continued during 1937.

Now, let me read the last quotation. On page 19, this book further says:

It will be seen that industrial profits reached their peak in the second quarter of 1937, when they were still 10 percent below the 1929 level. As profits ceased rising and started to decline in the middle of 1937, it is probable that the expectation of profits changed adversely at the same time and that this reacted adversely on investment activity. One reason for this change in the prospect of profits—namely, the failure of the demand for consumption goods to continue to increase after 1936—has already been discussed at length.

So I do not ask the Senate to take my word for these assertions, but I ask you to take the word of a world-wide economic authority, who says that the very philosophy, the very sentiments embodied by those who now propose this reduction in expenditure, triumphed in 1937, and we reaped from the wind the whirlwind of a recession which impoverished millions of our fellow citizens and sent millions more to untimely graves.

So that kind of economy is false economy. Those who advocate it do not cite facts and figures. They go upon the basis of some vague, nebulous idea that we have to stop spending money. What we propose is the kind of an investment a sick man makes when he hires a doctor. It is the kind of investment a man makes when he builds anything of a productive character. So we know, then, that the responsibility for what happened in 1937 has been well placed.

I want economy, but I want intelligent economy. And I do not want to stifle wise investment under the guise of false economy.

What did these gentlemen propose to do in the summer of 1937, when the recession almost hit the bottom? What did they propose to do in the fall of 1937, when it got even worse? What did these economists and the watchdogs of the Treasury and the Budget balancers offer as a panacea to the American people in the spring of 1938, when misery became yet broader in its grasping reach? Nothing. They sat in the same idleness, they sat in the same inertia in which they always sit when called upon for an affirmative suggestion. And where did the change come from? It came from the White House, which many of them, by the vote they cast on this measure, want to repudiate. It came from the man who has had more vision and courage than any other statesman in this generation has exhibited. He came to Congress and said, "I propose that we spend $4,000,000,000 again to try to resurrect the economy of this country, to give men jobs, and to save that economy from dissolution and destruction." Thank goodness, the Congress had the willingness and the faith and the courage to follow that recommendation; and the result was that Roger Babson-an economist who is not a Democrat, who is not a New Dealer-in October of last year made the statement, immediately after that program had gone into effect:

Business in the United States is forging ahead. There is no longer any doubt about the present recovery.

Did the economists, the watchdogs of the Treasury and the Budget balancers, make business forge ahead? What contribution did they make to giving anybody jobs, to producing more national income, to doing anything that gave us a greater amount of assets in this Nation than we otherwise would have had?

Roger Babson, in the same statement, referred to the fact that by the expenditure of a little over $3,000,000,000 in the spring of 1938 by Congress, under the President's recommendation, the value of securities on the New York Stock Exchange increased $15,000,000,000. We could have gone to the New York Stock Exchange and have taxed out of existence three and a half billion dollars' worth of those securities, and the owners of the remaining securities still would have had a net profit by that investment, in just that one category of our national wealth, of approximately $12,000 .-000,000. Yet they say, Mr. President, that a few of us who want to provide for the unemployed, who want to put money in circulation, who want to build our national economic structure from the bottom up, are extravagant spenders, while they are entitled to be called wise and conservative statesmen!

Fortunately, I think we have a different idea about statesmanship. The easiest kind of statesmanship I know that anyone can embrace is to do nothing, and look solemn, and talk with a deep voice [laughter]; just to sit and say, with arms folded as one serenely surveys the troubled sky, "I think the thing for us to do is to be calm, to be steady and stable and sensible and reasonable and conservative in what we do."

That philosophy dominated this Government in 1929, and until 1933. I give to my colleagues on this side of the Chamber one humble man's honest prediction—that if all we are to contribute to the statesmanship of America as a party is to be what is classically known as "watchdogs of the Treasury," and "conservators of our fiscal policy," and the cherished upholders, like Atlas of old, of our "institutions of financial integrity," as they have been regarded in the past by some persons with a restricted economic vision, it will not take the American people long to determine whether or not they want to continue the Democratic Party in power. The people did not turn out some of our good Democrats in the last election because we had done too much; they turned them out because we had not done enough; and they will turn us out if we do not do more than we have done in the past to solve some of these fundamental problems which have challenged the conscience and the intelligence of the American people.

We cannot let agriculture go along with a purchasing power which is not adequate to consume at least a reasonable surplus. At a time when we need the energies of our men and women, at a time when we need their efforts and their labor, we cannot spurn the creative power which they have, and say, "We are not concerned about your welfare, or even your livelihood," and expect the people to give us credit for having made a substantial solution of challenging economic problems.

I think Mr. Lippmann was right when he said that we need a little better education than we have—we who are trying to guide the destinies of a free people in troublous times like these. We need to know what the future holds in store, and be able to make at least something like a sensible and courageous effort toward the solution of those problems.

Here in America we have a possible market of $32,000,000,000 for durable goods as compared to $21,000,000,000 spent for that purpose in 1936. We have the resources. We have the people. Our intelligence should be able to find the way to put the two together. I believe that we shall never do it unless, somehow or other, we put into circulation the credit and the currency necessary to make money move in the channels of commerce and trade, and when private investment does not put out those funds it is obligatory upon the Government to take that place in the economic order and fulfill an essential role if we are to have even a pretense of economic recovery.

So, Mr. President, when we cast our votes we shall decide what our philosophy is. We shall declare it to the world. We shall declare it to our people and our constituencies wherever they are. We know from irrefutable facts that we have not begun to take care of the unemployed who are entitled to consideration at our hands. We know that 100,000 persons have already been cut off the relief rolls since January, and the committee does not propose to put them back. We know that even in case we appropriate $875,000,000 some more persons will have to be turned out who are living the pitiful existence made possible in my State by an income of $26 a month. We know that if we adopt the figure of $725,000,000 we are going to turn out yet more into the cold of the winter months, and in the spring there will be no spring for them. When all the earth is full of life and beauty no sweet foliage will kiss their brows with new benefactions that they previously had not enjoyed. We know that the result of voting for an appropriation of $725,000,000 is inevitably that. So when Senators make up their minds on that question they will indicate to the country what may be expected of their philosophy, and the Democratic Party will indicate what may be expected of that party.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, I desire to take a very few moments of the time of the Senate to express very briefly my views on the subject now pending before the Senate.

In the beginning, the issue presented to the Senate was indeed confusing to me; but the more I studied the situation the more I became familiar with the real point in issue on the vote which is to be taken in this body on the pending subject matter.

In my honest opinion, from the standpoint of dollars and cents it does not make a particle of difference whether we vote for $725,000,000 or whether we vote for $875,000,000. If we adopt the figure $725,000,000, and it carries on the work of W. P. A. for only 6 weeks, the relief administrator will come back and ask for more money, and of course we shall give it to him. On the other hand, if we elect to restore the $150,000,000 cut and vote for the full amount of $875,000,000, and it develops that that is too much money—$150,000,000 too much—and that the relief load can be carried for $725,000,000, then in June we shall find in the treasury of the W. P. A. an unexpended balance of $150,000,000 which we will do with as we did this year; namely, allot it for expenditure in some other form.

There is no question of economy involved in my decision as to the way I shall vote. To me the question is purely a question of policy, a question of leadership. The President of the United States of America, supported by the W. P. A. authorities, has asked the Congress to appropriate $875,-000,000. It is the President's leadership which I pledged myself to follow when the people of the great State of New Jersey honored me in electing me to this great body. So today I am confronted with the question, Will I follow the leadership of the President of the United States, or will I follow the leadership of some other, who asks me, in the name of economy, to follow his leadership into the error of cutting the relief rolls, the rolls of the unfortunate unemployed, and to make that the first cut in the interest of economy?

Mr. President, I submit to the Members of this body that the relief roll, the misfortune of the unemployed, is the last item in the $9,000,000,000 yearly outlay Budget that we should touch, instead of the first one.

If we in this body really wish to practice some economy, if economy is the order of the day, if economy is the catchword of the moment, so much so that it rises above human values and human welfare, then I suggest that we practice some real economy. If we desire to practice real economy, let us stop handing out $266,000,000 a year to the cottom farmers of the Nation, let us stop handing out $50,000,000 a year to the sugar farmers, let us stop handing out $60,000,000 a year to the wheat farmers of the Nation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SMATHERS. No, Mr. President; the Senator from New Jersey declines to yield, because this is my first attempt to make a speech in the Senate and I am dismayed enough without being harassed with questions. I will ask the Senator from Texas to wait until I conclude my remarks, and then I shall be glad to answer any question he may propound.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey is bad enough without being harassed. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMATHERS. It may be true, Mr. President, that I am bad, but I am presenting my honest views to this body and I should like to have courtesy from the great and glorious Senator from Texas, the same courtesy I would extend to him, so that I may proceed and conclude my remarks.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator. Will the Senator permit me to say just a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield or decline to yield?

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I disclaim any discourtesy to the Senator. I do not wish to be discourteous.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, if we wish to practice real economy, let us stop handing out $70,000,000 a year to the corn growers of the Nation. If we want to practice real economy, let us stop spending $360,000,000 a year for school and university buildings. If we want to practice real economy, let us stop spending $225,000,000 a year on roads and the construction of highways. If we want to practice real economy, let us stop spending billions of dollars every year in the construction of dams and the development of the natural resources of this country.

Mr. President, those expenditures can wait; but I submit to the Members of the Senate that a hungry child, or an old man or an old woman, without sufficient clothing and without sufficient heat and without sufficient food, with no job and no prospect of a job, cannot wait.

I say to the Members of the Senate that in my State of New Jersey we have no cotton problem, we have no sugar problem, we have no wheat problem, but we do have the pressing human problem of unemployment; and I submit to this body that the people of the State of New Jersey have a right to look to the Federal Government, whose responsibility it is also, to see us through with this form of unemployment relief. I submit to the Members of the Senate that I am ready to vote for economy if a start is made on every other outlay first and the unemployment and relief rolls are reached last.

Now, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.
Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator, but I do not care to have him yield. I will take my own time.
He insisted that I take my own time.

Mr. SMATHERS. Very well. Mr. WILEY obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will yield, the debate which has been in progress has been on a subject which is really not before the Senate. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the amendments of the committee are to be disposed of before other amendments can be offered. I am wondering whether those who desire to speak on the general subject would not be willing to defer their addresses until we can vote on the amendments which have been offered by the committee, so that the Senator from Tennessee may offer his amendment, and then we can have it debated while it is pending.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I should like to have only about 5 minutes to reply to the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin was recognized. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield the floor to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to reassure the Senator from New Jersey. He spoke of refusing to yield to the Senator from Texas because he did not want to be harassed. The Senator from Texas has no disposition to harass the Senator from New Jersey, because the Senator from New Jersey is self-harassing and does not need any harassing. The Senator attacked the cotton farmers; they headed his list; and all I intended to do was to ask the Senator whether he was really opposed to agricultural legislation in behalf of the cotton farmer. That is all I intended to ask him. Is he?

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas cannot resist the Senator from New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator from Texas will have to square his conduct by what he says. He cannot run with the rabbit and chase with the hounds in one breath and in the next breath say I am irresistible. Now, which is it?

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no disposition to go with the Senator in either direction.

Mr. SMATHERS. Very well. To the Senator from Texas I wish to say that my answer to his question was fully presented by my remarks that the relief rolls, the rolls of unemployment, to me should come last in any step toward economy. Yes; I am prepared to vote to cut relief to the cotton farmers and all the others, and to cut all the other outlay, before I put the finger of economy on the relief rolls.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator started out by saying that if we wanted any real economy we should chop off all relief to cotton farmers, all relief to wheat farmers, all relief to so-and-so and so-and-so. The Senator from Texas has voted just as consistently for the relief and W. P. A. appropriations as has the Senator from New Jersey. But I was just wondering why it was that the Senator from New Jersey, ensconced up in Atlantic City, with all the pleasures and luxuries of that marvelous city-where he has to have clothes to wear at certain seasons of the year [laughter], and has to have food to eat-is willing to take away the benefits to the man who grows wheat in the storms and winters of North Dakota, Minnesota, South Dakota if his constituents on the boulevards of Atlantic City can get that wheat at Government expense, free. The Senator is willing that the cotton farmer in the South shall burn up in the summer raising and picking cotton and be without Government help so long as the citizens of Atlantic City may walk the boardwalk and take their dips in the sea every afternoon at Government expense. My understanding is that during the W. P. A. New Jersey has received many million dollars more—I forget how many million dollars more—than it would have received had the allocation been based upon population. I cannot give the Senate the exact figures, but I shall get them and give them to the Senate in a few moments. Possibly the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] can give them, or perhaps the Senator from New Jersey can give me the figures. Perhaps he can tell how many million dollars more the people of New Jersey have received under the administration of the relief act than they would have received had its administration been based upon population. Does the Senator know?

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, my knowledge on that subject is as poor as is the knowledge of the Senator from Texas. I do not have the figures with respect to it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas has just received the figures. I do not carry them around with me. The Senator from New Jersey says he does not know anything about it. Let us see about New Jersey, and perhaps when we know the figures we may understand some of the enthusiasm of the Senator from New Jersey. New Jersey received $40,150,016 more than that State would have received had these funds been allocated in proportion to the number of human beings that were in New Jersey and the number of human beings that were in other States of the Union. We are supposed to feed human beings, not machines.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from New Jersey. I will be kinder to him than he was to me.
Mr. SMATHERS. Does the Senator.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the Senator— Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. I shall yield when I am ready.

Mr. SMATHERS. Then we are playing the same game.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I disclaim that. I shall give the figures with respect to the State of Texas. Here are some of the cotton farmers that the Senator from New Jersey is pointing to as being first on the list of those who should be stricken from the rolls, not for walking the streets, but for working out in the cotton fields and factories. Texas received $144,864,806 less than it would have received had the administration of W. P. A. been based upon population of the States. Of course, the Senator from New Jersey is in favor of striking off the cotton farmer, and the wheat farmer, and other people who work, in order that the inhabitants of Atlantic City and the rest of New Jersey may get more, because the Senator knows the more money that is available, the more his people are going to receive. They received $40,000,000 more than their quota.

I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that I am inclined to vote for the full amount, but I cannot let his arguments go unanswered on the Senate floor. He does not want any agricultural workers to have any aid from the Government, but he is willing to have his constituents get a larger percentage than they are entitled to have for doing nothing.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. I ask that the distinguished Senator from Texas not deliberately try to misrepresent the position taken by me by saying that I am for striking off all of the benefits to cotton and to sugar and to wheat and to what not. My proposition is: Let us cut them proportionately, and then we will not have to cut the relief rolls 17 percent. Mr. CONNALLY. Has the Senator completed his state-

Mr. SMATHERS. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I was guided only by what the Senator from New Jersey said. I did not want to misrepresent him. The first on the list of those he proposed to cut off was the cotton farmer. The record is here. The official reporter has his notes. Then the next on the list was the wheat farmer. In other words, being a representative of Atlantic City the Senator can do without clothes better than he can without food. He wants to strike off the clothes first and the food next from the man who produces them.

Mr. SMATHERS. The Senator from Texas has evidently been to Atlantic City. I simply wish to observe that the Senator from Texas knows that we wear very little clothing in the summertime, but we do eat, and I want to say again that my proposition was: Let us stop handing out $266,000,-000 a year to the cotton farmers. That does not mean to cut them all off. Let us apportion it on the relief rolls.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator meets himself coming back. One minute he says "cut off $266,000,000," and the next minute he wants to apportion the allocation. Which does he want to do? I yield now to a declaration by the Senator on that subject.

Mr. SMATHERS. It is quite evident, Mr. President, that I cannot satisfactorily answer the Senator from Texas, and I shall cease to try.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not interested in the clothestaking-off process which has been mentioned here, but I thought it might be interesting if I were to put into the RECORD at this point the States which have at this time more than 100,000 persons on the W. P. A. rolls. I do not have the figures as to what the different States would have received, if the allocation had been based on population only, and I did not understand that it had been proposed here by any one that the money be allocated on the basis of population alone. An effort has been made to work out a formula by which population would be taken into consideration, and need, I suppose, would also be taken into consideration. But at the present time the States which have more than 100,000 persons on the roll are California with 118,000, Illinois 241,000, Massachusetts with 127,000, Michigan with 145,000, Missouri with 109,000, New Jersey with 103,000, New York City with 179,000 and New York State outside of New York City 66,000, Ohio 261,000, Pennsylvania 261,000, Texas, 112,000.

Those are the States which now have over 100,000 persons on the W. P. A. rolls. I do not know how that will be modified by an allocation of funds based purely on population. I do not have any table of that sort and have not attempted to work it out.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I think it simply accentuates what Congress has failed to do. Congress in the past 3 or 4 years should have enacted legislation providing some sort of formula for the distribution of relief funds. Perhaps it should not be based on population alone, but certainly population ought to have some relationship to the manner in which the money is allocated. Mr. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, made an allocation of public-works funds and he made some claim that it was based on population, as I recall.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. While the Senator is discussing this question, and has the chart before him, I wonder if he will refer to my State of Iowa, and the corn farmers, who were the third on the list mentioned by the Senator from New Jersey, and tell how, on the basis of population, they were discriminated against.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. CONNALLY. I have the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. LEE. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONNALLY. I refuse to yield.

Mr. LEE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LEE. I ask who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEELY in the chair). The Chair asks the Senate to suspend for just a moment. The Chair invites the attention of the Senate to rule XIX which provides:

No Senator shall interrupt another Senator in debate without his consent, and to obtain such consent he shall first address the presiding officer * * *.

Secondly, the occupants of the galleries are admonished that confusion in the galleries and the expression of approval or disapproval of anything that occurs on the floor of the Senate is in violation of the rules of the Senate. Let both those in the galleries and the Members of the Senate be in order.

The Senator from Texas has yielded to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] has the floor. The Chair is endeavoring to protect the Senator from Texas in the exercise of his rights.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?
Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from Oklahoma will withhold his request until I shall have answered the question of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE]. I shall yield.

Mr. President, in reply to the question of the Senator from Iowa, I will state that the figures disclose that the State of Iowa received $56,236,680 less than it would have received upon a percentage or population basis.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LEE. The junior Senator from Oklahoma understood the Chair to say that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Wiley] had the floor and yielded to the Senator from Texas. Is that correct?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Wisconsin gave way to me. I shall be through in a moment. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin very much.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. From what table is the Senator reading? Mr. CONNALLY. I do not care to identify it at present, because the one from whom I received it does not want to place it in the Record at this time. He will put it in the Record later. It is an official record, though.

I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for his anxiety with respect to who has the floor. I graciously yielded to him and will yield again if he desires. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin. The Senator from Texas appreciates his indulgence. He wished to say these few words in reply to the Senator from New Jersey, who assails the men who raise cotton and the men who raise food in order that his people may have more to wear and more to eat and work less. That is the philosophy of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, now that New Jersey and Texas have harmonized their differences, as another novitiate I wish to say a few words upon the subject which is before the Senate for discussion.

I have listened with interest for the last 3 or 4 days to many excursions off the issue. I have gone with my friend the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Reynolds] on the magic carpet all over Europe and Asia. I have traveled with the distinguished Senator from Florida [Mr. Pepper] over to the League of Nations.

I wish to compliment the distinguished Senator from New Jersey for stating the issue. The President wants $875,-000,000 and the majority of the committee feel that we should appropriate $725,000,000 at this time. What is the issue? I think it can be understandingly put in the following way:

A son wants of his parent a certain sum of money—a considerable sum, if you will—for a certain definite purpose.

The parent says: "I will give you four-fifths of it at this time, which I think is sufficient. However, if it should prove to be insufficient, son, I will give you the other fifth later."

There is no quarrel about the need. However, according to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and others, and as the debate on the floor has demonstrated, no really definite knowledge exists as to the number of unemployed there will be a month from now, 2 months from now, or 3 months from now. Neither can any of us say with any definiteness what the various contributing agencies which have been mentioned will contribute toward taking up the slack. Therefore, there being no quarrel over the apparent need, is it not reasonable that we who stand in the place of the parent, we who distribute the fund, should have something to say? I feel that Congress should go slowly, so that the taxpayer will not pay more than is really needed to do the job in a decent manner.

Since I have been sworn into office I have heard the word "purge" used to a considerable extent on the floor. Let the purge start in those undertakings where it is needed. Let the worthy and the needy be helped. Let is be understood that for every dollar expended a worthy and a needy person is helped, and his morale strengthened. But let us also purge the chiseler and the grafter who exist in every Commonwealth in this Nation, as every Senator knows.

This fight over the W. P. A. appropriation is more than a contest over relief funds. The mandate of the recent election was for sensible and decent economy. Everyone knows that unemployment is serious. No one wants to economize at the expense of the worthy unemployed. As the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has said, no one wants to take it out of the hide of the poor. But, I say, neither can we disregard the opinion of the employer, the taxpayer, that class which sustains government. We cannot disregard the opinion of that class on the subject, which opinion was expressed in the recent election.

The people of this Nation were shocked by the annual Budget with its estimates of heavy, continued deficit spending. I again invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Sheppard committee disclosed and brought to the attention of the public the fact that relief is a good place in which to practice and to start decent economy. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] has said that we must make a start somewhere on cutting down our huge governmental expenses. I say that he expressed the conviction of the great middle class of this country, the sustaining class.

As we have heard many times, the Senate committee voted 17 to 7 to stick to the reduced figures passed by the other House. For 2 days, with an issue as simple as the analogy I have used, in which the son asks the parent for money and the parent replies in a common-sense way, the Senate has heard all the angles of the controversy.

I have nothing further to say on that subject. Let me say that, coming into this august body as a novitiate like the Senator from New Jersey, I appreciate, more than many Members of the Senate can know, the courtesy, the friendliness, and the consideration which have been shown me from both sides of the center aisle. I appreciate also the genial hospitality shown by the Vice President.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me long enough to read the correspondence which I have between the Director of the Budget and the Administrator of the W. P. A., to which I referred yesterday, and which I think ought to go into the RECORD? It may be the Senator will wish to discuss the contents of this correspondence.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. In view of the apparent misunderstanding which has existed regarding certain tables and figures which are in the hearings, and in view of the statement made a day or two ago by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] that the Administrator of the W. P. A., Colonel Harrington, had made a mistake of $56,000,000, I wish to read certain correspondence touching on that subject, so that it may now go into the RECORD and Senators may consider it in their determination of the merits of this controversy.

First, I read a letter addressed to the Acting Director of the Budget, Mr. Samuel W. Bell, by Col. F. C. Harrington, Administrator of the W. P. A.:

> Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C., January 23, 1939.

Mr. DANIEL W. BELL,

Acting Director, Bureau of the Budget,

Washington, D. C.
DEAR MR. Bell: In connection with the deficiency appropriation DEAR MR. BELL: In connection with the deficiency appropriation for the W. P. A., some misunderstanding has arisen in the Congress concerning the difference between the $875,000,000 recommended in both the Budget message and the President's message requesting the deficiency and the $750,000,000 estimate of cash expenditures out of this appropriation which was also contained in the Budget. A good deal of this misunderstanding was caused by press reports which seized on the $750,000,000 cash expenditure estimate and erroneously assumed this to be the appropriation estimate. estimate.

The question was also raised as to the reason why the estimated "emergency" appropriation for fiscal year 1940 of $1,750,-000,000 was the same as the expenditure estimate for that year. Although I attempted to explain these matters in my testimony before the Appropriations Committee, I think it would be desirable if you would clarify the distinction between these two figures and indicate the difference between the Budget estimates of expenditures and appropriations. Very truly yours,

F. C. HARRINGTON, Administrator.

To that letter Mr. Bell made this reply on the 24th of January:

BUREAU OF THE BUDGET, Washington, January 24, 1939.

Col. F. C. HARRINGTON,

Administrator, Works Progress Administration,

Washington, D. C.

Dear Colonel Harrington: This is in response to your inquiry concerning the Budget estimates of appropriations and of expenditures for the W. P. A. for the fiscal years 1939 and 1940.

The Budget estimate of a deficiency appropriation for the W. P. A. for the balance of fiscal year 1939 is $875,000,000, and was so shown in the Budget released on January 3, 1939. It appears in Budget teleased on January 3, 1939.

statement No. 2 on page A 79, and in Budget informational table No. 1 on page 894.

The $750,000,000 figure, which appears on the same pages, is an estimate of that portion of the $875,000,000 appropriation that would actually be paid out in cash by June 30, 1939. If the W. P. A. should incur no further obligations after June 30, would still be necessary to liquidate those obligations incurred prior to June 30, which, in this instance, are estimated at the difference between $875,000,000 and $750,000,000, or $125,000,000. For example, the unliquidated obligations on June 30, 1938, under appropriated funds allocated to W. P. A. for the fiscal year 1938 appropriated funds allocated to W. P. A. for the fiscal year 1938 amounted to $125,284,000.

In regard to the 1940 supplemental item of $1,750,000,000, appearing on the same pages of the Budget, it is estimated that the unexpended balance at the end of the fiscal year 1940 would be the same as at the end of fiscal year 1939. In other words, the $125,000,000 unexpended balance out of the $875,000,000 appropriation will actually be paid out in fiscal year 1940; and, similarly, $125,000,000 out of the contemplated $1,750,000,000 appropriation would be paid out in the fiscal year 1941. Thus the appropriation would be paid out in the fiscal year 1941. Thus the appropriation estimate and the expenditure estimate under this heading happen to be the same for the fiscal year 1940 because the carry-over is expected to be the same.

expected to be the same.

As the President stated in his message, balances now available will barely finance the W. P. A. through January. In order to maintain the employment schedule contained in the President's relief message, providing for 3,000,000 workers on the W. P. A. in February and March and tapering down to an average of 2,700,000 in June, at an average cost of $61 per worker per month, it will be necessary to provide an appropriation of $875,000,000.

Very truly yours

Very truly yours,

D. W. BELL, Acting Director.

I have also a letter addressed to me by the Administrator of the W. P. A., with which he sends to me the two letters I have already read and certain tables, which I will also ask to have printed in the RECORD in a moment. The letter is dated January 25, 1939, which was yesterday. I asked the Administrator to send me information undertaking to clear up the misapprehension to which our attention was called the other day in the debate. The Administrator's letter is as follows:

> WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION. Washington, D. C., January 25, 1939.

The Honorable Alben W. BARKLEY,

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator Barkley: In response to your request for a statement concerning the funds available to the Works Progress.

Administration, I would like to give you the following information: There was no mistake of $56,000,000 in our estimates as submitted to the Congress. My testimony in the House and Senate committees is perfectly clear and is in complete agreement with Treasury figures.

On page 672 of the Congressional Record of yesterday it was stated that I made a mistake of $56,000,000, which was made up of two items: First, $45,000,000 (the cost of the program from February 1 to 7); and second, $11,000,000 (the cost of carrying 90,000 workers on Federal projects for 1 month). As to the first item, it is obvious that a work program employing 3,000,000 persons in all sections of the country must maintain a working fund consisting largely of advance pay-roll encumbrances for 1 week, namely, sisting largely of advance pay-roll encumbrances for I week, namely, $45,000,000. A similar amount will be carried over at the end of the fiscal year and consequently this factor does not affect the amount of the appropriation required. As to the $11,000,000 item, the cost of Federal projects for I month is $5,500,000 and not $11,000,000, as stated in debate. Federal agencies operating work projects have funds which will last through February totaling this amount.

All of the other amounts mentioned in debate, quoting from Treasury reports, include other agencies than the Works Progress Administration. A more careful reading of these reports will show that the amounts made available to the Works Progress Administration are in agreement with tables 1-A and 1-B based on Treasury tration are in agreement with tables 1-A and 1-B, based on Treasury reports, and submitted by me in my direct testimony (pp. 5 and 6 of the Senate hearings). I am attaching a memorandum showing the reconciliation of the various amounts mentioned in yesterday's debate, as well as corespondence with Mr. Bell, Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget, in which he states very definitely that an appropriation of $875,000,000 will be necessary if the employment schedule mentioned in the President's relief message is to be followed for the balance of the fiscal year. I am also attaching a table showing employment that would be possible with the various sums that have been under discussion.

I trust that this will clarify the situation.

Yours very truly,

F. C. HARRINGTON.

In that connection I wish to insert at this point the tables to which Colonel Harrington has made reference, and I wish also to call to the attention of the Senate the tables to which he refers on pages 5 and 6 of the Senate committee hearings. When the two tables, table 1-A, on page 5, and table 1-B, on page 6, are considered in connection with the testimony of Colonel Harrington on pages 33, 34, and 35 of the Senate committee hearings, I think there will be no misapprehension in the minds of anyone as to the $56,000,000 referred to as a mistake made by Colonel Harrington, because $45,000,000 of it represents practically 1 week's pay roll, which is a carryover from the end of the month. No matter when W. P. A. might terminate, as I said yesterday, there will always be a carry-over, for projects cannot all be completed at midnight on the 30th or the 31st of any given month; they cannot be completed on Saturday night at midnight or at the end of any week. So, in considering the $56,000,000 or the $45,-000,000, the amount is a carry-over, and would be a part of any monthly carry-over of $125,000,000. We have got to consider that at the end of the period, whenever it is, there will be a similar carry-over; and in order to arrive at the exact amount that would be needed in any given period, we have got to check these carry-overs against each other, so as not to get them confused with the amount that will actually be expended by paying out the checks or cash during the month involved or during the fiscal year involved.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that there may be printed at this point in the RECORD, in order that Senators who are interested in reading the RECORD before they vote may have an opportunity to do so, table 1-A and table 1-B on pages 5 and 6 of the Senate committee hearings, and also the tables submitted to me in the letter of Colonel Harrington reconciling, as I think they do, the figures referred to in the debate by the Senator from Colorado—$419,000,000 and $190,000,000—and also showing a comparative table of the number of men possible of employment on W. P. A. rolls during February, March, April, May, and June under the $875,000,000 appropriation; also a column showing the number of men employable under the joint resolution as passed by the House as it came to us, and also the number for each of those months employable under the joint resolution as it has been reported to the Senate from the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKellar in the chair). Without objection, the tables will be printed in the RECORD, as requested.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator from Washington for yielding. I thought this information ought to go in the RECORD at this point, so that it might be available to Members of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I will not take the time now, but there are some features connected with these tables which I will discuss later. I think, however, the Senator from Kentucky will agree that probably further discussion of that question had better await the presentation of the amendment in reference to the amount. I merely wish to state that the figures as given do not constitute an explanation of the discrepancies in reference to the $45,000,000 and the additional item of $11,000,000, which I think can be made rather obvious.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will paraphrase the expression about a woman by saying that convince the Senator from Colorado against his will and he is of the same opinion still. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I wish to speak briefly on the amendment which is proposed to be offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] which will restore the amount of the appropriation to the sum requested by the President of the United States by adding $150,000,000.

Debate upon this subject has involved a number of questions which I do not propose to discuss. I think probably most of the time has been spent in discussing the question whether or not the Administrator of W. P. A. was mistaken in the figures which he presented to the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee. I do not propose to discuss that matter. A large part of the debate has been spent upon the question as to whether or not the figures as to the necessary reduction in the number of workers on the pay roll were correct. I do not propose to discuss that question. At the same time, I should like to point out that, so far as the discussion upon this particular amendment is concerned, we are not discussing the question of the continuation of the W. P. A., for both sides of this argument admit that W. P. A. must be continued during the remainder of the present fiscal year. We are not discussing the question of the efficiency of W. P. A. or politics in W. P. A. We are discussing the question of the amount which should be appropriated in order to care for the needs of W. P. A.

By the amendment which the committee proposes, under the terms of which an invitation is extended to the President of the United States to come back within a comparatively short time and ask for further funds, there is recognition by the majority of the committee that the question as to the amount is one which should be determined upon the basis of the possibility of present W. P. A. workers securing employment in private industry during the period of the next 5 months. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] said a few moments ago that the problem could be analyzed by the analogy of a father talking to his child and withholding onefifth of the amount the child asked for the reason that he was uncertain as to the amount that should be needed. If, on the other hand, the facts presented to the father prove conclusively that there is a necessity for the total amount, then there is no justification for withholding the one-fifth, with an invitation to come back and get it if it turns out to be necessary.

I do not think anybody can deny that the suggestion made by the committee that the President should come back and ask for a further appropriation is a suggestion that will be carried out by the President, because he has already submitted his case and submitted his proof of the necessity for it. The only justification which the Senate might have for accepting the reduced amount is a belief upon the part of the Senate that economic conditions in the country are going to improve at such a rate during the next 5 months as to make it unnecessary to have either the amount requested by the President or the amount requested by the committee in their amendment.

I desire to limit my remarks very largely to that particular question: What can we see during the next 5 months as to the economic possibilities?

The outlook for W. P. A. needs between now and the end of June 1939 must be judged in terms of the economic situation. The level of W. P. A. employment is closely related to the level of general business activity, unemployment, and agricultural distress. Year after year the need for W. P. A. employment follows a trend which corresponds to the trend of unemployment and moves opposite to the trend of private employment. This may not appear to be true if we look at the figures for a couple of months at a time; but if we look at them over a period of months, and take into consideration the necessary lags between loss of jobs and destitution sufficient to qualify for W. P. A., it must be accepted as true.

The major question involved in this appropriation is, How great is the need for W. P. A. employment going to be up to June 30? How great that need is depends upon how much improvement can be expected in industrial operations and employment in that period. The President estimated that the need for W. P. A. employment would require the expenditure of $875,000,000 in the next 5 months. This sum will provide for the employment of 3,000,000 workers on W. P. A. in January, February, and March, which would be reduced to 2,700,000 on W. P. A. in June, a reduction from the 3,100,000 employed in December of 400,000, or 13 percent. In his testimony before the subcommittee, Colonel Harrington indicated that the reduction of 13 percent in W. P. A. employment was based on the assumption of continued sharp increases in private employment, amounting to 1,500,000 by the arrival of the month of June. This estimated increase is very great. It is based upon the belief that recovery will continue at a more rapid rate than it has come at any time of increases during the Nation's history. In fact, an increase of 1,500,000 in private employment in this period would be greater than the increases recorded in the recovery years of 1936 and 1937 and nearly as great as that recorded in 1934. It would be one of the fastest recoveries on record. This increase would be in addition to the already spectacular recovery which we have witnessed since last summer and last fall. Private employment increased by 1,200,000 from June 1938 to December 1938, so that further rapid increase in private employment of 1,500,000 between December 1938 and June 1939 would mean a total increase of 2,700,000 between July 1938 and June 1939. It has never occurred before in the country. The President's estimates are based upon an increase which would be unprecedented over a year's period of time.

It appears to me that the request for $875,000,000 was based upon a pretty optimistic assumption, more optimistic than is justified. It seems to me that the President and his advisers have bent over backward to be careful not to be accused of underrating the recuperative powers of private employment during the next 5 months. Those of you who follow quotations on the stock market may have been wondering, during the past few days, how the experts got any idea that recovery was going to continue between now and June. Those of you who have been following industrial reports know that the almost unprecedented rises in industrial production that occurred between June and November halted in the middle of December, and production has leveled off since then. The index of industrial production in December was 104, only 1 point higher than it was in November. Preliminary indications for January are that this index will decline to about 100 in January, a drop of 3.8 percent. Probably not until April, according to the expert economists of the country, will industrial revival again be in full swing. Private employment will act very much in the same way.

It is all right to assume that private employment is going to increase sharply and make possible a reduction in W. P. A. employment; but we here, in facing this problem, must be realistic about it. The W. P. A. experts say they can see the possibility of a net increase of 1,500,000 in jobs provided by private industry between December and June, if recovery continues at the same rate that it continued between June and December; but we already know that for the past 2 months it failed to continue at that rate, and these estimates are made in the face of the fact that we face a European and a world situation which is so disturbed that it may at any time bring about a complete change in the plans of American industry.

What does an increase of 1,500,000 in private employment mean in terms of other things? It means that the index of industrial production will have to hit 110 by June, a level just 43 percent higher than in June 1938. If you have followed increases in industrial production in the past, you will realize that that is a most sharp increase. At 110, the index of production would be 5 points higher than its average in 1936, and on a par with its average in the calendar year 1937. It means that automobile production, which amounted to 2,500,000 units in 1938, will have to be at the annual rate of 3,600,000 units in the first half of 1939.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield; yes.

Mr. GILLETTE. I have just been rereading the President's message with reference to relief in connection with the subject the Senator has just been discussing. The President called attention to the fact that from a peak in the latter part of last summer there has been a drop in the relief rolls, up to December 24, of some 250,000 persons. At that time there were on the relief rolls 3,112,000 persons; and it is stated that it is expected that by the end of this month the number will be 3,000,000, or a gain of 112,009.

On what basis of reasoning is it fair to assume that at that point the number on the rolls will become stable and stationary, and that we can gain 112,000 in employment in January, but that during February and March we are not to gain anything?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not think the Senator means what his question implies. I do not think anybody is contending that the drop in W. P. A. rolls during the past few months has been justified by industrial conditions. It has resulted from the fact that the appropriation had to last until some time in February, and the drop had to be made in order to carry the appropriation over until February.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just one moment further?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. The basis for the $875,000,000 estimate, of course, is a load of 3,000,000 workers in February and March, and then, from that time until the end of the fiscal year, a drop of 300,000.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes; 300,000. The number of 400,000 includes the 100,000 who have already gone off the

Mr. GILLETTE. Then again I ask, on the basis of the gains which have been made, while it is unfair to assume that they will continue at the same ratio, how can we assume that between the 1st of February and the 1st of July there can be a gain of only 300,000, on which this figure is predicated, when we gained 362,000 in the past 60 to 90 days?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If there were a relationship between the drop of employment in W. P. A. and the industrial conditions of the past 3 months, I think the Senator's question would be logical; but there is not such a relationship. The drop occurred despite the fact that we have not had an increase in industrial work during the past 3 months. As I have just pointed out, industrial work increased until the middle of December, and then it leveled off for the rest of December; and the estimate for January is that it will go down to 3.8 percent over the November figures.

I should like, if I may, to repeat the last statement I read as to the meaning of the estimate which the President has made. It means that automobile production, which amounted to two and a half million units in 1938, will have to be at the annual rate of 3,600,000 units in the first half of 1939. It means that residential construction will have to be nearly 40 percent greater during the first half of 1939 than it was in the first half of 1938. It means that national income in 1939 will have to be practically as high as it was in 1937, which was the peak year of the period since 1933.

I do not claim to be an expert on these things; but it looks to me as though the request for $875,000,000 was based upon as optimistic an outlook for economic conditions in the next 5 months as it is reasonable to expect.

The optimism is presumably based in part on the belief that the Public Works Administration program will get well under way by early summer. Included in this forecast of an increase of 1,500,000 in private employment is a forecast of a very sharp increase in employment on P. W. A. Federal and non-Federal projects. In spite of the fact that only about 190,000 were at work on P. W. A. projects in December, it is hoped that P. W. A. Federal and non-Federal employment may reach 500,000 by June. Remember, this 500,000, as well as any indirect employment provided by P. W. A., are already included in the estimated increase of 1,500,000 in private employment upon which the request for $875,000,000 is based.

Why will an increase in private employment of 1,500,000 make possible a reduction of only 400,000 in W. P. A. employment? The answer is, as we all know, that W. P. A. provides work to only a part of the unemployed. Of the 11,500,000 estimated to be unemployed in December, W. P. A. employed only 27 percent, or 3,100,000. This is important. For one thing, it means W. P. A. provides jobs only to those unemployed who are in greatest need, those who have exhausted all other resources.

We are not dealing with all of the unemployed, some of whom may have friends or relatives to fall back on. We are dealing with those unemployed who are in dire need. These people cannot stand the elimination of their incomes by Congress merely because of a feeling that Federal expenditures ought to be cut down just as a gesture to the Budget balancers

In addition, since only 27 percent of the unemployed get W. P. A. employment, any expansion in private employment should be in the ratio of 73 percent from the unemployed not on relief, and 27 percent from the unemployed on W. P. A. It is just not fair to expect those people on W. P. A. who are the most destitute, the longest out of work, the farthest removed from direct personal contact with private employers, to obtain more than 27 percent of the new jobs. Many of the unemployed not on W. P. A. have become unemployed only recently, and still have good contacts with employers. Many are young people just out of high school and college, equipped to meet the rigorous employment standards of modern industry. Many have fathers or brothers or uncles who can help them get placed. In competition with this group, W. P. A. workers cannot be fairly expected to get more than their proportionate share of the total amount of new work.

The appropriation of $725,000,000 even under the employment schedule of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], which I am not willing to accept, means that from 3.100,000 in December, W. P. A. employment must decline to 2,000,000 by June, a decline of 1,100,000 from December. In other words, this committee expects W. P. A. workers to get 76 percent of all the new jobs which it is estimated will become available in that period. May I ask, are those assumptions reasonable? I think they are not reasonable, that they are arbitrary and unrealistic. With a decrease of 1,100,000 in W. P. A. employment as contemplated by the schedule of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], and assuming, on a fair calculation, that 27 percent of the new jobs can be obtained by W. P. A. workers, then private employment must increase the stupendous amount of over 4,000,000 between December 1938 and June 1939. Keep that figure in mind. When it is said that private employment will increase to take care of the workers thrown off W. P. A., remember that that means that over 4,000,000 jobs must be provided in private employment in the short space of 6 months. Such a rate of increase has never been known in the history of the country.

Let us get the issues in this debate clear. The President and his experts, after very careful study, believe that 1,500,-000 jobs may be made available in private industry between December and June. As I pointed out, I think that is entirely too optimistic an estimate. The opposition, on the other hand, wants to cut arbitrarily $150,000,000 off the President's recommendation. The opposition either fails to realize that such a reduction can be justified only if private employment increases at least 4,000,000 in the next 6 months.

It seems to me that anyone will readily agree that such an achievement is impossible.

There is general agreement among economists that the Federal Government's expenditures in excess of receipts since 1933 have been one of the major factors contributing to recovery, that the degree of recovery achieved by 1937, and now again in 1939, would not have been possible if the volume of Federal expenditures had been less. Continuation of this recovery depends in large part upon the stimulation given to purchasing power by Federal spending, as experience in 1937 demonstrated.

As long as a fifth of the working force is idle, as long as a large proportion of plant capacity is not being operated, we cannot afford to cut down on the stimuli. Business is still sadly lacking in vigor; it still cannot go forward without the crutch of W. P. A. expenditures. We tried it once, in the summer of 1937, and by October of that year we met with the most precipitous decline in business this Nation has ever experienced. The curtailment of expenditures on the basis of the present insecure business situation can have no other result than the one we experienced 2 years ago.

We are offered this $150,000,000 reduction as a gesture to induce business confidence. The very talk of reduction heard during the last fortnight has had its retarding effect upon business in this country. Reduce W. P. A. expenditures by the amount proposed and we know what will happen to business confidence—not, perhaps, as indicated by such "barometers" as the expressions for publication by some antiadministration businessmen, but as indicated by statistical indexes of production and employment.

The business community needs more confidence, I admit. But although its strength is coming back I suggest what appears to me to be obvious: what the patient needs at this stage of convalescence is not a visit from a sixteenth century surgeon who would bleed him but a visit from a doctor who is willing to give him a blood transfusion.

Business is in no position to petition the Government to retire from the field so that business can get its confidence back. If the truly representative voice of business could be heard, no such sentiment would find expression. If the business world recognized its true interest, its petition to Government would be, "We cannot yet stand a substantial withdrawal of the support to purchasing power that is afforded by Federal spending; until a substantial increase in the volume of private investment has been achieved, we need the present volume of Government expenditures to sustain the existing level of business activity; curtainment of W. P. A. funds at this time would not encourage an increase in private investment; on the contrary, there is every likelihood this private investment would be jeopardized."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Referring to business, I assume that the Senator is not considering agriculture as a business, and I should like to call attention to the really sick condition in which our agricultural industry finds itself. Approximately 40 percent of our 130,000,000 people are engaged in agriculture. The total national income last year was approximately $65,000,000,000. Agriculture received less than $8,000,000,000 of that income. So 40 percent of our people are receiving less than one-eighth of the national income. Those people are facing the stark reality of distress and want, and there is no employment in the agricultural section. What is the situation in the Northwest, from which section the Senator comes?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. First, let me say that I appreciate the Senator's interruption and the suggestion he has made. No one can seriously contend that we can have a solution of any of our problems until the problem of agriculture and the problem of employment in industry are solved. There must be cooperation between all the people of the country in the effort to solve both problems. It will require cooperation here of those who represent industrial centers and those who represent agricultural centers in the effort to solve both problems.

I wholly disagree with any contention that we should take money away from agriculture for unemployment relief, or, on the other hand, take it away from unemployment relief for the purpose of aiding agriculture. The problems are mutual and probably of equal importance, and they both must be

Mr. MILLER. I agree entirely that they are mutual. I merely wanted to call the attention of the Senator to the appalling condition among those engaged in agriculture. Considering the disparity of income, how their income is to be increased, and how employment is to be increased in the next 6 months in the agricultural section is more than I can understand.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator from Arkansas for pointing out that, in addition to the difficulty of increasing industrial production, we must face the fact that there is in sight no promise of increasing employment in the agricultural sections of our country.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that the primary consideration in the question of relief is the farm problem? Forty to forty-five percent of our people, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, are engaged directly or indirectly on the farm. If 40 to 45 percent of the people of this country are not prosperous, how can we expect the other 55 percent to be prosperous? And have we not the cart before the horse when we are talking about industrial unemployment and forget that agriculture is the sickest industry in the country?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think the remarks I made in reply to the Senator from Arkansas answer the Senator from Indiana. I may say to the Senator from Indiana on behalf of the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from New Mexico and myself, as well as the other members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that we are glad to welcome him on that committee. We understand he comes to the committee with a complete solution of the agricultural problem. [Laughter.] We will be asking him for advice.

Mr. MINTON. I have just come hitting the sawdust trail, singing "Hallelujah."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I have just come to the floor of the Senate, and I had assumed, from the remarks just made by the Senator from Indiana that the Senator from Washington had already answered the Senator from Arkansas, and suggested a full solution of the agricultural problem. I merely rose to express my regret that I had not been present when he was making that clear.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I may say to the Senator from New Mexico that the gist of my remarks has been that even the bases of the President's figures and his predictions, when he asks for $875,000,000, were altogether too optimistic. And I may say to the Senator, knowing him as I do, that, if he thinks I have a solution of the agricultural problem, he also is too optimistic.

Mr. President, public spending to promote the national welfare has demonstrated its ability to get results. By relieving the stark need to which the unemployed have been reduced, we have at the same time increased purchasing power and promoted recovery. With the inauguration of a vast Federal spending program in 1934, the national income increased steadily from $40,000,000,000 in 1933 to $70,000,000,000 in 1937.

Then in 1937 we in the Congress of the United States, listening to those who argued that the solution of our problem was the balancing of the Budget, passed appropriation bills which very definitely reduced Federal expenditures. We listened to arguments which held out not only the definite hope but the promise that if we continued on that basis through 1938 we would have a balanced Budget in 1939. That was precisely in accordance with the argument of gentlemen who say that a balanced Budget is the solution of our problems. We accepted their challenge. We carried out the request they made, and inside of 4 months we went into a tailspin such as this Nation's industry had never before seen.

It is the analysis of many of the country's most respected economists that the outlook for private investment is such that if we had waited for business itself to initiate a recovery movement we would have been waiting yet. Without some outside stimulus, we faced an indefinitely protracted period of stagnation. And once again, in 1938, the President called upon the Congress to give assistance to the business of the country in the form of Federal expenditures, and once again business indexes climbed and private employment climbed.

The main channel through which the Government has distributed new purchasing power has been the W.P.A. W.P.A. workers live at a near-subsistence level; they spend their wages as fast as they get them. A W.P.A. pay roll today means that stores do more business tomorrow. The W.P.A. must continue to perform this function until the recovery movement has displayed more vitality of its own.

As for public spending interfering with the expansion of business, quite the contrary is the truth. The rise in consumer demand induced by Federal relief expenditures has called forth an expansion in private capital expenditures for repairs and replacements in order to keep pace with this demand. The time must come when such expansion in business investment will be self-sustaining. But, with present production levels and the existing volume of unemployment, we know, without hairsplitting, that that time has not yet come.

In addition, Mr. President, I wish to present another rather interesting thing. We hear much about the possibility of men being able to get jobs in private employment; we hear that they do not want work, that if they only would try to get busy and get some work they would be able to find jobs very easily. I have received from a man whom I do not know-I simply know that his name is Joseph A. Martin. and that he lives at 220 Ocean Parkway, Brooklyn, N. Y .a number of letters which he has received from various corporations. I am not going to burden the RECORD by having them all printed, but, while it is not a great amount of proof, I think it is a very interesting item of proof. He is a trained, skilled man, this W. P. A. worker. He had heard so much about the fact that W. P. A. workers could get jobs that he decided he would find out for himself. He went to the New York Stock Exchange records and got a list of the corporations which had made the most money during the last year, and he filed application with those corporations. He sent me the replies to his applications. I do not know how he happened to choose me as the one to send them to, but he sent me the answers which he received from those corporations whose operations had been most profitable during the years 1937 and 1938.

The first one is from the Delaware & Hudson Railroad, to Joseph Martin:

It would appear that your application was misdirected as we have no record of having received same in this department. However, there is no opportunity for employment at this time in view of the fact that our forces are curtailed.

Very truly yours.

W. W. BATES, Assistant to General Manager.

This is the letter of the American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co.:

Replying to your letter of December 31, we regret to advise we have no openings.

A letter from the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.:

Mr. Gifford asked me to reply to your letter of December 31 and tell you that he regrets very much that this company is unable to offer you an opportunity at this time.

Letter from Climax Molybdenum Co.:

In reply we regret to advise that we are amply staffed in all departments at the present time and are therefore not in a position to avail ourselves of your services.

The letters I have read are typical of the letters he received from these various companies. I wish to place in the Record, however, the names of the corporations who answered Mr. Martin's application in practically the same language, saying, "We have no place in our employment business for you."

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Is it not going to be increasingly difficult for men to find employment with corporations engaged in these basic operations, for the reason that practically all these corporations are now spending millions of dollars in modernizing their plants, which means less employment? Even in the mining industry in Montana more ore can be produced today with half the number of men than could previously be produced with the greater number. I have received telegrams from my State every day during the last few days with reference to the curtailment of mining operations and miners being thrown out of work. So it seems to me that the letters to which the Senator has referred demonstrate that there is going to be no possibility of these corporations offering any employment to W. P. A. workers.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator from Montana for his contribution. I wish now to give the list of the corporations whose letters Mr. Martin sent me. They are the Delaware & Hudson Co.; the American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co.: American Telephone & Telegraph Co.: Climax Molybdenum Co.; the Commercial National Bank & Trust Co.; the Dime Savings Bank of Brooklyn; the American Smelting & Refining Co.; Amerada Petroleum Corporation; the American Sugar Refining Co.; Anaconda Copper Mining Co.; the Greater New York Savings Bank; Pepsi-Cola Co.; American Can Co.; Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co.; the American Tobacco Co.; the Lincoln Savings Bank of Brooklyn; Continental Can Co., Inc.; American Express Co.; Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation; the New York Savings Bank; the Diamond Match Co.; the New York Trust Co.; the Marine Midland Trust Co. of New York; the First National Bank of New York; the Chase National Bank; Manufacturers Trust Co.; Irving Trust Co.; Brown, Harriman & Co.; Fulton Savings Bank of Kings County, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Cluett, Peabody & Co.; American Gas & Electric Service Corporation; Kennecott Copper Corporation; Corn Products Refining Co.; Socony-Vacuum Oil Co.; American Radiator Co.; Cannon Mills.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I ask the Senator whether the applicant sent the Senator a copy of his application; and did it indicate his qualifications or his fitness for a job with any of the companies to whom he applied?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that he did not send me a copy of his application. The first question I asked myself was, Is this of any value? because of the fact that I did not know what he said on his application. However, the letters, universally and without exception, show that the companies have no place for anyone; that they are fully staffed, or something of that kind. They do not base their refusal simply upon the fact that they have no work for anyone with the qualifications of this applicant.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator recognizes that those replies are scarcely of any value, for the reason that unless the application were supported by certain evidences of fitness, the applicant would almost universally be denied. Senators know that the answers the Senator read are almost identical with the stock expressions used by our Government departments. Those companies, in making their replies, were simply following what a prudent businessman always does in the absence of evidence of some extraordinary fitness of the applicant for certain work. I notice the list runs all the way from refining companies to banks. The applicant must have been a very versatile gentleman to be qualified to fill a position in any kind of business in America.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think a man could fill a position as janitor in a bank and also in a refining company. Mr. Martin said in his letter to me that he had stated he was willing to accept any employment they might have.

Mr. SMITH. That was indicative of the fact that he was not fit for anything.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Let me state to the Senator that I am directing this question to him purely for the purpose of obtaining information. I am desirous of having information in order to make up my mind how to vote. I do not really know how I shall vote on the question before the Senate, and I desire to obtain some information.

How many aliens are there on the relief rolls of the United States at the present time?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My answer to that question is that I do not know.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Would the Senator object to my making that general inquiry of all Senators who are present, so that if any Senators present know how many aliens there are on the relief rolls I may be forthwith advised?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator think that is the controlling question in his mind?

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; there are other questions upon which I desire information.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator is familiar with the fact that the joint resolution provides that those who are illegally in the country—

Mr. REYNOLDS. The veterans come first.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Aliens who are illegally in the country may not obtain employment at all.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes; I understand.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let me read the provision to which I refer:

SEC. 2. No alien illegally within the limits of the United States, and no alien who has not, prior to June 21, 1938, filed a declaration of intention to become an American citizen which is valid and has not expired, shall knowingly be given employment or continued in employment on any project prosecuted under the appropriations contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution.

The joint resolution provides, in addition, that preference shall be given, first, to veterans; second, to other American citizens; third, to aliens in need whose declarations of intention to become American citizens were filed prior to June 21, 1938, and are valid and have not expired.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The reason why I made that particular inquiry was that several days ago I observed through the columns of the press that Colonel Harrington, who is now at the head of the W. P. A., had stated to the press that there were only 30,000 aliens on the W. P. A. rolls. That is why I raised the question.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. May I ask the Senator from Colorado whether or not a similar provision was contained in the last act, on the question of having filed a declaration prior to the 1st of July?

Mr. ADAMS. The amendment which the committee suggests is copied from the existing law. It is a restatement of the existing law, which in turn was copied practically verbatim from the 1937 Emergency Relief Act.

If I may follow that remark with just a few words, the item which the Senator from North Carolina saw was a statement which Colonel Harrington made in reference to a section of the joint resolution as it came from the House. He was asked how many persons would be affected by the House amendment, and he then said he thought about 30,000. I think that was not intended to be an accurate statement, but was an estimate.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In other words, if I may paraphrase what the Senator said, if the provision had remained as the House had it, then approximately 30,000 persons would have had an opportunity—

Mr. ADAMS. Would have had to go off the roll.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Those aliens who are now on the rolls, whatever their number may be, are those who legally entered the United States and filed their declarations, which are still pending, and who take their places after the preferences to veterans, other American citizens, and Indians. They are the needy ones who come after those particular classifications?

Mr. ADAMS. That is my understanding.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator's statement is in accordance with my recollection of Colonel Harrington's testimony. By reason of the action of the House he caused an inquiry to be made, and his best judgment is that the amendment would affect 30,000 persons. He said that he had to rely upon the statements he received from the States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The figure of 30,000 referred to in Colonel Harrington's testimony on page 103 of the Senate hearings indicates that not to exceed 30,000 aliens are on the rolls, and they have taken out what are called their first papers, to obtain citizenship in the United States. As I understand, the House amendment treats them as full aliens and bars them from consideration, although they have taken out their first papers.

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In that connection, Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Washington, I should like to ask, in the first place, how those 30,000 aliens got on the relief rolls.

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot answer that question, except that I suppose they made application, and were found in need of work, and were assigned to work, there being no law against such persons who have come into this country legally, and presumably with the intention of becoming citizens. They have taken the first steps toward the accomplishment of American citizenship.

Mr. REYNOLDS. At the present time we will assume that an alien illegally entered this country 15 years ago. When he learns that under the law he may not get on the relief rolls unless he makes application for American citizenship, he may now—that is to say, tomorrow—make application for citizenship and thereafter get on the relief rolls; may he not?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; he must have have two qualifications. First, he must have entered legally.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Suppose he entered legally 15 years ago.
Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thought the Senator said "illegally."

Mr. REYNOLDS. I did. The Senator has answered that question. Suppose that 15 years ago he entered legally, and tomorrow he makes application for naturalization. Is it not true that immediately after having filed that application he will be permitted to be considered for a place on the relief rolls?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes. He could not get the place, but he would be considered.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Can any Senator tell me, please, how many of the 30,000 aliens who have been properly recorded as entitled to the benefits of relief under the law as at present had been in the United States more than 5 years before they made application for naturalization?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not think I can answer that question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I was wondering if any tabulation of that sort had ever been made. My reason for making the inquiry is that I am ready to assume that many of the 30,000 who are now on the W. P. A. rolls never made application for American citizenship until after they had learned that they could not participate in relief benefits unless they made application for naturalization. I was just wondering whether or not the Government had made any figures or tabulations as to that matter. I am trying to figure out how we can save a little money. I am becoming more and more economically inclined.

A few moments ago I was listening to the very able address of the Senator from Washington, in which the Senator was directing inquiries to some of the other Members of this body, and other Members of this body were directing inquiries to the Senator. I recall that at that time the Senator from Washington asked the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] if the number of unemployed would not depend upon whether or not industry absorbed more and more of the unemployed during the coming spring. I think that was the gist of the discussion.

Let me make this statement in the form of a question: Let us assume that during the coming spring no more of the unemployed are absorbed than were absorbed during the past five springs. In other words, according to all I hear and all I read, and according to all I learn, our unemployment for the past 5 years has not been reduced. I see the Senator from Colorado shaking his head.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I shake my head because in 1936 the number on the relief rolls went down nearly 800,-000, and the next year it went down nearly 600,000 in the spring, by reason of the increase in employment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Shall we assume, in view of the statement the Senator makes, that during the coming spring industry will absorb a number equivalent to one of the two figures which the Senator mentioned, either 600,000 or 800,000?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I appreciate very much the interruptions of the Senator, and I always enjoy discussions with him. However, in view of the statement of the Senator that he was greatly interested in the few minutes he heard of my discussion, let me suggest that if he will read the Congressional Record tomorrow morning and read my entire speech he will find an answer to all his questions.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy to learn that the Senator's speech has been so thoroughly informative.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I know the Senator does not want me to repeat my remarks for his own benefit.

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, it was not necessary for the Senator to advise me that if I should read his statement every question would be answered. I knew that, knowing the Senator as I do. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the Senator will read my statement in the morning, I am sure he will find the answers to his questions.

Mr. REYNOLDS. One further question: I know that the Senator is as thoroughly interested in saving money as I am. I should like to know how many men in the employ of the Government administering these few dollars per week to the unfortunates in the land are themselves drawing compensation in excess of $5,000 a year.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not know the answer to that question offhand, but there are very few. Some of the State administrators may receive more than $5,000 a year.

Mr. ADAMS. The information is contained in the House hearings, but I am not able to turn to it at the moment.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. A very small number are receiving more than $5,000.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator does not have in mind the number?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No.

Mr BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. On the subject of aliens, the Senator will recall that the first act which dealt with that question was the Relief Appropriation Act of 1937. In that act, aliens who had taken out their first papers were authorized to be employed, and all others were barred. As a result of that, State directors went over their lists and removed from the roll every identifiable alien not possessing first citizenship papers. So the 30,000 or whatever the number is—and that seems to be the maximum—are made up of those who have obtained their first papers. The rolls were purged in 1937 of all those who could be identified as not having taken out their papers.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a word or two in conclusion. Again I desire to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that the issue upon the McKellar amendment will not be an issue as to whether or not we are going to continue W. P. A., it will not be an issue as to whether or not there will be politics in relief, or whether or not those who are to vote may be satisfied with the particular persons in charge of the administration. There is just one issue involved, in the light of the invitation of the committee to the President to come back and ask for more money if it is necessary, and that is, Can we today be certain that employment conditions in this country are going so to improve during the next 5 months that we will be able to make the reductions which are desired by the committee's report?

It is my belief and my contention that the President and the W. P. A. have been extremely optimistic in their thought as to possible recovery. It seems to me that there is no such possibility, if we take into consideration the past history of the increase in private employment which would be necessary. If it is true that the proposal of the committee will work, it will mean that there will have to be 4,000,000 people taken into private employment between now and the 30th day of June, and such a thing has never occurred in even the most prosperous 5-month period the Nation has ever

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, we have had much stated on the floor in reference to political influence upon W. P. A. workers. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended provisions incorporating what are known as the Hatch amendments prohibiting, under very extreme penalties, any effort to influence politically those upon the W. P. A. rolls. I am advised, however, that the same limitations do not seem to operate in the reverse way, and I am sending to the desk and ask to have incorporated in the RECORD, with the permission of the Senate, a bulletin which was posted upon the bulletin boards on two floors of the national headquarters of the W. P. A., urging W. P. A. workers to send telegrams to Senators of the United States to influence them, and also a sample telegram which accompanied it, in order that they might not be misled as to the kind of telegram that they should send.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator where those telegrams came from?

Mr. ADAMS. Those notices were on the bulletin boards on two different floors of the W. P. A. headquarters in the city of Washington.

Mr. SMITH. Let the clerk read them in the Senator's time.

Mr. ADAMS. I will be glad to read them:

Spend 25 cents. Send a telegram to your Senator today. Protest W. P. A. appropriation cuts. Protest civil service ban on W. P. A. employees. Protect your job.

Then a sample form of a telegram is furnished, as follows: Senator ALVA B. ADAMS,

Chairman of Appropriations Committee,

Washington, D. C.:
Respectfully urge you support $875,000,000 appropriation and oppose civil-service ban on W. P. A.

BALTIMORE, MD.

I have no objection to such telegrams, but I merely want to point out to the Senate what is being done.

Mr. SMITH. There is no politics in it-none. [Laugh-

Mr. LEE obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lucas in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, in Oklahoma we have 33,726 persons who have been certified to the W. P. A. rolls as eligible who cannot secure employment. I assume that those 33,726 persons in Oklahoma have no buying power, because that is the prerequisite to being certified for the rolls. Far be it from me to say "I told you so"; but a year ago, I believe, I made the statement here that if Congress would grant us a formula that would guarantee a price of 20 cents a pound on the cotton which we consume in this country we could fold up most of the relief agencies in the deep South and in the cotton-raising area. Of course, that was not done. At the same time I made the statement that if it were not done we would come back here and ask for more appropriations this year to continue these people on relief. I also said, I believe, that I should be one of those asking for this appropriation. Therefore I rise now to speak in support of the amendment which is to be proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator; probably he has the figures which I am about to ask for; but the statement that there are in Oklahoma 33,000 persons certified as eligible and not having work arouses my curiosity as to the number who are actually employed in Oklahoma. Has the Senator those figures?

Mr. LEE. Those actually employed are 65,093. The number of persons certified for relief and available for assignment is 98,819. The difference is 33,726-33,000 persons who have no buying power; 33,000 persons who cannot be customers of any store, of any shop, of any business or profession; 33,000 persons who no longer constitute the mass to whom the manufacturer must sell his goods.

There are two major causes of unemployment. One, we may say, is the result of science. Labor-saving inventions have displaced many workers. The Rust Brothers of Tennessee have invented a cotton-picker which, if and when perfected and placed on the market, will throw out of employment in round numbers 3,000,000 persons who depend upon cotton-picking for enough money to grubstake them through the year. Should we pass a law to prevent that labor-saving device from coming on the market? Should we by legislation attempt to prevent a mechanical cotton-picker from being placed on the market? Not if you ever had your back ache from picking cotton all day-labor which is the hardest drudgery that can be found. You would not vote against the introduction of a machine to prevent that; but that means 3,000,000 persons who will be displaced by one invention.

I am told that in the steel mills, even since this depression began, labor-saving machinery has been applied until there are blocks and blocks of mills which you may go through without seeing a man. The mills are mechanically operated. There has been a displacement of labor.

What is the answer? Should we attempt, as China might do, to roll back progress and say, "We cannot and shall not progress?" Or shall we welcome every labor-saving mechanical robot that lifts the load from the back of man? I am sure my colleagues agree with me that if we are to progress in the world we should welcome and subsidize labor-saving inventions; but with the coming of these inventions we are presented with the problem of furnishing employment to those who have been displaced by the inventions.

We are making an effort in that direction. We offered the wage-hour law last year as a contributing means of solving this difficult problem by shortening the hours people may work; and, incidentally, the reports we get on that law are very good. That was an attempt to cut down the number of hours in order to distribute the labor among as many persons as possible.

We are in a scientific age. My grandfather used to tell me how he cut wheat with an old-time scythe and cradle. You can imagine how much wheat one man could cut in that fashion. Compare that with wheat harvesting in the West today, where a man hooks a mogul on a combine and pulls into a thousand-acre ocean of grain and cuts and threshes that grain in one operation and pours it in a grain bin to be hauled away. The next thing we know some fellow will invent a portable flour mill and hook it on behind that machine and grind up the wheat into flour, and then perhaps put a portable bakery on behind that and cook the flour up into hot bread all in the same operation, and put on a plow behind and let it prepare the seedbed for the next year, and sow the next year's crop, all in the same operation. [Laughter.]

But seriously, one man on a farm today, with power machinery, can do the work of 5 men or 12 men, depending on how far back in history we go to make the comparison.

Electricity? By our laws we are propelling the progressive movement of science. We set up a T. V. A. to send electric currents vibrating out over steel-towered lines carrying electricity to light dark homes and to lift heavy loads. Everything today is being done by electricity. Why, they even have an electric polling machine in New York, where a candidate is elected and his opponent is electrocuted at the same time. [Laughter.]

A young woman called up her husband and said, "George, you had better come home." He said, "What is the matter, honey?" She said, "I don't know; I must have got the wires crossed, or the plugs mixed, or something. Our radio is all frosted over, and our refrigerator is giving a fireside talk." [Laughter.]

So we are living in a scientific age. It is useless to blink at it. It is useless to go to sleep with the belief that the unemployment problem will solve itself. It will not. There is only one power that can solve it, and that is the Government itself: and that is why we have government.

We make another contribution to the solution of that problem which I do not wish to discuss now, in the form of old-age pensions and the Youth Administration, hoping to cut off unemployment at both ends, giving the old people something to live on and at the same time furnishing enough income to young people that they may spend their time in school, and cutting down the number of unemployed in that manner.

There is another major cause of unemployment and that is the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few, with the accompanying increase of poverty on the part of the many. The two things operate in inverse ratio. The richer the rich become, and the faster they become rich, the poorer the poor become, and the faster and more numerous they become poor. That is a natural tendency. It was here before we were.

In the Army we were paid on pay day. I remember that when we were paid off all of us privates had the same amount of money; but by midnight that night some of us were flat "busted," and some of the rest of the privates had their pockets full of money.

Tonight we could divide up equally all the money in the United States, and tomorrow night some persons would be rich and some of the rest of us would be broke. The second night the rich would be richer, and the poor would be poorer and more numerous. The third night the rich would be richer and fewer, and the poor would be poorer and more numerous; and that would continue on and on.

Wealth constantly and continuously gravitates toward the hands of a few, as surely as the laws of gravity pull falling bodies toward the center of the earth. Unless some power is set up to offset that tendency, the inevitable result is crash and ruin.

It has happened with every nation which has followed the policy of laissez faire—let the Government keep its hands off, and let dog eat dog, and let the devil take the hindmost. It has always followed that there has been upheaval and revolution, and out of the wreckage a few human souls have crawled back and started all over again. If we pursue the same policy, sooner or later the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few will bring that about.

Wealth? We have more wealth in the United States than has any other nation on the face of the globe. Why, we have so much gold that we dig it up in Colorado and bury it in Kentucky; and yet we split hairs over furnishing buying power to a few poor souls who cannot buy the necessaries of life.

Wealth? We have it in this country, but it is spotted; and being spotted is a sign of disease. The circulation of money is as necessary for the well-being of the body politic as is the circulation of blood for the well-being of the physical body. When it congests in one spot, there is disease; and unless the congestion is broken up and circulation established, death will follow.

Money? We have it in this country, but it is spotted. We have, in round numbers, over $50,000,000,000 of untaxed bonds that do not bear their share of the cost of government. When we realize that those $50,000,000,000 of bonds are owned by those in the highest wealth brackets, we realize that the ones who buy the bonds are those most able to buy and store them away and therefore be exempt from paying taxes on them. We have enough wealth in America, we have enough natural resources in America, we have enough manpower in America to develop those resources. Have we enough courage in this body to bring those things together in the proper relation to move forward, or shall we hesitate and talk about stopping the flow of money?

The concentration of wealth in the hands of the few brings stagnation. The Government must set up a power that is constant and forceful, bringing about a redistribution of wealth continually and constantly, or the wealth will all find itself in one place. That is the position in which we are today. It has been said the wealth of the Nation is concentrated until 1 percent of the families have 66 percent of all the national wealth, while thousands of others, yes, millions, have so little that it is not enough to live on.

Today we are debating whether or not we will increase the amount appropriated for the W. P. A. pay rolls.

I realize that this administration has been called a Santa Claus. President Roosevelt has been called Santa Claus so much that he has discontinued the dairy business on his farm in Dutchess County, N. Y., and has gone into raising Christmas trees. I suppose he wants to raise enough so that he can hang up presents for everyone.

We are criticized on account of the W. P. A. Goodness knows I cannot defend every act of the W. P. A. everywhere, and I say frankly that I hope the time will come when we can taper off the W. P. A. into a permanent public-works program, where the employment will be through private contract, where people will be employed as a private contractor employs them, and return to the local communities the semicharitable and charitable cases so that the communities can investigate and take care of them. But that stage has not yet been reached. Today we are still confronted by the necessity of deciding whether to take care of these people or not take care of them. We have not worked out a publicworks program. I should like to see us embark on a program that would favor self-liquidating and semi-self-liquidating projects, such as the construction of toll bridges, perhaps toll canals, and highways, power projects, and any other that had a self-liquidating possibility or a semi-self-liquidating possibility as a permanent proposition. But we have not yet reached that point. We still must take care of those who are before us today.

This criticism comes, "You will bankrupt this Nation; you will ruin us." Let me ask those who make that criticism, Does it make for any less money in the United States if we put some of it into circulation? When we raise money by taxation and spend it by giving jobs, does that result in any less wealth in the United States? It certainly does not. It increases the wealth in the country, as every economist will testify.

The amount of money and wealth in the country is determined not only by the volume of currency but by the turnover of the dollar. When we set up Government force pumps and start forcing money out from Wall Street to Main Street we are clearing the arteries and the channels of stagnation and putting the money in circulation; and that money, as it is turned over and over, means more wealth in this country.

Mr. President, I was interested in the question asked the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings]. The Senator from Maryland asked, Is it not the purpose to increase the food and raiment and shelter supply of this country? Then he asked, Does the construction of a city hall bring that about? I was surprised at the able and distinguished Senator from Maryland asking a question like that. The question today is not whether there is a sufficiency of food and raiment. That is not the question. That would have been the question in the days of barter, but we are not in those days now. Today we have a medium of exchange known as the dollar, and when the circulation of that medium of exchange is stopped, we can have surpluses which are burdensome, as we do have today. Yet, because the circulation of the medium of exchange is stopped, they cannot be handled. What good would it do to increase the production of wheat and cotton and wool when we already have surpluses?

Certainly the construction of a city hall increases the food and raiment supply of the people, because the workers on the building convert their time into dollars, and convert the dollars into food and raiment. There is a sufficiency in this country, and there is more than that.

I must tell a story here which I have told before, of an old fellow who had more whiskers on his face than I ever saw hanging on any man's chin. His head was as bald and as slick as an egg. I looked at him and said, "That is our situation today—overproduction and poor distribution." [Laughter.] I do not believe there would be overproduction in this country if it were not for the poor distribution.

Let us follow up that question of men working on the city hall. In the first place, the city hall is built of brick. Whence come the brick? From a clay deposit, and the clay has to be mined. Who does that mining? Laborers. What do those laborers get for their work? They get money. What do they do with that? They buy clothes and shoes and food. Then what is next? The next is cement. Someone has to mine that, haul it, and sack it. Then there is the paint. Someone has to produce the paint. There is the lumber. The lumberjacks in the forest get employment in producing the lumber, and they convert their labor into money, and that money into food and raiment and shelter.

What does the W. P. A. worker who toils in constructing this city hall do? Let us say he gets a dollar. What does he do with that dollar? Does he roll it up and smoke it like a cigarette? Certainly not. Does he roll it up in a wad and swallow it? Certainly not. Does he light a match and burn it? Certainly not. It is ridiculous even to ask such questions. What does he do with it? Does it mean less money in the country when that laborer gets the dollar? Certainly not. What does he do with it? He takes it to the grocery store as fast as he can and buys bacon and beans and other food supplies for his family, and, if any is left, buys clothing for his wife and children. It means unclogging the channels of trade, so that the dollar can be converted into food and raiment and shelter. That is exactly what it means.

We might be able to get along without the city hall, it is true, but that W. P. A. worker and his family cannot get along without the money he gets for helping build that city hall.

We are told that an increase in the appropriation means more taxes. From what class do the taxes come? They come from those who have the money. We can get out of paying any taxes at all by bringing back the soup lines. Then we can get into them and stick our hands down into our empty pockets and console ourselves by reflecting that, though we are starving to death, we do not have to pay any taxes. Certainly there are people paying taxes today who did not pay them several years ago, and some of them are displeased at having to pay them.

Do taxing and spending mean less wealth in the United States? Certainly not. I do not mean that there is not a limit beyond which we should not go; but I think we have already gone further than the limit in one direction in allowing so many people to be without buying power.

Let me illustrate the point in this way: At my home we had a sandbox where the children used to play. There was a certain amount of sand in that box, and sometimes the children when playing would have the sand all heaped up in one corner of the box, sometimes they would have it all leveled out nice and smooth, but it was the same sand in the box. It did not make any less sand when it was all spread out.

Which makes for more prosperity in the United States, to have a hundred men with a million dollars each or a million men with a hundred dollars each? The answer is obvious. Bringing about a redistribution of purchasing power, by taxing those most able to pay and giving jobs to those least able to buy, makes for prosperity. That is the whole program, and that is what we are working on here, to bring about prosperity by taking money by income taxes, inheritance taxes, gift taxes, corporation taxes, and the different forms of taxes which reach all wealth in proportion to its ability to pay and in proportion to benefits received, and giving jobs to those least able to buy and increasing their purchasing power.

It is not confidence the business people need today, it is cash customers, and we are trying to see that they get more cash customers.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I take it, then, the able Senator would agree that the problem is not one of production, but is a problem of distribution?

Mr. LEE. To a great extent it is one of distribution of the purchasing power, as well as of the commodities. If we distribute the purchasing power, the commodities will be distributed, because whenever there is purchaser demand on the one side and an ample supply on the other, there is a free play and flow, and full prosperity throughout the Nation. What we are seeking is an increase in the purchaser's power up to the bare necessities of life alone. That is all we are asking, not for ability to buy any luxuries.

I was speaking of confidence in business. Confidence is as much a result as a cause of prosperity, in my opinion more. When does the businessman have confidence? After he has done a good day's business, after he has sold a good supply of goods, his confidence goes up. He says, "I feel better. I will buy more goods and fill my shelves." So that confidence is as much a result as it is a cause, and in my opinion more.

Confidence will rise in equal ratio with the increase of purchasing power of the people throughout the Nation. I fully agree—in fact that is one of the things in which I am deeply interested—that we should increase the purchasing power of the 30,000,000 people on the farms throughout the Nation, whose purchasing power has dropped to nil.

There are 6,000,000 farm families. Counting at least five persons to the family, that makes a total of 30,000,000 farm people. Their purchasing power has dropped to a very low point. The average farm family income in one of the States $75 a year. What kind of purchasing power is that? No wonder the channels clog up when the people do not have the money with which to purchase goods.

No business man ever refused goods to a cash customer simply because he was pouting at the Government. When we get the cash customers, we will have good times, and not until then. We hear many idealistic talks about confidence on the part of business. That is all very well, up to a certain point. But let us not blind our minds or confuse our reasoning.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator remembers that during the former administration it was suggested that all that was needed to restore confidence and bring business back was for the President to make some statement. So a statement was made that prosperity was just around the corner. But it did not mean anything, because there existed no purchasing power. People had no money with which to buy the goods produced, and business kept going down instead of recovering.

Mr. LEE. That is correct. And when prosperity comes back to America in a full measure it will not come around the corner of the First National Bank. It will come through the barn door, starting with the grass roots; it will come when the farmer gets his checks and starts going to the stores to buy his goods from the retailers, who in turn will send in their orders to the wholesalers, the wholesalers will order from the manufacturers, the wheels in the factories will start their slow hum again, and the hitchhiker will get his job back. When we start that cycle we will have prosperity.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I feel certain that the Senator would advocate for the farmer, then, cost of production plus a fair profit.

Mr. LEE. I advocate it by all means, not quietly, but as vociferously as I am able to do.

It is not my opinion that we should abandon any of the fundamental principles of democracy. On the contrary, it is my full conviction that we should save those fundamental principles by adapting democracy to the times in which we live. When the engineers decided to produce the 1939 automobile, and streamline the body, they did not change any of the fundamental principles of engineering. They could not. They simply adapted the automobile to a basic rate of speed, namely, 80 miles an hour instead of 40 miles an hour. They could not change the centrifugal force; they could not change the law of gravity pull; they simply proved those laws with a machine operating at 80 miles an hour instead of 40 miles an hour.

There is no intention on our part in any way to destroy any of the fundamental principles of democracy, but to preserve those principles by causing democracy to function in a streamline civilization, in a streamline age, bring it up to date, and make it provide what is necessary to satisfy the demands made upon it by a people in a modern civilization. When our democracy or any other democracy fails to meet that demand upon it, it soon fails to be a government of the people.

Mr. President, a pioneer built a log cabin in a trackless forest. His nearest neighbor was 100 miles away. He had little or no need of government of law. With his ax and his gun he took whatever he was able to take. His home was an independent establishment. He manufactured his own leather goods. He manufactured his own cloth from fibers and made his own clothes. The home was sufficient. There was little need of any government at all.

His herds roamed at will. But one day a neighbor moved in, and whereas his herds had roamed at will before, now his rights were related to those of his neighbor. His neighbor had herds. They got along, perhaps, but soon other neighbors moved in, and soon there were so many neighbors that it was necessary to establish an institution called government to define and decide the rights as between these different people. There was a progress of civilization leading toward an increasing demand upon government. Whereas before they had needed no sanitation laws, it later became necessary to adopt sanitation laws. Then they had to pass legislation regulating traffic. Then they had to establish regulations and rules regulating the erection of buildings, the installation of piping and plumbing in connection with the construction of buildings necessary to health and the safety of the people, all of which was unnecessary at one time.

Twenty years ago it would have been silly for the Congress of the United States to establish a Committee on Civil Aeronautics, but we have one today because it is necessary. Today we have a committee which regulates the wave lengths of the air, or at least regulates them with respect to those who can use the different wave lengths of the air. That was unnecessary at one time. Thus we progress.

Labor-saving inventions come with the passing of every year and with every turn of the clock. One day a man said, "I will spend all of my time making leather goods. I will not have time to plant and harvest, so I must depend upon somebody else for the other necessaries of life." Another man said, "I will be a weaver and produce clothes, but I will not have time to do anything else. I will have to depend upon somebody else to produce the necessaries of life." Another man said, "I will study to be a doctor, and take care of the health of your children and your families." Thus we divided up our work, and we became interdependent to the point where we all now depend upon each other.

Today we are so interdependent that every man's business and profession is impressed with a public interest that did not before exist. And government cannot ignore that progress and ignore all the rights of the individual in comparison with society as a whole and the rights of society in the aggregate as compared with those of the individual. There is a shifting that impresses every business and every profession with a public interest. If the milkman does not bring a bottle of milk tomorrow morning, you suffer. If the bus does not run, you are inconvenienced. And those things that did not once exist under the purview of regulation today are by force of circumstances regulated, and logically must be, and the government that ignores the changing conditions is destined to crack for lack of keeping itself abreast of the times.

The democracies in Europe failed because they failed to function. The people turned aside from them because they no longer afforded relief from the very evils I have been discussing.

We hear much said about rights. A man says, "I have a right to make all the money I want to make." "Right" is a relative term. "Time" is a relative term. If one is waiting for something that is very dear to him, which he wants to get in a hurry, time is long. If we do not want it to pass rapidly, time is short. "Time" is a relative term.

One man's right to make money today is tempered by the other man's right to make a living for himself and his family, and the Government cannot ignore that.

Why have government? If we did not have government we would have the law of the jungle; the law of the jungle means the survival of the fittest; and the survival of the fittest means that the brute with the strongest muscle rules the jungle. Therefore, people set up an institution they call government, and the purpose and duty of that institution is to protect the weak from the strong, to prevent the strong from exploiting the weak.

In my opinion, that law extends beyond the physical side. It is just as much the duty of the Government to prevent the financially powerful from crushing the financially weak as it is to prevent the ruffian from outraging the child. It is just as much the duty of the Government, in my opinion, to prevent the cunning from exploiting the simple as it is to prevent the brute from destroying the child. And the government that fails to recognize that duty fails, in my opinion, in the purpose for which it was established.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I would say to the Senator, then, that the Congress should not have surrendered the power to coin money and regulate the value thereof.

Mr. LEE. That is another chapter.

I wish to thank the Senate for the kind hearing it has accorded me. I shall vote for the pending amendment, and on every question I shall be found on the side of those who desire to take care of the human interest in this country, to promote the purchasing power of those who do not have purchasing power, to do by Government action what cannot be done by individual motion. The only power that can do it is the Government. In this complex civilization only the Government can take money off the mountains of wealth and throw it back in the valleys of despair, and level up some of the low places in America, so that all the people may have a purchasing power with which to buy the mountains of wheat and corn and of cotton which now exist in this country, and keep us on the road to true prosperity.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a few moments ago, when the Senator from Colorado read the notice which he said had been posted in the W. P. A. building, I immediately called Colonel Harrington on the telephone about the matter and told him what had been presented to the Senate. Colonel Harrington knew nothing about it, but said he would immediately make an examination and telephone me. He has just called me over the telephone and said that he had learned that such a notice had been found at one place: that he immediately had it removed; that it had not been put there with the knowledge or approval of himself or any other official of the W. P. A.; and that he is very sorry it occurred. He does not know, and has not been able as yet to ascertain, who the person was who put it there, but he is using every effort to find out who put it there, and will report further to the Senate. In my judgment, Mr. President, it was put there by a wholly unauthorized person.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we have consumed about 3 days in talking about a phase of the pending joint resolution which really is not before the Senate. We have devoted practically all the discussion to the amount which ought to be appropriated, when that amendment is not before the Senate for its consideration.

Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into the other day, as usual, the committee amendments were ordered to be first considered. However, in view of the situation, it seems to me logical that the amendment which we are all discussing ought to be before the Senate to be passed upon.

I have consulted the minority leader, the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams], in charge of the joint resolution; and as a result of those consultations I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the unanimous-consent agreement entered into with respect to committee amendments, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] may now offer his amendment and have it pending, and that we may vote upon it at an hour not later than 2 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am very much in favor of the purpose the Senator has in mind in fixing a time to vote on this question. I am quite willing to have the amount, which is the matter which has been debated, brought up first. The debate has been in the main by those who have favored the larger amount. Will the Senator, in his unanimousconsent request, in some way reserve a modest amount of time for those who wish to speak for the committee? The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] and I would like an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that I am willing to amend the request by a provision that the time to be occupied tomorrow shall be equally divided between those who favor the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee and those who oppose it.

Mr. ADAMS. That is agreeable.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Before the unanimous-consent agreement is entered into I desire to occupy some time upon the joint resolution. I shall not desire a great amount of time; but there may be some questions asked, and I should not want to be limited. If I may be recognized tomorrow upon the convening of the Senate, I will take my chances on the 2 o'clock vote.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is entirely agreeable to me that the Senator shall be recognized. Of course, the Senator would not consume the whole time.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Not unless questions should be asked.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from South Caro-

Mr. BYRNES. In that case, I suggest that the Senator change the hour in his request to 3 o'clock, so that there will be ample time.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is entirely satisfactory. I amend the request by making the hour 3 o'clock instead of 2 o'clock. Mr. BYRNES. The time to be equally divided between both sides.

Mr. BARKLEY. The time to be equally divided between both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky? Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have had no opportunity to confer with the other Members of the minority, but I am willing to assume that I may speak for them. I favor the

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, unless it is understood that I shall be recognized upon the convening of the Senate tomorrow, I cannot agree.

Mr. BARKLEY. After the agreement is entered into, I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall be recognized this afternoon, so that he may have the floor tomorrow when the Senate convenes. Of course, I cannot control the action of the Chair in recognizing Senators. However, under the circumstances I think the Senator will have no trouble.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, we never incorporate in any unanimous-consent agreement a stipulation that certain Senators shall be recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not doing that.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator will seek and obtain recognition this afternoon, he will have the floor when the Senate convenes tomorrow.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I shall en-deavor to obtain recognition. With that understanding, I raise no objection to the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, may I be recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, my request is now agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Provided I may be recognized. Mr. BARKLEY. Let us dispose of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. McNARY. May we not dispose of the unanimousconsent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say that he will recognize the Senator from Oklahoma immediately after the disposition of the request of the Senator from Kentucky, which is now before the Senate.

Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield for the purpose of offering an amendment to the joint resolution?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 1, line 8, I move to strike out "$725,000,000" and insert "$875,000,000." I think the amendment is printed. I offer that amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 8, after the words "the sum of", it is proposed to strike out "$725,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$875,000,000."

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, January 27, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 26, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh, the depths of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God. How unsearchable are His judgments and His ways past finding out.

Heavenly Father, help us to hope, pray, and aspire with faith and confidence, for in Thee we live and move and have our being; thus may the tangled webs of life be unraveled and misunderstandings made clear. Thou who art the source of all good, be with us that we enter not into temptation and do wrong to no man. Very soon, blessed Lord, give answer to that prayer which falls from countless lips each day: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven," and unto Thee be eternal praises. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand that there is no business ready for tomorrow.

Mr. RAYBURN. No, and I might say this to the gentleman. It had been the hope that the independent offices appropriation bill would be ready during the coming week, but during the hearings so many documents were asked for that it made the hearings so long that it is impossible to have the hearings printed and to report the bill next week. The earliest we can hope for that report is on the 6th of February, which would be Monday week.

There is very strong probability that the Committee on Ways and Means will be able to report and be ready to consider the matter known as the exemption of retroactive taxes on State salaries sometime next week. That committee does not hope to bring in the bill in response to the whole recommendation of the President at that time, because the matter of taxation of State securities, and so forth, would take longer consideration.

The chairman of the Committee on Rules has been asked to give hearings early next week on the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] with reference to extending the life of the Reorganization Committee. Unless those two things are in the House next week or unless some committee reports something that I do not expect at the present time or have not been notified about by the chairman, that will be the extent of the program next week.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Then nothing of importance is likely to come before the House on Monday or Tuesday of next week? Several Members are anxious to know about that.

Mr. RAYBURN. No; except that the relief bill in some form in all probability will be before the House on Monday next, and there might be some votes, very important ones, in connection with that measure at that time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And, of course, that would depend somewhat on what the Senate does.

Mr. RAYBURN. That depends on the decision the Senate reaches today or tomorrow on some matters.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. FISH. Has the gentleman any knowledge of when the Committee on Rules might meet to consider the continuation of the Dies committee?

Mr. RAYBURN. That will certainly be not long delayed.

Mr. FISH. Has the gentleman any idea of whether the Rules Committee will meet next week to consider the matter?

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the gentlemen who have been in charge of that investigation are hoping that it might be done during the week, but no decision has been reached.

Mr. FISH. It will probably not be reported back to the House next week?

Mr. RAYBURN. Of course, Mr. Dies and his committee want that issue decided at the earliest date possible. I do not think that he has asked for a hearing yet before the Committee on Rules, but there is strong probability that it may be asked for next week.

Mr. FISH. The Rules Committee has not yet met?

Mr. RAYBURN. The Rules Committee has not met, but applications are coming to the chairman at this time for hearings.

Mr. FISH. There is no disposition on the part of the majority leader to delay consideration of that matter?

Mr. RAYBURN. Not at all. I assure the gentleman that will be taken up for consideration at as early a date as seems feasible.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Last week I asked the majority leader what action would be taken this year by the Congress, or at least the House, or the leaders of the House, relative to trying to keep the Government spending down to a point where the people of this country might expect, reasonably, at some time in the near future to balance the Budget.

Mr. RAYBURN. It has always been our purpose over here to hold the expenditures of the Government to the lowest point consistent with taking care of the needs of the people, and that is our purpose this year. We are hoping, of course, that some of these days we may balance the Budget; and when that time comes, when we start in that direction, we trust that the gentlemen on the other side, including the great economist from the State of Pennsylvania, will not just make speeches about balancing the Budget but will vote that way.

His record has not been very consistent in that fashion in the past.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman cannot put one thing in the RECORD to show that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not been consistent. I ask the majority leader, if we are going to adjourn until Monday, if he should not keep this House in session and try to get some economy into government. Whenever you point the finger at the gentleman from Pennsylvania you are on the wrong track. I will say the majority leader is the man who should come out here now and try to speak for economy. He is the one who should show the people of this country where you are going to get the money. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say that I think I can look through the Congressional Record and find many instances where, during the consideration of appropriation bills, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has spoken for economy and then when an amendment to increase the amount was proposed the gentleman voted for it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RICH. There is only one place where you can show that, and that was on the rural electrification proposition. I ask the gentleman from Texas to put them in the Record now and show the people of this country where the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not been for economy and where he will stand back of you Democrats if you will get out here and work for economy.

Mr. RAYBURN. Just so the gentleman stands back it will be perfectly satisfactory. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and the legislation program of the day I may be permitted to address the House for 20

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of the special orders for today and any business on the Speaker's table I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I make a similar request, that following the other special orders I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is that agreeable to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones], who has a special order at this time?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have only a few minutes myself and I would like to have this matter read, and I would prefer that the gentleman from Indiana follow on account of this, if he does not mind.

Mr. HALLECK. I will yield, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones] is recognized for 10 minutes.

SUGAR LEGISLATION

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on two or three occasions during this session there has been some criticism of the administration of the sugar legislation. The criticism is legitimate and this is the proper forum for that criticism. However, I think it is important in any discussion that both sides of any question be presented. It is one thing to criticize. It is another matter to administer a far-reaching piece of legislation. That is always fraught with difficulties, especially when there is as much involved and as many different areas are involved as in the handling of sugar legislation. For that reason I am going to ask that there be read in my time a statement from the Department, giving their viewpoint of the sugar legislation, its problems, its difficulties, its outlook, and a contrast with the conditions that prevailed before the legislation was enacted. It is only three or four pages long, and I ask that this letter be read in my time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the Clerk will read the letter the gentleman refers to.

There was no objection. The Clerk read the letter as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, Washington, January 24, 1939.

Hon. MARVIN JONES,

House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. JONES: In response to your request of January 19 for certain data with respect to some of the questions raised in a recent congressional discussion about the program under the Sugar recent congressional discussion about the program under the Sugar Act of 1937, we are pleased to submit the following information:

Briefly summarized, criticism of the sugar program in recent congressional discussion relates almost entirely to an assumed inadequacy of income for sugar-beet producers under the sugar program and the fear that the small reduction in the duty on Cuban sugar from 0.90 to 0.75 cent per pound, raw value, now under consideration in connection with the pending trade-agreement revision, may further curtail such income. It may therefore be useful to summarize the elements of protection and benefits for the sugar industry provided by the Congress in the Sugar Act of the sugar industry provided by the Congress in the Sugar Act of 1937. The prior sugar legislation of 1934 was of a similar nature. The four outstanding elements in the sugar program are as follows:

1. Limitation through quotas on the admission of foreign and insular sugars, which limitations have been fully effective and restrictive each year since 1934, and limitations on marketings of the mainland sugarcane and sugar-beet industries, which have been nominal since 1935 because production was generally below the quotas for such areas established in the legislation.

2. Limitation through quotas on the imports of liquid sugars from Cuba and Santo Domingo and outright prohibition or embargo on the importations of such sugars from other foreign countries in excess of 10 short tons.

The effect of these quota limitations has been to maintain a differential in the price of sugar in the United States above the price of unprotected sugars (seaboard basis) and in favor of domestic production of 2.17 cents per pound in 1937 and 1.80 cents in 1938, equal to an ad valorem protection of 168 and 159 percent, respectively, not including the Federal payments to growers.

3. Federal conditional payments to producers of 60 cents per 100 pounds of recoverable sugar, pursuant to title III of the act, which, on the basis of average yields of beets in the United States, equal on the basis of average yields of beets in the United States, equal about $24 per acre. For the 1937 and 1938 crops of sugar beets payments were made under the act on the total production of the growers, without any limitation of acreage or production. For the 1937 crop, $16,966,000 has been paid out to date, covering 46,700 applications for payment, comprising practically all producers of sugar beets, an average of $362 per farm, and for the 1938 record crop of approximately 1,700,000 tons of refined sugar it is estimated that the Government payments will aggregate $20,300,000. These payments are, of course, supplementary to the payments made to growers by the processors.

4. Special payments to producers in the event of abandonment 4. Special payments to producers in the event of abandonment of acreage or deficiency in production under certain conditions as the result of natural causes beyond control of producers, such as freeze, drought, insect pests, etc. Producers are not required to pay premiums in money or in kind for this form of crop insurance. As the result of the above measures and similar legislation in 1934 the acreage and average returns of mainland sugar-beet producers under the administration by this Department have been increased as follows:

increased as follows:

No charles from Wilcom 150".  In the boundaries (on 'Wilcom the'  Place of the contract of the	Acreage	Average income per ton	Farm value
Average, 1909–14. Average, 5 years preceding sugar program (1929–33) Average, 5 years following sugar program (1934–38) <sup>1</sup> 1938 (estimated)	485, 000	$5. 50	$26, 697, 000

1 1938 estimated.

The income per ton of cane for mainland cane growers increased from an average of $3.39 in the 1929-33 period to an aver-creased from an average of $3.39 in the 1929-33 period to an average of $3.98 per ton in the 1934-38 period, while the farm value of the sugarcane crop increased from $10,134,000 to $20,624,000.

The net income of the five major sugar-beet processing companies, representing about 75 percent of the total sugar-beet production of the United States, expressed as a percentage of their net worth averaged over 9 percent for the 5-year period of the sugar program, 1934-38, as compared with a loss of 4.2 percent in 1932 and 1.9 percent in 1933. (These figures are for the fiscal veers anding in the suring of each year.) For the year 1937, pri-1932 and 1.9 percent in 1933. (These figures are for the fiscal years ending in the spring of each year.) For the year 1937, primarily as a result of the invalidation of the sugar processing tax, marily as a result of the invalidation of the sugar processing tax, the net income reached 12.47 percent.

Under the somewhat adverse conditions of decreased general purchasing power of consumers in 1938 and greatly increased sugar-beet and sugarcane production during the years between invalidation of crop adjustment in January 1936 and resumption thereof under the new Sugar Act, a reduction in net income for the fiscal year ended in the spring of 1939 may be anticipated.

Statements have been made in recent congressional discussion which would indicate that the share of the domestic industry in which would indicate that the share of the domestic industry in supplying the United States market has been decreased under the sugar program. The fact is that the domestic share has increased markedly while the proportion of the United States consumption supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically the supplied by the supp sumption supplied by Cuba and other foreign countries has practically been cut in half under the sugar legislation, as compared with the late twentles. In 1938 Cuba contributed about 28.8 percent of the total United States requirements as compered with 43 to 53 percent in the period 1925-30.

The 1937 sugar-beet crop, the first to be marketed under the new law, gave the growers an income per ton equal on the average to parity prices. The increase in the income to growers from the 1927 crop will average close to $10 an exerce over the contribution.

to parity prices. The increase in the income to growers from the 1937 crop will average close to $10 an acre over that of the preceding year. Independent growers of sugarcane will benefit similarly. The margin of the processors has been reduced somewhat but they have benefited from increased volume of tonnage, which has resulted in part from the assurance of a more equitable division of total returns. It is significant that the first sugar-beet plantings after the enactment of the Sugar Act have been large enough for the first time since 1934 to justify the expectation that the industry will be able to fill the sugar-marketing quota established for the sugar-beet area.

The income of sugar-beet and sugarcane growers was increased

The income of sugar-beet and sugarcane growers was increased and the total income of the sugar industry was maintained, despite a decline in the general purchasing power of consumers. More-over, this was accomplished without the evils of a rigid price struc-It is particularly significant that consumer requirements for sugar were adequately met at varying prices as industrial recession and recovery caused variations in consumer incomes.

It will be noted from the foregoing that the references in the congressional discussion to the "record low prices for sugar" have been misleading, since the Federal payments of 60 cents per hundred pounds of sugar paid directly to the producers under the sugar program were not taken into consideration.

The second marketing year under the Sugar Act (which is the current crop) began in September 1938 and will terminate in September 1939. It is too early to forecast the outcome for sugar-beet producers, since only a portion of the sugar from that crop has been marketed, and under their participating contracts with processors growers ordinarily receive about half of the net sales value of the sugar processed from the cane or beets sold.

It is to be noted that, because the sugar-processing season is a short one, there are considerable stocks of sugar throughout the year in the hands of processors, refiners, importers, speculators, and dealers. The Department is subject, therefore, to continuous pressure, in direct and indirect form, to utilize whatever power these interested parties believe it to possess to enhance the inventory value of such stocks. As of January 1, the total value of the visible supply of sugar alone is about $170,000,000, and a quarter of a cent increase would mean $10,000,000 additional to the owners of such sugars. The Congress, however, embodied in the Sugar Act certain standards limiting the discretion of the Secretary in fixing consumers' requirements.

the policy of the Department to administer the provisions of the act in accordance with such standards and for the benefit of domestic producers and with protection to the conflicting interests of other groups affected by the act.

Sincerely yours,

H. A. WALLACE, Secretary.

EXTENSIONS IN THE RECORD

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot submit that request without the consent of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bolles]. Is it agreeable to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. BOLLES. It is, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, for some days there has been a controversy in the House which has operated to keep certain articles out of the Appendix of the RECORD. Of course, whether or not that has been for or against the general public good, I would not undertake to say. The controversy was precipitated last Friday when I offered for the Appendix of the Record an article written by our colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barton]. At the time it was suggested to me by a Member on the floor, prior to the subsequent objection, that the article was a long article. I replied that I thought it would take about two pages of the RECORD. Subsequently there was objection.

I offered that article for the RECORD in good faith. I have been in Congress 4 years, and during all of that time I have observed that articles and statements, radio speeches, and other matters, written and given by Members of the House themselves, their own words, have not been objected to for the RECORD.

The ostensible reason for the objection was the length of the article. Then, too, somewhere along the line there has been a suggestion that there is a distinction between an article written for a periodical and a speech made over the radio. As far as I am concerned this is a distinction without a difference, because on many occasions I have seen radio speeches delivered by Members of the House subsequently reprinted in newspapers and periodicals. Such speeches have been inserted in the RECORD without objection. The medium through which the statement is first made is of no consequence.

So we get down to the matter of the length of this article. It was suggested yesterday by a Member on two different occasions in two different places that this was an eight-page article. Just that we may keep the record straight, the article in the periodical referred to occupies parts of four pages. In order, however, that there may be no question in the minds of the Members as to the actual length of the article and the space it would take in the RECORD, I submitted it to the assistant superintendent of planning at the Government Printing Office for information as to how much space it would take in the RECORD. I was informed that it would take not to exceed two and one-fourth pages. I do not know whence comes this talk about eight pages, or the extreme length of the article, because I see in the RECORD this morning a reprint of a speech delivered on the floor of the House 2 years ago, a speech heretofore contained in the RECORD, reprinted this morning to a length of five pages.

I said that I offered this article in good faith. Since offering it I have inquired of the Committee on Printing as to the length of articles that may be inserted without an estimate of the cost being obtained and found that it was two and one-half pages. This article, Mr. Speaker, will not take two and one-half pages.

Mr. Speaker, this article in all of its paragraphs and parts may not be the expression of views with which Members agree. Many things have been put in the RECORD with which I did not agree. There are some things in this article with which I do not altogether agree.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. The fact of the matter is that this is a well-written, well-thought-out, well-considered article by a Member of this House. It deals with current social, political, and economic questions. It deals with problems that are before the House and the country. If there ever has been anything produced by a Member of the House that justified its insertion in the RECORD, this is such an article.

In all fairness, and in order that we may not engage in further controversy that can do nothing but close the pages of the Record to some Members, I ask again, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the article to which I have referred written by our colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I see that the gentleman from California [Mr. Buck] is not on the floor. He is detained in committee, I understand. I trust the gentleman from Indiana will renew his request when the gentleman from California is on the floor.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, the other day I spoke with the gentleman from California [Mr. Buck] and based on that conversation, I may say to the House that I am confident if he were here he would not object to the offer of this article.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman withhold his request until I can communicate with the gentleman by telephone? Mr. HALLECK. I shall be glad to.

Mr. RAYBURN. I personally have no objection to the article, but I know the gentleman from California [Mr. Buck! has objected twice.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for the time being.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks just now made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts has objected-

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request. The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bolles] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I recognize fully the fact that this House, closely representing the people of the Nation, has no prerogative in determining who shall fill major or minor offices of the Government-no power of confirmation. But we are deeply, vitally interested in what manner of men are named to those offices. We cannot all be carried away by the soporific sophistications of the man at the other end of the Avenue or the tintinnabulations of easy-flowing sonorous sentences. We must face facts.

A man has been named to the Interstate Commerce Commission who is committed not only to public ownership of transportation lines, but to revolutionary changes in the Government which would put us on a plane with a Marxian Socialist government, did he have his way. That man is honest in his beliefs. That is the pitiable part of it, and into this great Commission Thomas R. Amlie will carry those ideas frequently expressed on the floor of this House, in his honest zeal for the destruction of the purpose for which the very agency of government on which, if confirmed, he will serve and advocate the erection of something new, hostile, and different. The I. C. C. believes in privately owned lines. Mr. Amlie does not believe in privately owned lines.

I cannot remain silent at such a time. My district in Wisconsin, which was Mr. Amlie's district, and which overwhelmingly repudiated the political philosophy of Mr. Amlie, will expect me to make protest; my people will expect it; my State will expect it. The Nation will eventually expect it-demand it.

This is not a question of personal integrity. It is a question of placing a man in one of the great independent agencies of the Government to administer its affairs and sit in judgment on technical questions of transportation ,with opinions, expressed in advance, hostile to the established order of our Government. It is a paradoxical situation which we seldom meet-that a man so mentally out of harmony with a job could be given cheering assistance from the appointing power.

From the lips of Mr. Amlie come his own condemnation. He advocates:

First. A change in government.

Second. Confiscation of wealth by taxation.

Third. Government ownership of all industry, business, and every operation, with practical confiscation of all productive private property.

Fourth. Setting up of a great agency which is to practically and actually succeed the present Government insofar as its economic policy is concerned. The only thing left unmentioned is the police powers of the United States Government.

And this man has been named as a member of a great Commission, an independent unit of government in this Nation. I say to you, and every patriotic citizen must agree, that a man with that political philosophy has no place in our coordinated Government under the Constitution and the flag. That philosophy belongs overseas where Karl Marx and his manifesto are the fundamental law.

I call attention of the House to a speech made by Thomas R. Amlie, of the First Congressional District of Wisconsin, in the Seventy-fourth Congress, recorded on page 10037 and subsequent pages of the RECORD, as an index to the thought, principles, and purposes of the man nominated on Monday, January 23, for high office in the Interstate Commerce Commission.

As a man thinketh so is he.

We know that the Interstate Commerce Commission is one of the Government's most powerful in our bureaucracy. The destiny of millions of vested capital are in the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The destiny of nearly a million employees and their families are wrapped up in this Commission. The life or death of a transportation system is bound up in this Commission. It calls for skillful experience and some technical knowledge beyond the restricted confines of a small-town lawyer's office.

To say that this appointment came as a shock to thousands of friends of President Roosevelt in Wisconsin is to speak in I do not speak lightly when I say this. The Democratic State Committee of Wisconsin has already protested. Mr. Amlie has the right of his own opinions, but when they run not only counter to but in fixed opposition to the Constitution and public policy, especially in relation to the very task given him by the President, a position and responsibility so foreign to all his declared commitments to completed public ownership and the perfected Marxian production for use to be applied to America, we cannot help but register a shock.

Was there no Democrat of outstanding ability for this office? Was there no Republican like Balthasar Meyer in the State or Nation, or no Progressive?

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLLES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman. I desire to make a correction, however. A Democrat cannot be appointed to this office.

Mr. BOLLES. The Commission is already overmanned by Democrats.

Mr. RAYBURN. Not overmanned; no.

Mr. BOLLES. Are there not seven Democrats on that Commission now?

Mr. RAYBURN. No; only six, and that is all there can be from any one party.

Mr. BOLLES. I know that. The statute so provides.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. BOLLES. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. To keep the record straight, may I say the law has been violated already. There are now seven Democrats. Mr. Eastman was appointed by President Hoover, according to the newspapers, on December 18, 1929, as a Democrat; so there are now seven Democrats. Mr. Amlie is a Democrat. He supported President Roosevelt in his two Presidential campaigns.

Mr. RAYBURN. There were a great many people who were not Democrats did that. Mr. Eastman has never been classed as a Democrat, and he does not class himself as a Democrat. He classes himself as an independent.

Mr. BOLLES. In Wisconsin Mr. Amlie is not even recognized as a Progressive of standing. He belongs to the extreme left wing. His own party defeated him in the primary in which he ran for United States Senator.

I want to read here in this RECORD the speech to which I referred in my opening sentences:

If, however-

Said Mr. Amlie-

we are to consider the nature of an adequate constitutional amendment, it seems to me that it would be well to consider what further power, if any, ought to be incorporated in an amend-ment designed to grant to the United States Congress powers sufficiently broad to permit an adequate consideration of economic conditions by the representatives of the people. I should like to suggest, therefore, for your consideration an amendment substantially as follows:

HUMAN-RIGHTS AMENDMENT

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the "Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein). That in order to permit Congress, as the elected representatives of the people of the United States, to take action necessary to bring to the people of the Nation the abundance which full-capacity use of its natural resources, its machinery of production, and the skill of its people make possible, the following amendment to the Constitution, to be designated as the human-rights amendment, be, and is hereby, proposed to the States to become a valid part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in the several States as provided in the Constitution: stitution:

" 'ARTICLE -

"'SECTION 1. Congress shall have the power to enact laws providing for the ownership, operation, and management, through instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, of business, manufacturing, commerce, industry, and banking, and shall have the power to purchase, or condemn by eminent domain, such enterprises have the power to purchase, or condemn by eminent domain, such enterprises.

"SEC. 2. Congress shall have the power to regulate, limit, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age; to regulate hours and conditions of labor and to establish minimum wages in any employment; to regulate production, industry, trade, and commerce; to provide for the support of children, mothers, aged, sick, and other persons not gainfully employed in the form of periodic grants, pensions, benefits, compensation, and indemnities from the Public Treasury or through contributions; and to provide for the economic and social welfare of the people of the United States. States.

"'SEC. 3. Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes on gains, profits, and income derived from securities issued either before or after the ratification of this amendment under the authority of the United States, the authority of any of the several States, and the authority of any subsidiary government of any State, including municipalities, as well as the right to make direct levies on capital. levies on capital.

"'SEC. 4. Nothing contained in the fifth or the fourteenth amendments to this Constitution relative to the taking of property without due process of law shall be construed to impose any limitation on the legislative power of Congress and the several States with respect to any of the subjects referred to in this article."

Mr. Amlie explains that-

This would give to the Federal Government the power to set up agencies for the production and distribution of goods and services to the citizens of the United States.

Substitute "Stalin" for "Federal Government" and put the statement in the past tense and we have the Soviet Republics in operation

That was in the Seventy-fourth Congress. I have not here time to carry my indictment into further counts. But in support of his position Mr. Amlie quotes a number of New Deal agencies which he says has in part carried out these schemes of control. Here is the fantastic plan of taxation in order to carry out the idea which is uppermost in Mr. Amlie's mind, sharing the wealth. But as a simple method he proposes that Congress spend billions on divers and sundry things, and from the RECORD I quote as to payment:

POWER TO INFLATE

In order to pay for this spending Congress may impose taxes of a kind that would absorb all income above a certain point. Congress might also levy excise taxes that would virtually take from gress might also levy excise taxes that would virtually take from certain sections of the people most of their present income, or if this should fail, there is then no limit on the extent to which this Government might borrow, and if people should finally become unwilling to buy Government securities, then the Government could simply take over the Federal Reserve System, causing the Treasury to issue securities which the Federal Reserve System would buy at par. In other words, the Congress and President have the power to embark on a program of pure inflation if they should ever desire to do so. If they so desire they could issue flat money to any extent that they might choose.

In still further confirmation of the Amlie position, let me further quote from the RECORD in the Seventy-fifth Congress, when Mr. Amlie was further expounding his views:

Mr. Hoffman. The gentleman thinks we can continue to spend beyond our income for 20 years without endangering our financial structure?

Mr. Amlie. Yes; I think so.
Mr. Hoffman. And the gentleman believes that one who conscientiously inquires where the money is coming from is a calamity howler?

Mr. Amlie. Yes; I would class him as such, particularly when he states squarely that the country is going to run into bankruptcy, internal disorder, and every other calamity unless we immediately balance the Budget. I feel, if we come to a national calamity, the shortest way will be not by spending but by following the gentleman's advice to immediately balance the Federal Budget.

Mr. Michener. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. Amlie. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. Mr. Michener. I have great respect for the gentleman's view and stating that the gentleman is a disciple of that philosophy which calls for doing away with the profit system in this country, that the gentleman believes in production for use and not for profit, and that if he had his way he would change the economic system and that if he had his way he would change the economic system of this Nation?

Mr. Amlie. I believe we are moving to a point where the economic system will be changed. For 20 years I have expressed my views on this and tried to get the American people to agree with me. I am not speaking now, however, from the standpoint of advocating a change from an economic system driven by the profit motive to one driven by a production-for-use motive. I am merely stating what I conceive to be the course of wisdom here and now operating within the framework of the present economic system.

Mr. MICHENER. Knowing the gentleman as I do, and the sincerity of his belief in his doctrine, I know the gentleman would naturally encourage and do anything which would eventually terminate in the type of government he wants to see in this country.

Mr. Amlie. No; that is not fair.

Mr. Amlie. No; that is not fair.
Mr. Michener. Therefore, the gentleman favors the present system because he believes it leads directly to a result which will bring about this new kind of a government he wants.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Amlie was a Member of the House, from the district which I now have the honor to represent, for 6 years. The gentleman came from North Dakota, where he was an able speaker and proselyter for the Non-Partisan League and the Townley system, now long laid away in the catacombs of ancient political history. The people got tired of horse-liniment theories. They wanted something else.

It reminds me of a delegation that visited a certain colored preacher and asked him to resign. A member of the delegation said, "If you ask us why, we want to tell you. You argufies, you sputifies, you discourses, all O. K., but what this here congregation wants to know is whereas and wherein." We began over in Wisconsin to find out "whereas" and "wherein" and from that comes the Republican delegation from that State.

The people of my district have risen in arms, they have held mass meetings, and have agreed to come down to Washington to protest to the Senate and to the President himself the appointment of a man who does not believe in our system of government, who does not believe in the profit system, who does not believe that the railroads ought to be operated privately. The one job to which he would be appointed is to administer the privately owned railroads, and the people want somebody on that Commission who realizes fully the responsibilities that they have rather than to use their position in order to proselyte for some new and strange doctrine in the United States, transplanted here from the mind and brain of Karl Marx.

MEETINGS OF COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Committee on Ways and Means, I ask unanimous consent that that committee may have permission to sit during the sessions of the House during the session of the Seventy-sixth

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Cooper]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article written by our colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barton] entitled "After Roosevelt, What?"

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California [Mr. Buck] may have permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I now have permission to address the House today for 10 minutes. I ask unanimous consent that this time may be extended to 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today at the conclusion of such other special orders as may have been heretofore entered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. Voornis]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the resignation of former Attorney General Homer Cummings, and to include therein a speech made by Max Spelke.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. SHANLEY]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers] is recognized for 10 minutes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on January 19, in an extension of remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Ludlow], that very distinguished gentleman asked, "What is the matter with New England?"

Mr. Speaker, I have the very highest regard for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Luplow] and I have always been of the opinion that he means to be fair. However, in the article mentioned above if the gentleman meant to be fair his ideas and facts are really very confused. He speaks in the first place of the matter of timber salvage and the payments to be made to the timbermen for the purchase of their logs as a purely local matter. The gentleman entirely overlooks the fact, however, that the timber market of the entire country would be seriously affected and also the consumers of the entire country would be affected if this were not done.

I very much resent, Mr. Speaker, the implication in the gentleman's remarks that the New England timber people have not shown the courage, the fortitude, and the independence they have shown during every calamity in New England, and the fortitude, the independence, and the resourcefulness the people of New England showed at the very beginning of our country's history.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield? Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. If I had known when I reverted to my old newspaper habit of writing an article for publication that I would have brought down upon my head the castigation of my very esteemed friend the gentlewoman from Massachusetts, I doubt very much that I would have written the article. My whole purpose in writing it was to point out that in my opinion the country had gone crazy on spending, and that at last New England has gone crazy with the rest of the country.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I assure the gentleman that New England has not gone crazy, and is very much standing on her feet and using her head in this matter because it is so vital to the entire country as well as to

New England.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentlewoman yield further?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman to wait until I have completed my statement? I am very eager to place the facts in the Record.

In justice to the gentleman from Indiana I may say that in reading over the hearings again I realize that perhaps we did not stress enough the damage to the timber market of the entire country, so perhaps the gentleman did not get that picture.

I have a very high regard for the gentleman from Indiana, I recall that years ago as a member of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation and as chairman of its subcommittee on hospitals I believed the gentleman had such a good cause in asking for a hospital at Indianapolis that I did everything in my power to help him.

Mr. LUDLOW. I thank the gentlewoman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I thought providing such a hospital would be of benefit to the veterans in that section of the country, and it affected the entire country as well. I know the gentleman means to be fair. I have stated before that I have always had that belief. I have a very high regard for the gentleman. However, I cannot let this matter pass without comment.

No loans are being made by the Northeastern Timber Salvage Administration to the timber owners in New England. Loans are made by the Disaster Loan Corporation to the Salvage Administration for the purpose of carrying on the salvage work. The purchase agreement made with timber owners provides for advance payment, at one time 80 percent of the log value and now 90 percent. Any further payments will be made pro rata at the end of the timber operation if there is a surplus over all costs of administration and marketing.

The gentleman unjustly did not bring out in his article the fact that this is a business arrangement. It is in no sense a grant. The logs are to be purchased and paid for, value received. There will be no loss to the Federal Government through this procedure. Interest will be paid by the Timber Salvage Corporation to the Disaster Loan Corporation, so there will be no loss to the Disaster Loan Corporation in any way.

The Salvage Administration's operation is in no sense a relief measure. It is true it is an attempt to recover for the New England farmer some of the great wealth destroyed by the hurricane of September, but fundamentally it is a business operation that is being carried on. Logs are not being bought indiscriminately; for both the hardwoods and the softwoods there have been established three grades, with exact specifications. These grades cover only the quality logs from which high-grade lumber can be manufactured. The logs are accepted at designated delivery points, leaving to the owner or his contractor the logging and hauling. The price schedules that have been set for the logs were arrived at by comprehensive studies made by Government experts and represent approximately the average price paid for logs in the commercial market over a period of 3 years previous to the hurricane. If the farmer was paid the full schedule price for his logs it would not give him the stumpage value he received before the hurricane, because the cost of logging the fallen timber lying in a tangled mass is estimated to be from $2 to $3 a thousand board feet more than logging standing timber.

It is estimated that there is about 4,000,000,000 feet of fallen timber in the hurricane area. Of this approximately 1,600,000,000 feet is salvageable. This represents about 5 years' supply for the sawmills of New England. Before the Salvage Administration began buying logs, sawmill operators were offering timber owners from 25 to 75 cents a thousand board feet as stumpage prices for the fallen logs. Logs bought at such a price could be manufactured into lumber, which, if thrown on the market in quantities, would have broken the lumber market in New England. The effect would have extended far beyond the New England market. After fulfilling the requirements of the New England market at disaster prices the markets of New York and the Middle Atlantic States could have had cut-rate lumber dumped into them, producing disturbing effects on the markets of the entire Atlantic seaboard.

The Members of the House must realize perfectly what the dumping of all this lumber on the market would mean. The timber people would have to sell their logs at a tremendous loss today, and this would disrupt the timber market. Then, if the procedure we have suggested were not followed, later the price of lumber would go so high the cost of building, of making boxes, and so forth, would be prohibitive. You can imagine the effect that would have all over the country.

This is a great national problem, not just our own local New England problem. I am very sorry if we of New England have not made this situation clear to the Members before this, but possibly this is because we were so impressed by the enormity of the disaster and know it so well we believed other people must know about it also. This was the worst hurricane and the most serious disaster of its type that has ever taken place in the world, according to the experts, but perhaps we did not make that fact entirely clear to all the Members. It is obvious the gentleman from Indiana also did not realize the seriousness of the problem.

It must be remembered that 45 percent of New England's consumption is home produced and that 55 percent comes from other regions. Alabama, Florida, and Georgia supply 4.7 percent; Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, and Texas, 4 percent; while from Oregon and Washington come 22 percent. These figures are for the year 1936 and are the last compilation of lumber consumption. All of these regions would have felt the effect of any break in lumber prices on the northeastern coast. It is the purpose of the Salvage Administration to prevent any such consequences. It is storing softwood logs in ponds, or where that is impossible, processing the logs immediately into graded lumber and storing it. Hardwood logs are being processed as rapidly as possible and the lumber stored. The logs and the lumber will be fed into the market at a rate which will prevent any disturbance of prices.

Let me say again to the gentleman from Indiana and to the Members of the House that the only wood to be purchased by the Timber Salvage Corporation through Surplus Commodities Corporation is marketable wood, wood that can be sold in the markets, wood that can be merchandised. From the gentleman's article one might infer that people are to be paid for any kind of wood they have, whether or not it is saleable in the ordinary and usual sense of the word.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 2 additional minutes, if the gentleman from Connecticut, who has been granted permission to address the House at this time, has no objection.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know the gentleman from Connecticut is also interested in this problem.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Romjue). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. In the opinion of conservative mill and lumber operators in New England there is only a normal business risk in the operation. With the acceleration of construction in the New England area lumber prices have stiffened with every likelihood that within the next few years there will be some increase in prices.

As administrative costs are being kept to a minimum for effective handling of the operation even if there should be no increase in lumber prices the operation should be self-liquidating at the very least.

The timber-salvage operation is in no sense a relief measure. Logs are not being bought indiscriminately. They are mostly hardwoods and softwoods, of three grades, with exact specifications.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman from Massachusetts yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. I know the gentlewoman from Massachusetts wants to be entirely fair.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I certainly do.

Mr. LUDLOW. And I am sure she knows my high regard, and, indeed, my affection and esteem for her.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. And I have the same feeling toward the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LUDLOW. And I appreciate what she did for me in the instance to which she formerly referred.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I was delighted to do so; it was only a matter of justice.

Mr. LUDLOW. And I do not want to be put in the attitude of any seeming criticism of the delegation in Congress from New England, because I did not have any such feeling.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. May I interrupt there to say that I felt the gentleman meant to pay a tribute, perhaps, in getting away with something. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUDLOW. And I may say, as of course, we all know, there is no abler delegation in this Congress from any section than the delegation from New England, and I sat in at all of that meeting and I believe I never heard a case more ably presented; but what have we here? A new and a strange philosophy, that any time an act of God injures anybody we are to step into the United States Treasury and make him whole. [Applause.]

I am sorry that the gentlewoman from Massachusetts thought she detected between the lines of my article an implication that I did not appreciate the tragic position in which the farmers of New England are placed as a result of the hurricane. I was born and raised on a farm at a time when many sections of our State had barely emerged from the wilderness and the good people from whom I sprang had more than their share of the hardships, the tragedies, and the heart-rending disappointments of farm life. God never made any better people than my pioneer father and mother, and I would be untrue to their memory if I did not have the broadest and sincerest sympathy for those who seek to wrest a living from the soil. When the gentlewoman from Massachusetts a few moments ago referred to the courage and fortitude of the New England farmers the golden strands of memory led me back to the little country graveyard in Indiana where my father and mother sleep. They, too, were courageous. They, too, were brave; and anyone who thinks I do not sympathize with the New England farmers does not know me. Of course, I sympathize with them with all my heart and with all my understanding.

But I am concerned-more concerned than I can express-over the trend of things in this country. We are piling up a national debt that is simply staggering to the imagination. We have turned our back on local initiative and local responsibility and we now look to a centralized Government at Washington to do everything and to the Federal Treasury to pay all the bills. It is a most unwholesome trend of government and, painful as the process may be, it would be better for everybody, including the farmers of New England, if we would redirect our footsteps to safer ground. We can no more repeal the laws of economics than we can repeal the laws of nature, and one of the laws of economics is that we cannot go on forever with a deficit of $4,000,000,000 a year. If we make the farmers of one section of our country whole on their blown-down logs every citizen who suffers from a calamity for which he is not responsible would have an equal right to make a similar claim on the United States Treasury. Into what depths of involvement would such a doctrine lead us?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But in this case it is simply a purchasing matter and the Federal Government will receive back every penny. It is not a charity or a gift or a grant to New England in any way.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Thorkelson] may have 30 minutes to address the House at the conclusion of the legislative business and other special orders on Monday of next week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore *(Mr. Romjue). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a letter addressed by myself to Colonel Fechner, the head of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by including therein remarks of Senator Townsend of Delaware regarding the silver question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made a short time ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 20 minutes.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, in this House I have the honor to represent the First Congressional District of the State of Connecticut. Within that district lies the city of Hartford, the capital city of Connecticut. The district runs from the Massachusetts-Connecticut line south to a point 7 miles below Hartford, and spreads east and west from the Connecticut River. The people of that district are vitally interested in the problem of flood control and flood prevention. This afternoon I am going to talk about flood control in an effort to present to you the point of view of a citizen residing in the flood-affected area.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us look at this whole proposition for what it is. Twice, in 1936 and again in 1938, flood waters swept buildings away; the lives of men, women, and children were menaced; factories were flooded; warehouses became swirling pools of turbulent waters; property was detroyed. This project, far from being partisan in itself is nonpartisan—if there has ever been such a thing as a non-partisan issue before Congress. We are talking now, if you please, in the terms of human lives—the lives of men, women, and children. We are talking now, if you please, in the terms of factories which give employment. We are talking now in terms of property owned by citizens, property which represents their all—the accumulation of a lifetime of effort.

Now, let us see what happens. In other parts of this country the Government has been so eager to establish flood control and, properly so, that it has even used the excuse of navigability. And yet, when this project comes up we find objections being voiced. Somebody objects to putting on paper what is conceded to be a verbal agreement as between the Federal and State officials.

What objection can there be to a contract, setting forth in plain words, what the terms and conditions are to be? Is it not true that the only possible safeguard against misunderstanding and against misconstruction and distortions of verbal agreements is a written contract? Some object to the paragraph in the proposed contract which says:

In order to carry out the provisions of the foregoing acts as to the particular project herein mentioned, it is agreed between the State of Vermont and the Chief of Engineers without prejudice to the rights of the State of Vermont with respect to any other proceedings under the cited act of Congress.

And so forth. Now, since the administration objects to that clause, would it not be a simple fairness for the administration to say what other right of the State of Vermont it intends or contemplates violating. After all, this is a union of States. It is not a new form of government that sets up a rivalry between the Federal Government and the State government as to the execution of the rights of a State. The Federal Government ought to be the very first to want to protect any State in its rights. It is not enough for officials of the Government to say they do not know what this paragraph means. One might observe that the administration has enough legal talent on its pay rolls to advise these gentlemen on this point.

Again I say, let us look at this proposition for exactly what it is worth. What a strange contradiction we have here. How all the lofty sentiment about caring for the unfortunate; feeding the ill-fed; clothing the ill-clothed; sheltering the ill-housed vanishes when this proposition comes upof saving the lives of men, women, and children; of saving the factories which offer them the hope of employment and wages; of protecting the property which represents their life savings. Why is it that all the noble sentiment of the administration seems to vanish and all the deep concern for the lives and welfare and jobs of the people become a secondary consideration in this case?

Is it, Mr. Speaker, is it because the administration wants to shove down the throats of these people a power project to constitute what my respected friend from Mississippi designated as a yardstick? Is it the fact that this administration is willing to qualify its concern for the lives and safety and health, the jobs and property of these men, women, and children of this particular section of the United States by its desire to establish another little T. V. A.? What other conclusion can we reach than this?

It may interest this House to know that Governor Baldwin, of Connecticut, told me, within the last few days, that four of the private power dams which have been washed away are not going to be replaced by the power companies because there is now a surplus of dams in that section. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the administration wants to continue its insistence upon seven Federal power projects, referred to in the last Congress as the "seven little T. V. A.'s," let the administration come fairly before Congress and ask for what it wants and let that question be decided upon its merits; but I plead with this House, and I plead with the President, not to make the lives and safety and jobs and property of the people the price of establishment of a little T. V. A.

Undoubtedly, within a few days, I will be accused of being a tool of a so-called Power Trust; but let me say to the Members of this House, I do not own nor have I ever owned a single share of stock in any power company. I have no friends in the power business unless it be a few pick-swinging, pole-climbing employees. My only interest in this matter is to do whatever I can to see that the residents of my district receive some protection from future floods.

It is not impossible that you who have dealt with this problem over a period of years should allow your personal animosities to affect your judgment. You will all agree with me that to a new Member of Congress many of the things that take place here are strange. It certainly was surprising to me last week to hear a Member from Mississippi address the House during a discussion of an appropriation bill providing money to clean up the damage caused by the recent hurricane, spend all of his time tossing a few darts at the Governor of Vermont and referring to other things that had no connection with hurricane damage.

Why is there so much interest in trying to save money for residents of my district? If there is one characteristic of the people of New England that has stood out over the years, it is their willingness and ability to save an honest dollar. These various angles were discussed during the last campaign; they will not be news to the people of my district. My precedessor came back to Connecticut last summer claiming credit for defeating the New England flood-control compact. He raised the Power Trust cry. He broadcast on the subject Lobby Over Congress, and when the campaign was over a 36,000 Democratic plurality of the 2 years previous had been turned into a 4,000 Republican plurality, or a turn-over of almost 20 percent of the votes cast.

I am not here to defend any public utility—that there have been abuses in that field we all know. That dishonest men have engaged in the power business we all know. There are dishonest men in other industries, and recent history proves that dishonest men have even engaged in politics.

For one, I am rather proud of the Hartford Electric Light Co. It treats its employees well; it has reduced its rates voluntarily as consumption increased; there are hundreds of small stockholders who have invested their savings in the stock of that company who now look to its dividends for a livelihood.

I am convinced that the people of my district do not want to see public ownership. We do not want to see the Government compete with private industry. We cherish our freedom and liberty.

Now, just a brief review of flood-control history in Connecticut. Following the 1936 flood the citizens of my district demanded protection from future floods. They were willing to pay for that protection. Congress enacted legislation providing that where reservoirs had to be built in one State for the protection of citizens, in other States they could enter into a compact and under certain conditions submit the compact to Congress for approval. That method was adopted in New England. A nonpartisan commission was appointed to draw up the compact. They did their work well. The compact was approved by the legislatures concerned, signed by the Governors of the New England States, some of whom were Republicans, some Democrats. I do not know all the members of the commission that drew up that compact, but I know the Connecticut members. They were outstanding men, honest and able. They had just one thought in mind, and that was flood control. That compact finally came down here. Congress refused to approve it because it contained what was alleged to be a "power joker."

I am not a lawyer, but I can read English, and as a rule can understand what I read. I have never been able to find the alleged "power joker." That compact stated in substance that certain land was to be leased to a flood-control commission for the purpose of providing flood control, and to make it emphatic it further stated "and for flood control only." A lot has been said about the fact that the lease was to run for 999 years. I am told that originally the term of 99 years was mentioned, until it was pointed out by the Democratic Attorney General of Connecticut, Mr. Daly, that 99 years was a short time in the life of a Nation, therefore the longer term was inserted. In another place the compact stated: "Any power inherent in these reservoirs is hereby reserved to the several States," which to me means only one thing—you cannot reserve something to a State unless it be something that State already possessed. That being true, the question of future power development was left right where it was before the compact was written.

It is interesting to recall that in the campaign of 1936 President Roosevelt spoke in Bushnell Park, Hartford. While speaking to a vast audience he complimented the representatives of the New England States for the way they had gone ahead with the compact idea as suggested by Congress. He further said, in substance, that you can spend all the money you want building dikes in Hartford, but you will not have solved the problem of flood control until you enter into a compact with your neighboring States to the north. Why and when did the President change his mind? Now, we come to 1939, and the residents of Hartford County have no more protection than they had in 1936.

Dikes are being built on both sides of the Connecticut River at Hartford and East Hartford. These dikes will create a natural narrows which will, according to Army engineers, increase the crest of a flood north of that point; but we were told that the three reservoirs for which money has been allocated would more than offset that rise of the river. However, if these reservoirs should not be built, because of the present controversy, we are worse off than ever before.

If the 1938 amendment is not clear, why was it not submitted to a proper tribunal? It has been reported within the past week that the President himself stated that he is not certain that the Federal Government has the right to take land without the States' consent. At the same time, the President stated further that he could recall no occasion when the Government had taken land from a State without its approval. We must bear in mind that land taken for post offices, lighthouses, public parks, and such uses have always met with State approval. Why not evict the "Ethiopian gentleman" from this wood pile? Mr. Rankin has stated in the Record:

If you will let us alone, we will develop the water power of New England.

I should like to say to Mr. Rankin that we are not interested at this time in developing water power for electricity—what we want is flood prevention and flood control. Let us forget politics. Let no one take an arbitrary stand and say, "You will get flood control on my terms or you won't get it at all." Flood protection can be provided within the Constitution without taking from any State, rights the State have always had and without injecting the power issue. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Dondero] is recognized for 10 minutes.

DUTY ON BINDER TWINE

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I introduced in the House today a bill to place binder twine manufactured in foreign countries on the dutiable list and fix the amount of the tariff or duty at 2 cents a pound. I do this knowing full well that this item has been on the free list since 1894. The manufacture of binder twine by private producers of this country has decreased more than 50 percent since 1925; and if the present trend continues, it will be but a very short time when there will be no more binder twine manufactured in the United States and this industry will have gone the way of some other industries—vanished entirely from this country.

I realize this subject is of vital interest to every Member of this House who comes from a grain-producing State. It is also of vital interest to every Member of this House where binder twine is manufactured in this country. It is also of vital interest to the Members of this House who come from the eight States of the Union where binder twine is manufactured in their penal institutions.

My State of Michigan happens to be one of the eight States in the Union where binder twine is manufactured. The subject has been called to my attention by the department of correction of Michigan. With an investment of nearly $1,000,000 in the binder-twine plant of our penal institution—and if am not as much concerned about what is produced by convict labor as I am concerned about what is produced or manufactured by the free labor of our country—this department shows that within the last few years the number of men employed has decreased from 259 to 143, with the prospect, as the department has said in its letter to me, that within a very short time Michigan will lose its entire investment in this plant at Jackson, Mich. This is situated in the district of my distinguished colleague Mr. MICHENER. If the present policy is continued, it may be compelled to close its doors and the investment will be lost to the people of my State.

The record shows that in 1925 binder twine was produced in this country to the extent of 290,000,000 pounds—and I simply use the round numbers for the sake of brevity—while in 1935, 10 years later, the amount produced in this country was only 158,000,000 pounds, or, as I have said, a decrease of nearly 50 percent.

The amount produced by convict labor in all penal institutions was 56,000,000 pounds in 1925 and in 1935, 10 years later, 48,000,000 pounds, or a reduction of practically oneseventh of the amount, while in private industry it has been reduced from 234,000,000 pounds in 1925 to 109,000,000 pounds in 1935, or about 50 percent. In the same period we find that the amount of imports of binder twine from foreign countries has increased from 11,000,000 pounds in 1925 to 56,000,000 pounds in 1935. In other words, from 4.5 percent of what was consumed in this country in 1925 to 27 percent in 1935, or an increase of 85 percent in the amount of importations. The most of it comes from Mexico. I have some figures here which I shall ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD in the extension of my remarks. The amount produced in 1925 by private industry for domestic consumption was 72.7 percent of all of the amount used in this country. That has been reduced to 49.4 percent in 1935, while the amount of imports, as I have shown, have increased from 4.5 to 27.1 percent. Within the last 2 or 3 years I recall distinctly that what I am attempting to do by this bill we did in the case of sugar. On the floor of this House a very heated debate arose over the question of permitting Cuba to ship into this country more refined sugar than she had shipped before. It was argued if that was done the American refineries on the Atlantic seaboard would close their doors and men employed in that industry, many thousands of them. would be thrown out of work and compelled to seek employment elsewhere. Members who were here then will remember that we defeated that proposal. There may arise in the minds of Members from the grain-producing States the question whether this will increase the cost of binder twine to the farmer. My answer to that question is that if the trend in this country continues until all manufacture of binder twine ceases in the United States the farmers of this country will be at the mercy of foreign manufacturers and be compelled to pay whatever price is fixed by them. hope and my belief is that if we can restore or save for this Nation the manufacture of that one product, at least to the extent of our own domestic consumption, we can raise the volume to a point where the amount of the duty on foreign manufactured binder twine will be absorbed and the price of binder twine will not be increased to the American farmer. The price will be reduced by the increase of the amount manufactured.

I call attention to the fact that this bill in no way prevents the importation of raw materials for the manufacture of that article in this country. It simply applies to the manufactured product in other countries. It may be a surprise to many to know that you can buy Mexican binder twine, and I mean by that binder twine manufactured in Mexico by Mexican labor, for less than you can buy the raw material in the United States. I have a telegram from the Director of Corrections of the State of Michigan which reads in part as follows:

It appears that there is no fixed selling price on foreign binder twine. Owing to profusion of foreign twine available in this country, sellers are allowing buyers to name price. It also appears that much foreign twine is being held by banks and other moneyed interests who are anxious to dispose of the stock in order to liquidate. Mexican twine is quoted at a less figure than Mexican raw materials can be purchased by domestic manufacturers, due we suspect to the fact that finished twine is not taxed by Mexican Government while raw materials for export are taxed.

It is my information that foreign manufacturers of binder twine wait until the price is fixed by the American manufacturer, and then sell for 1 cent a pound less to the American consumer. That policy means the ultimate extinction of our domestic manufacturer in the production of this particular article.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. Would not also the relief mentioned by the gentleman be a tremendous help to the cotton grower?

Mr. DONDERO. I have not given consideration to that subject, but I do have in mind the question of keeping our own people employed as long as possible. If this particular industry vanishes, we will have that many more people unemployed. May I say, for the benefit of the House, that in the month of June 1938, there was imported more than 18,000,000 pounds of binder twine into this country, while last year over 80,000,000 pounds were imported duty free.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. What the gentleman has said about the extinction of the manufacture of binder twine in this country is also true with respect to the manufacture of newsprint paper. All the plants engaged in that manufacture were forced out of business because of the importation of foreign made newsprint paper, made by foreign labor, which threw thousands of people out of work in this country.

Mr. DONDERO. And with which American labor cannot compete.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I want to compliment the gentleman from Michigan for calling this matter to the attention of the country, because it is important to the people of the district which I represent, and if I can cooperate with the gentleman in any way I shall be very happy to do so.

Mr. DONDERO. I thank the gentleman for his observa-

I do not think it is overdrawn to say that if we are going to protect sugar refineries of this country and keep men employed in those factories, there is no reason why we should not keep American labor employed in American factories for the manufacture of binder twine so greatly needed by the grain-producing farmers of this Nation.

I am well aware that in some sections of the country where combines have come into use in place of the binder, binder twine is not used because the grain is cut and threshed in the field. I understand there are about 35,000 combines in use now. However, that does not apply in other sections of the country where combines cannot be and are not used. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a radio address I delivered on last Friday night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the Record LXXXIV—54 by including a speech which I delivered at the Farmers' Equity National Union Convention in St. Francis, Kans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the Record and include therewith certain charts and diagrams disclosing the facts and figures in reference to the importation of farm products, and the American acres displaced thereby.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

THE SUGAR-BEET INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, during the war this country was insufficiently supplied with sugar. Prior to the war we had not developed the domestic beet-sugar industry to a point where it could supply a reasonable percentage of our sugar requirements. In 1913, we must remember, the administration then in power and led by President Wilson reduced the duty on sugar coming to this country from Cuba. This discouraged the growth of the industry, and our people were afraid to invest their savings in the industry for fear it would eventually be crushed by reason of competition from the lowcost areas in Cuba and other foreign lands. Following the war Cuba greatly expanded her sugar industry in actual production, and as a direct result of this expansion plus the rapid recovery in actual production of the beet-sugar industry of western European countries and the creation of a highly protected and subsidized sugar-beet industry in the British Islands, the expansion of the industry in the United States was further discouraged.

REPUBLICAN ENCOURAGEMENT IN 1930

However, in 1930 the administration then in power enacted a protective tariff of $2 per 100 pounds on raw sugar coming in from Cuba. Since 1930 the domestic American industry has been expanding its production of actual sugar. This added protection was encouragement, and we should add it to the further inducement for growing sugar beets because of the protection of the Tariff Act of 1930 and the participating sugar-beet contracts put into operation by the industry in 1932, under which farmers were able to grow sugar beets on a basis more profitable than other substitute crops would bring in the way of cash income at the prices prevailing in 1932 and 1933. During the years 1932 and 1933, by reason of sugar being a nonsurplus crop, the farmers in the sugar-beet factory areas found the industry to be of great benefit. As a matter of fact, it was in 1932 and 1933 the domestic sugarbeet industry justified its immortality in the economic life of this country.

REDUCTION OF DUTY ON CUBAN SUGAR IN 1934

When President Roosevelt decided to reduce the Cuban sugar duty on sugar coming to the United States from Cuba he knew quite well that some type of compensation would have to be offered to the American farmer growing sugar beets. The processing tax was then applied and with it direct benefits began to flow to the American sugar-beet grower in lieu of the reduction in duty allowed to those who own and operate sugarcane plantations in Cuba. This processing tax plan was held unconstitutional. The Cuban duty was reduced by the President from $2 per 100 pounds down to 90 cents per 100 pounds on raw sugar coming in from Cuba.

SUGAR ACT OF 1937

September 1, 1937, the President approved the present sugar act now in operation and under which a benefit payment is going to the United States beet grower, and this is in lieu of the $1.10 per 100 pounds on raw sugar which he allowed to the sugar industry of Cuba. The intent of the 1937 act was to preserve the domestic sugar industry—beet and cane.

SECRETARY'S POWER UNDER 1937 ACT

If under the 1937 sugar act the mill operators are obtaining too great a return as compared to the sugar-beet and sugarcane growers, should the Secretary of Agriculture complain about the matter when he holds in his hands such powers as are granted by the 1937 act. Let those who would be informed read the act very carefully. Of course, the industry has enjoyed the general pick-up in operating profits which other branches of American industry have enjoyed when comparing the present situation (1938) with 1932 and 1933. The record shows this improvement in most all lines of industry. It is not fair to restrict the statement to the sugar industry. Neither is it fair to claim that the general improvement in the industry is due to some specific act of Congress.

THE MOMENTARY SITUATION

Now it appears the President desires to further reduce the Cuban duty from 90 cents to 75 cents per 100 pounds raw value of sugar. This proposed reduction has greatly affected present prices and the value of inventories of sugar now in the hands of producers and the trade. The proposal has affected prices adversely. The Secretary of Agriculture places great emphasis on "past" performance. Why does he not discuss prospective prices on present inventories; prospective prices the beet growers-farmers-and sugarcane growers will receive for their product by reason of it having to move into channels of consumption at present and probably much lower prices? Farmers are interested in the future. The past is a closed book. The Secretary has already made releases on prospects for 1939 crops other than sugar. Now let him say to the domestic growers of sugarcane and beet-what he thinks they will receive if present prices, or if lower prices, prevail on the unsold portion of their 1938 crop and the coming 1939 crop. No doubt the Secretary would prefer to not venture into this field of prophecy. But in presenting my thoughts to the Congress, let me say that I am interested in what the future promises to the growers of sugar in our domestic industry. Again, why does the Secretary deal with the price of sugar to the consumer in one release and then in a later release talk as if the previous release dealt with the price of sugar as paid to the grower by processor and the Government through the benefit payment. The layman has difficulty in comprehending just what the Secretary does say. The sugar expert can, of course, understand all that is said and so can the Secretary and his sugar experts. Therefore, let me admonish you to keep in mind hereafter that either one of two prices may be under discussion; that is, the price paid by the consumer to the retail trade and the price paid to the farmer by the processor and the Government.

DOES THE DOMESTIC SUGAR INDUSTRY FACE ANOTHER DISCOURAGING PERIOD?

What the industry and its friends want to know now is, Will the Government extend a friendly interest in the future? Do we now face an unfriendly period? Is Cuba to be given greater consideration in the future than the domestic industry is to receive? Will the Department of Agriculture point to past performance rather than remove all doubt as to future cooperation? Must the industry suffer heavy losses on present inventories and the 1939 crop? Time will answer these questions, but it might encourage industry—private industry—if they could be answered now.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, for a long time we have heard much about "pump priming" and "relief."

These phrases have been used by the New Deal to excuse deficit after deficit and to justify an ever-increasing public debt which has now reached mountainous proportions.

Our national debt by 1940, according to President Roosevelt's own calculations, will reach an all-time high of $44,- 458,000,000. Others in Government calculate that if all of the appropriations now asked for by the President are granted, the public debt by 1940 will actually exceed the statutory limitation of $45,000,000,000.

Indeed, it was recently stated in newspapers that the President would ask the Congress to raise the statutory limitation of the public debt.

We have recently been given a new catch phrase under which the New Deal seeks to justify and excuse our enormous national debt and the constantly increasing deficit. This new term is "Government investments."

It is apparent that we are now passing out of the era of "pump priming" and we are entering an era of "Government investments" propaganda.

ment investments" propaganda.

Now, it seems to me that it is utterly dangerous for us Members of Congress to try to fool ourselves or the country any longer concerning this matter of Federal expenditures. Spending is spending; waste is waste; extravagance is extravagance; political racketeering is political racketeering, regardless of the name by which they may be called.

Someone once said that a rose by any other name would smell as sweet. It is equally true that a polecat called by any other name would smell just as offensive. It does not make the slightest difference to the taxpayers whether their hard-earned dollars are taken from them under the pretense of "pump priming" or under the pretense of "Government investments."

You may change the name or phrase but you do not alter the facts. The Federal debt cannot be reduced, or extravagant spending stopped, by euphonious phrases. The debt will be paid out of the pocketbooks of the American taxpayers and by no other means. These continuing deficits will be curtailed only by efficiency and economy in Government. It is time to face these facts. We can no longer ignore them.

The President has outlined to this Congress plans and requirements for a $9,000,000,000 Budget. If things continue as they are now going, we may well face in 1940 a $10,000,-000,000 Budget.

I am greatly disturbed by the declaration by our President that a $9,000,000,000 or a $10,000,000,000 Budget for this country is a fixed and unchangeable fact and that, of necessity, we must raise the national income to $80,000,000,000 a year in order that 10 percent of the people's income may be arbitrarily taken from the citizens to sustain the extravagance, the political exploitation and racketeering which has characterized the administration of public affairs for the past 6 years.

There are many of us, Mr. Speaker, who deny that we are confronted with a $9,000,000,000 or a $10,000,000,000 annual Budget as a fixed and unchangeable fact in the affairs of our Nation.

The administration now talks about a new kind of trick bookkeeping—two sets of books—one in which to keep certain items of expenditures, and the other in which to keep so-called Government investments.

Now, it is common knowledge that the New Deal administration has been writing off millions of dollars in so-called loans and investments which are not collectible. It is also a fact that the Government is carrying on its books as assets many more millions which are today uncollectible. Any Member of Congress who desires to confirm this fact has but to study the list of commitments of this Government in which the principal and interest on loans have been guaranteed by some department of the Government. These are not assets. They are plain losses.

The President, in his message of January 4, said:

Many people have the idea that as an agent we are overburdened with debt and are spending more than we can afford. That is not so. Despite our Federal Government expenditures the entire debt of our national economic system, public and private together, is no larger than it was in 1929, and the interest thereon is far less than it was in 1929.

That, Mr. Speaker, is an excellent illustration of this new trick bookkeeping which is proposed for the Government.

The private debt in 1929 and in the years preceding was vastly greater than it is now, because there was a vastly greater amount of private business going on. Private capital, at that time, had not been scared into hiding by hostile administration attitudes and punitive taxation. Businessmen were willing to borrow credit and venture into commercial and industrial operations because they believed they had at least a fair chance to get a reasonable profit without Government competition, without labor disorders, and without punitive policies on the part of the administration.

The statement I just quoted from the President's message further illustrates this trick governmental bookkeeping, because it apparently has actually persuaded the President that the financial situation of the Nation is now better than it was in 1929; that we are not spending more than we can afford: and, on the basis of this economic philosophy, we can go on spending far into the indefinite future without worrying for a moment about the size of the Federal debt or of the fiscal state of the Union.

Certainly a tremendous change has taken place in President Roosevelt's financial reasoning since March 10, 1933, when he told Congress:

For 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road to Too often in recent history liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policies. We must avoid this danger.

When Mr. Roosevelt made these statements in his message in 1933, the increase in the national debt from March 3, 1929, to March 4, 1933, had been $3,592,000,000, or an average increase of only $898,000,000.

And now, by the President's own calculations, we are better off financially as a Government that we were in 1933, although the Federal debt will have grown from $20,937,000,000 on March 4, 1933, to $44,458,000,000 on July 1, 1940.

This will be an increase in 7 years under the New Deal of $23,521,000,000. And this, in turn, represents an average annual increase under the New Deal of $3,360,000,000, and also represents an average annual increase of 275 percent greater than the average annual increase which in 1933 impelled Mr. Roosevelt to warn the country that "for 3 long years the Federal Government has been on the road to bank-

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, this trick bookkeeping is not going to reduce the public debt or put the brakes on these recurring deficits. Trick bookkeeping is not going to relieve the taxpayers who have to raise the money for these expenditures, whether they be called regular or extraordinary expenditures, whether they be called "pump priming" or whether they be called "Government investments."

We all favor an $80,000,000,000 income for this Nation. There is no argument about that. In fact, there is no reason why our national income should not be even greater than that if it is based upon sound economy rather than inflationary economy. We should try to achieve an $80,000,000,000 national income in order that our people may have work; that they may be self-sustaining and prosperous, and not in order that 10 percent of it may be eaten up by taxation to support an extravagant bureaucracy and political waste and racketeering.

It has been pointed out recently by well-known writers on governmental affairs that there is a great difference in sound economics between investments and expenditures. Certainly the business affairs of the Government ought to be conducted on sound economic lines.

If a man invests his money in food or clothing, which he is going to consume or wear out, he is making expenditures. If he puts his money into a factory in which he intends to manufacture food or clothing which he expects to market at a profit, he is making an investment. The same thing is true of the Government. Federal funds which are spent for made work or for non-self-liquidating projects are expendituresplain expenditures—and nothing else. They may or may not in some cases be desirable or necessary, but certainly there is no need for us to fool ourselves by entering them on the Government books as investments.

Of course, it is easy if we adopt this catch phrase of "Government investments" to spend money on all sorts of impractical experiments and then claim that it is a "Government investment" in cultural or spiritual values. There is a very grave doubt, however, that many of these so-called investments in cultural and spiritual values have yielded any return in that direction. However, a sound economy and a stable Government credit demands that we look squarely at the nature of our expenditures, instead of fooling ourselves by trick bookkeeping and fancy phrases.

One well-known newspaper columnist, Mark Sullivan, pointed out recently that Talleyrand, noted French diplomatist and statesman, was aware of this device of the artful use of catch phrases. Talleyrand, in his memoirs, according to this columnist, said:

A chief art of politics is to invent new names for things which, under their old names, have become unpopular.

This same writer points out that David Cushman Coyle, in a magazine article which appeared about a year ago, wrote:

The fact is still there but the name was wrong; it is time to adopt the more accurate vocabulary. * * * Once the people understand this distinction they can be shown that the Federal finances are in a sound condition.

That phrase, "once the people understand this distinction they can be shown that Federal finances are in sound condition," is disquieting to me. It has the sinister tone of fooling the people. At this season of the year it might be appropriate to note in passing that Lincoln once said something to the effect that you can fool all of the people some of the time and some of the people all of the time, but you cannot fool all the people all the time. The elections last November would seem to have confirmed Mr. Lincoln's declaration in some degree.

It has been pointed out several times by Members of Congress that the present New Deal administration has spent in its short life of 6 years more than 33 percent than was spent in the 128 years from 1789 to 1917. It has also been pointed out that the Annual Report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year of 1937 showed that the total expenditures of the United States Government from 1789 to June 30, 1917, were only $28,700,000,000, and by March 3, 1938, they had risen to $155,000,000,000.

The repeated assertions of the present administration that emergency expenditures account for and justify the tremendous increase in public expenditures is not correct. The Treasurer's report, just referred to, shows that regular operating expenditures of the Government rose from $2,779,000,000 in 1933 to $3,189,000,000 in 1937, an increase of $410,000,-000 in 5 years.

This increase in the regular operating expenditures is especially significant when it is considered that during the 10-year period from July 1, 1921, to June 30, 1931, the entire expenditures of the Government, exclusive of debt retirement, increased from $3,372,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1922 to only $3,652,000,000 in 1931. Keep in mind that the operating expenditures during this period represented 87 percent of all the costs of Government, exclusive of debt retirement.

In 1934 the first complete fiscal year of the Roosevelt administration, regular operating expenditures were 33.3 percent of the total expenditures. In 1937 regular operating expenditures had risen to 42.8 percent of the total expenditures.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are only some of the plain facts which show the fallacy and danger of adopting any system of trick bookkeeping which will tend to fool the people and ourselves as to Government expenditures. Every thinking citizen in this country knows that we cannot continue spending as we have been spending for the last 6 years.

The Roosevelt administration has been 6 years getting us into the fix we are in. Now, Mr. Roosevelt and his followers call upon the Republicans to tell them how to rescue the Nation, and they want the answer in less than 6 weeks.

There is no single answer to these problems. They are so interrelated in our economy that only a general reformation of all the wasteful spending, political racketeering, wild experimentation, and theoretical financing can save us.

The President has asked the Republicans where we would curtail expenditures and thereby reduce these annual deficits. I say that one good place to begin is by cutting off political racketeering in relief. Relief must be made efficient and economical. It must be put on a nonpartisan, nonfavoritism basis so that the greatest possible amount of every relief dollar will reach the needy who are entitled to it.

Another way to curtail relief expenditures would be to eliminate from the relief rolls every individual who is not justly entitled to be on relief. Put into their places some of the worthy unemployed citizens who have never received a dollar of relief in the 6 years of the New Deal. Over that period we have had an average of 11,000,000 unemployed, but the Administration's own figures show that the work-relief peak-reached just prior to election last fall-was but 3.200.000.

Reduce the vast army of political henchmen who stalk the corridors of the governmental establishments in Washington and who infest this country in every village and hamlet.

Encourage private investment. Adopt a cooperative attitude toward business instead of punitive tax policies and hostile administration attitudes. Instead of trusting our money to political racketeers to "invest" under the false name of "pump priming," let us encourage private capital, private industry, and private agriculture to seize the pump handle and go to work.

Restore and retain our rich home markets for American producers, American farmers, and American workers.

Trim all along the line in every department and activity in government. Cut off every dollar of useless expenditures that can be curtailed.

Rise above partisanship to the principle of a sound nation, in which we all may be prosperous.

Get away from sectional rivalries and class jealousies and turn as a united people to work our way out of this morass of depression in which we are today.

Follow this program and it would not be long until the sun of prosperity would shine upon us again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE FOREIGN POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take this opportunity to make a few comments on our foreign policy and also to speak briefly on the arms embargo that was adopted by the Congress 2 years ago against both belligerents in Spain.

Members of Congress are being swamped by letters and telegrams from those who would either have us change that policy or by those who want us to retain the neutrality law as applied against both factions in Spain. The situation since then has changed considerably. Before I point out the change in that situation, I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that we have identically the same power when it comes to laying an embargo as the Senate of the United States. However, if you read the newspapers and read the speeches of Senator PITTMAN, Senator NYE, Senator Lewis, and others, you might come to the conclusion that it was purely a matter of senatorial power and prerogative.

Two years ago, by a vote of 411 to 1, this House adopted an embargo on arms, ammunition, and implements of war against both belligerents in Spain. At the present time we are being swamped with appeals and petitions for and against the arms embargo in Spain. Agitation is broadcast throughout the country either to uphold that embargo or to do away with it. The newspapers this afternoon state that Barcelona, the largest city and port in all Spain, has been captured by the Franco forces. That capture means that the Nationalists, the Franco forces, have control of over threequarters of Spain, of their natural resources, their territory, and their population. It also has control of the sea, likewise of all the northern seacoast, the southern seacoast, and a part of the eastern seacoast.

That means that the Franco government actually is the de facto government of Spain. So when Members of Congress are asked to take sides by lifting the arms embargo in favor of the Loyalists, the question that we have to decide is. What is the best interest of the United States of America? It is not necessary to show any preference or to take any sides. When we voted an embargo we did it only for one reason, and that was to keep out of war; to keep out of foreign entanglements, to keep out of these mad and bloody conflicts in Europe.

That was the only reason we were called upon to vote for the Spanish neutrality bill; and now when we find that one faction controls three-quarters of Spain, it would be the height of stupidity for the United States at the eleventh hour to lift the embargo and thereby take sides in behalf of the loyalists against the nationalists who apparently are winning a victory. If we did, we would become the undying enemy of the Franco government.

Our interest in this matter, I submit, is an American interest; and it has always been the policy of our country to maintain neutrality between belligerents. Members of the House have repeatedly asked me what the Committee on Foreign Affairs proposes to do in regard to the Spanish embargo. The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McReynolds], a distinguished Member of the House, unfortunately is sick. The committee will hold its first meeting next Tuesday. From what I can ascertain from members of the committee there is no intention on their part to hold any hearings on the Spanish neutrality bill or to change it in any respect. I think that has been agreed on by both Republican and Democratic members of the committee.

I submit by request a resolution and a letter to the House. The letter I will read, as it is addressed to me:

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE STEUBEN SOCIETY OF AMERICA New York, N. Y., January 25, 1939.

Hon. HAMILTON FISH,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Congressman: A great deal of agitation is at present noticeable regarding the present neutrality law and the attempts being made by the administration to amend the neutrality law so as to remove all restrictions and to give full discretionary powers to our President.

Our society is vigorously opposed to such a policy and specifically opposed to the desire of now permitting the export of arms to the Loyalist forces of Spain. In the opinion of our political committee chairman, this would be tantamount to war.

We know that you feel with us all the way on this neutrality question and I am therefore prevailing upon you to present to the House of Representatives and to have inserted in the Con-gressional Record the attached memoranda and petition.

Thanking you in anticipation of your kindness and cooperation, I beg to remain, with best regards,

Very sincerely yours,

THEO. H. HOFFMANN. Chairman.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE STEUBEN SOCIETY OF AMERICA New York, N. Y., January 25, 1939.

To the Congress of the United States:

We herewith respectfully petition Congress not to amend the neutrality law in surrender to the clamor of those in sympathy with either side in the internal conflict now apparently drawing to a close in Spain.

To now permit the export of arms to the loyalist forces of Spain would be tantamount to our engaging in war.

Respectfully yours,

STEUBEN SOCIETY OF AMERICA, THEO. H. HOFFMANN, Chairman. F. W. MAYER, Secretary.

The Steuben Society of America is composed of patriotic American citizens and has no connection with Nazi propa-

In the remaining minutes I would like to make some comments on the speech made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Van Zandt] yesterday. He asked, What is the foreign policy of the United States? He wanted the President of the United States to be called by the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate at a joint conference to explain what the policy of the United States is in respect to our foreign affairs. I think it would be more advisable if the President came before the entire Congress and told the Congress and the American people exactly what the foreign policy of our country is today. I admit I have not the slightest idea what the foreign policy of this administration is

I have been doing my best for the last 6 years to find out what the New Deal foreign policy is, but have been unable to do so except in one respect; and that is, that the President of the United States has asked the Congress to give him the power to determine the aggressor nation. If we did we would be surrendering our constitutional war powers, and would be involved in every foreign dispute, conflict, and war throughout the world. This is the only definite recommendation of the President, and I am unalterably opposed to it.

So that I may not be misunderstood on partisan grounds permit me to say that I opposed this demand under Republican administrations. The same request was made by a former Republican Secretary of State, Mr. Henry L. Stimson. It was made before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It did not receive one single Republican vote. It has been repudiated by former President Hoover time after time, particularly in recent years.

Mr. Stimson now announces in the press that he has joined with the President of the United States to ask the Congress to give the President the power to determine the aggressor nation. It is the old League of Nations and collective security platform all over again. It would be the most dangerous power if the Congress gave to any one man the right to determine the aggressor nation, and a direct step to being involved in war. It would mean abandoning and surrendering our constitutional power to declare war. I specifically mention Mr. Stimson. Every American has a right to express his views in this country, but I do not know a single Republican Member of Congress, either in the House or in the Senate, who supports the contention of former Secretary of State Stimson that the Congress should give to the President this power to determine the aggressor nation and thereby permit him to push or drag us into foreign wars.

What is and what has been the policy of the United States on foreign affairs? Our foreign policy was established by George Washington in 1793, when all Europe was at war. The world was then in the throes of one of the eternal wars of Europe that have been going on ever since. He proclaimed a policy of neutrality, nonintervention, and peace. This became the traditional foreign policy of the United States of America. It has been upheld by every President and Secretary of State since that time, by Thomas Jefferson, by Madison, Monroe, and Jackson—by all our great Presidents and Secretaries of State. These principles were accepted as the fundamental foreign policy of our country—neutrality, nonintervention, and peace.

Yet now the President of the United States seeks to secure from the Congress the right to determine the aggressor nation, an utterly unneutral act. Every international lawyer would tell you that it is not only unneutral and unfriendly but that it would be a cause of war if we were to determine that some first-class power was the aggressor nation and then lay sanctions and embargoes and join in any collective security action against that nation. It would be all right to apply such a policy against Haiti or Liberia, or some small nation that has no navy; but to apply it against a first-class power, against Germany, or Japan, or Italy, or England, or France would lead immediately to war.

The President in his speech said that we have a rendezvous with destiny. I say, Mr. Speaker, that if we ever surrender our constitutional right to declare war and give the President power to determine the aggressor nation—whether he be a Republican or Democratic President makes no difference—we would have not only a rendezvous with destiny, but we would have a rendezvous with death, bankruptcy, disaster, and loss of our free institutions.

I reiterate to the Members that the identical power of laying embargoes rests as well in the House of Representatives as in the Senate.

I repeat for the benefit of the new Members that our Committee on Foreign Affairs does not propose to take any action—at least in the near future—toward changing the neutrality laws of our country.

The main neutrality law, or that part of it known as the "cash-and-carry feature," expires on May 1 of this year. Before that time the committee will hold hearings to determine if it is necessary to do away with the "cash and carry" section entirely, and I do not believe it would be a mistake if we did, because it gives certain discretionary powers to the President, and I for one am against giving any discretionary powers to the President to involve us in any war at any time. [Applatuse.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Allen]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, we in this country face a very serious situation. We are in the midst of a war hysteria, a fear and dread of war, and of dangerous war propaganda, and if the women of America believed one-half of what they read in the newspapers and one-half of what they heard over the radio, they would look under their beds every night to see if there was not a Jap, a German, or an Italian there ready to pounce out on poor, little, defenseless America and gobble up both North and South America.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The potential enemies of the Republic, according to the best information I can get, are Japan, Germany, and Italy. Japan has her hands full in China, Italy in Abyssinia, and Germany in central Europe. Will the gentleman explain how all of these charges at the present time can only exist in disturbed mentalities?

Mr. FISH. I agree with the gentleman that the President is largely responsible for this war propaganda. He leads the American people to believe that we are about to be attacked, that we are about to be invaded, that our cities are about to be bombed. I challenge the President of the United States to specify what nation or nations has the faintest thought or capacity to invade the United States of America. [Applause.] All the totalitarian states are exceedingly busy in their own backyards.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does not the gentleman realize that the Monroe Doctrine is in danger in Latin America, and does not the gentleman believe that Latin America can be and is being invaded by totalitarian propaganda at the present time as a prelude to an armed invasion?

Mr. FISH. I happen to be a firm believer in the Monroe Doctrine. I believe in upholding the Monroe Doctrine and serving notice on every nation that if they attempt to invade any part of Latin America it means war with the United States immediately. [Applause.] But what are the facts? The facts are that we have the greatest Navy today that we ever had in the history of the United States, a navy three times as large as Germany's, twice as large as Italy's, and 50 percent larger than Japan's. With appropriations already authorized, it will be just so much larger than the navies of those nations. We can defend every inch and foot of our own territory and of our possessions. We can uphold and defend the Monroe Doctrine. But in spite of all that the war propaganda has become so misleading that the people in the Middle West believe their cities are about to be bombed.

Let me answer that with facts and figures, not propaganda. Let us assume we sunk our entire Navy and that we went to war with these three so-called totalitarian states. How many airplanes do you think they can bring over here to bombard us? Altogether they have eight airplane carriers. Italy has none; Germany has two, one built and one building; Japan has six; making a total of eight airplane carriers. Those airplane carriers can carry a maximum of 50 airplanes, or between 40 and 50. Assuming a maximum of 50, these eight airplane carriers could carry 400 airplanes. We have today in the United States approximately 4,000 planes. Congress has already authorized 5,300 planes. We have 4,000 of the best planes in the world today and the best pilots. If we sunk our Navy, and if those three dictatorial nations combined, all they could bring over would be planes. We have 4,000, and if those 4,000 planes of ours could not handle 400 enemy planes, we had better do something about it immediately.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. In view of what the gentleman has said, can it not be said that the President is using this hysteria as a springboard for a third-term campaign?

Mr. FISH. I would rather let some other Member of the House answer that question. I wish I had more confidence in the President, because I believe this war hysteria and demand for huge armaments are the direct result of the provocative and inflammatory speeches of the President when he says we are on the verge of war and must join in collective action to police and quarantine the world.

These intemperate and alarming speeches of President Roosevelt are copied by our State Department and our Cabinet officers vying with each other in hurling insult after insult against foreign governments. I believe we are confronted with a dangerous situation so long as the President continues to insult these foreign nations and at the same time inflame our people back home.

Mr. KNUTSON. May I say to the gentleman, he has as much confidence in the President as I have.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman wants to know how much confidence I have in the President, I will tell him. On one side of the Hudson River up where I live, I have Father Divine and his angels. On the other side of the Hudson River I have the great White Father and his "brain trusters." I confess to the gentleman as between the two I have more faith in Father Divine and his angels. [Applause.]

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PACE. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I am interested in one statement made by the gentleman. Will the gentleman give his authority for the statement we now have 4,000 of the best planes in the world?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I can do it both directly and indirectly. May I say to the gentleman before I answer the question that, if we have not, I would like to scrap them all tomorrow and have the best; but I do not believe we need 8,500, which we are about to be asked to authorize. Both the Army and the Navy Air Corps claim that they have the best planes. If we have not, it is our own fault, because France only yesterday placed an order for 600 American pursuit planes, due to the fact they are the best in the world, because they are the fastest and strongest. There is every reason to believe that the 4,000 planes of ours are the best, the fastest, and the most effective. If we have not got them—and I believe we have—then this House ought to see to it that we scrap those that are not the best and provide only for the best and fastest planes.

But I see no reason to have 8,500 planes. I will, however, speak on that issue later on when the legislation comes before the House.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. For a brief question.

Mr. GEYER of California. Did I correctly understand the gentleman to say that he has more faith in Father Divine than he has in the President?

Mr. FISH. On these particular matters, the gentleman certainly did, and more specifically in regard to his inflammatory speeches that have caused war hysteria in America. In my opinion President Roosevelt is both an internationalist and interventionist.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman believe his constituent, the President of the United States, ought to be in position to know something about potential wars? The international bankers, munition makers, and war profiteers are disseminating war propaganda all over America, and since the international banking house of Roosevelt has joined the munitions house of du Pont in the holy bonds of matrimony, they might explain some of the propaganda.

Mr. FISH. I believe this House has made up its mind on one thing, and that is, it proposes to keep this country out of all foreign wars. [Applause.] If the President or anyone else tries to get us into a foreign war it is our duty to see to it that he does not succeed. I believe we can keep out if the Congress insists on keeping out. The only way we will get into a foreign war is by letting this war hysteria spread to such an extent that it gets out of bounds.

Where does it come from? It comes from our enemies within. It comes from Communists, who would like to see us go to war with Germany and with Japan for the benefit of Soviet Russia. It comes from the British, who would like us to preserve the British Empire. It comes from internationalists and those who believe in collective security, and the League of Nations. It comes from the interventionists, who would have us scrap our policy of neutrality and adopt one of collective security, sanctions, and war commitments.

As far as I am concerned, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs I propose to do everything I can by my voice and vote on that committee to keep the United States out of all foreign wars. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore made, the gentleman from California [Mr. Voorhis] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I should just like to comment on some of the things that were said about the President a few minutes ago by observing that in the campaign just closed he was accused of being a dictator. I hope you understand what I have in mind.

This afternoon a speech was made on this floor having to do with the nomination by the President of Mr. Thomas R. Amlie, of Wisconsin, for a position on the Interstate Commerce Commission. I wish to address myself for a few minutes to that speech, not only as regards Mr. Amlie personally but because of certain fundamental implications in that speech and in other things which I find going on about the country and in the House which it seems to me bode no good for a real continued expression of the democracy America has known.

The man about whom that speech was made happens to be a veteran of the World War and has been commander of two American Legion posts. I happen to know he is as fundamentally devoted to constitutional democracy in this country as any man in this House. [Applause.]

The point I want to make is that I believe there are two groups of people whose work today is the most dangerous work there is to democracy in America. I refer on the one hand, to those people on the left who refer to everybody that does not agree with them as Fascists, and, on the other hand, to those people on the right who refer to everybody that does not agree with them as Communists. I should like to point out with all the vigor at my command that if that sort of tactics is pursued long enough a spirit will be built up in this country whereby you will have two groups of people so much opposed that there will be no possibility of sympathetic and understanding contact between them. [Applause.]

Let us think for a minute what real disloyalty constitutes. If a man says to me or anyone else, "I do not like the United States; I believe some other country is better than the United States; I think the fundamental Constitution of the United States ought to be overthrown," I think that is disloyalty. If a man says to American citizens, "You owe allegiance elsewhere than to the Government of this constitutional democracy," then I think that is disloyalty. However, I do not think it is disloyalty if a man makes a speech or does anything else in advocacy of economic measures with which I fundamentally and absolutely disagree, providing that man believes in his heart those economic measures are the best means he can see for the preservation of the fundamental liberties of the people of this country.

After all, democracy means something pretty earthy, pretty fundamental, pretty much at the roots of life. It means the opportunity for the common citizen to enjoy freedom, to enjoy personal, religious, and civil liberties. Yes; it means more than that. It means the maintenance with all the strength at our command of the greatest possible degree of equality of economic opportunity in the Nation, because it is out of the soil of equality of economic opportunity that a democracy grows and flourishes.

I myself desire the greatest possible amount of freedom for all people; and if, for example, I should be compelled to choose between freedom for speculators in farm commodities to do exactly as they please and the freedom of the farmers in America to continue to conduct an independent farming business, I should choose freedom for the farmers of America, even if I had to interfere with the license of the speculators. If in order to insure the freedom of the small-business men of America I had to interfere with the license of monopoly, I would choose to interfere with the license of monopoly rather than to sacrifice the small man to it.

I believe it is most unfortunate for anyone to take the attitude that because a man disagrees with you or with me on an economic question he therefore is considered not a good American. There are a lot of people who have hoped we could come to the place where we would have a full production of wealth and a full consumption of wealth in this country. [Applause.]

I am one of those people. I believe, as a matter of fact, that the achievement of that goal is, perhaps, the most important single thing we have before us, and I have a fundamental respect for every single individual who has a program whereby he believes that this can be accomplished, regardless of whether it is the same idea I have or not. Just because a man advocates that certainly ought not to condemn him.

I happen to have a little pamphlet here having to do with the industrial expansion bill which represents an attempt to try to work out a method whereby industry could be assisted to an increase of production through Government guidance and guarantees against loss through unsalable surpluses, in somewhat the same way as we have brought about a control of production in agriculture. It happens there are certain remarks by Mr. Amlie contained in this pamphlet, some of which I want to read. He says:

But it has always seemed to me that there was little justification for any hope in such a program in the United States. I have written extensively on the subject, and have as a result been con-demned at considerable length in the official publication of the demned at considerable length in the official publication of the Communist Party in this country. I have long been convinced that the American people will never regain that equality or opportunity that has been an American heritage by the traditional program of either the Socialists or the Communists. On the other hand, I am equally sure that the old order of laissez faire and rugged individualism will never again work satisfactorily. I am convinced that the American people will regain the equality of opportunity of which they dream only when American industry is operating at full capacity.

Now, suppose a man believes sincerely and in his heart that danger to our democracy is real. Suppose he loves liberty and democracy and the rights of the common people and the preservation of constitutional liberties in this country with all his heart, and suppose he believes that certain economic measures, which may change certain monopolistic practices in this country, are essential to preserve those things, do you blame him for advocating the things in which he believes? I do not think you should. I do not ask you to agree with him, I do not ask you to be glad because he got an appointment, but I do ask that fair play be used, and I do ask that the real facts be given and not that irresponsible charges be allowed to take their place.

Mr. Amlie has been referred to here today as a small-town. country lawyer. If I recall correctly, Abraham Lincoln was a small-town, country lawyer. I believe Henry Clay was one. I think Andrew Jackson was one. I think I could name a lot of others of the very greatest people in all the history of our country who have been such small-town, country lawyers, and I believe we could ill afford to do without them.

In conclusion I simply want to make this very plain. What I am appealing for is this: We in the United States are undoubtedly confronted with most serious problems. The great problem is the problem of unemployment, and that problem is the result of a lack of full production, and that problem, in turn, is largely the consequence of a failure on the part of our distributive system to distribute consuming power among the people in accordance with our capacity to produce. Here, some advocate retirement pensions; some, monetary reform; some, public works; some, changes in the tax laws, and so on. The important thing is that these problems are common to us all. Let us meet here in this great parliamentary body, let us meet on the platforms of this country, and let us put our hearts and minds on the task of solving that problem, and let us be certain that we will make a real, valid distinction between what does constitute disloyalty to America, on the one hand, and what merely constitutes disagreement with our own particular economic views, on the other, and let us be sure we maintain that fundamental faith and confidence in one another, without which, indeed, democracy may be in danger. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, if some one wants me to yield to him I shall be pleased to take the time, otherwise I have finished my remarks

Mr. KELLER. I want to ask the gentleman a question. I would like to ask what the Members of this body think of a new man who comes in here succeeding Tom Amlie, known to many of us intimately, and makes the sort of speech that that the gentleman who succeeded him made here today. I put it up to every man to stop and think a little about it and wonder what we are going to do with the idea of free speech in this country and free democracy in this country if we tolerate and endorse such speeches as that.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am sure the gentleman understands I am not endorsing the speech. I would like to say that I was glad to note in the speech that was made this afternoon by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bolles] that he himself remarked that the question of personal integrity and ability on the part of Mr. Amlie was not at stake, and I am sure that everybody who knows anything about him will agree with that statement.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. PACE. If we do not tolerate speeches like that, what would become of free speech in this country?

Mr. KELLER. I agree with that.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I said in answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Keller] that I did not endorse it, I did not use the word "tolerate." I tried to make it plain in my remarks that I believed that people, whether they agree with me or with the gentleman or with anyone, have a right to express their views.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. KITCHENS. As I understand the gentleman from California, he stands for the right of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] to follow the inspiration he obtains from Father Divine and his angels, rather than from the President of the United States, if he so desires.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. If the gentleman from New York is so inclined, I think he has that right.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentle-

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes. I yield to my fine, distinguished colleague from Colorado.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I remind the gentleman and other Members that when President Woodrow Wilson nominated Mr. Justice Brandeis to the Supreme Court he was denounced as an anarchist by the very same reactionary groups and interests that are denouncing Mr. Amlie as a Communist, but long since, whenever these groups and interests want to show to the country that the Supreme Court is still worthy of their confidence and respect, they always put Mr. Justice Brandeis in as exhibit A.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. So that inasmuch as Mr. Amlie is a young man there is still hope for him; he, too, may be respectable 20 years from now.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman; and may I add here a further word. Objection was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bolles] to a constitutional amendment submitted some years ago by Mr. Amlie. Now, when a man proposes a constitutional amendment here is what he is really saying. He is saying, "Here is a proposition. If Congress passes it by a two-thirds vote, if the President signs it, and if three-quarters of the States ratify it. then, and not till then, I propose that it be the law of the land." That is democracy. It is the American way of making changes when an unquestioned majority of the people working through our constitutional machinery will that such changes be made.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes; gladly to my friend from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. If I understand correctly, Mr. Amlie is not a Democrat in his politics.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is correct.

Mr. PATRICK. What is he?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. He is a Progressive.

Mr. PATRICK. There cannot be another Democrat appointed on that Commission as it now stands?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is correct.

Mr. PATRICK. And the President refuses to appoint a Republican, or at least he did not appoint one.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Of course, I do not know the President's mind, but as a matter of fact he did not in this case.

Mr. PATRICK. I thought that might be interesting.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gen-

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. As a matter of fact, does not the gentleman recognize or understand that the leading economists of the United States look upon Mr. Thomas R. Amlie as one of the best thinkers along the lines of political economy that we have in America today?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I believe that to be true, both by people who agree with him and by people who do not agree with him.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It is recognized by everyone that when Mr. Amlie was a Member of this House he served with honor and distinction. As he has established himself qualified to serve in this House, then he certainly is qualified to serve in any branch of the Government.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from California believe if he were the President of the United States, or in the President's place, and were to get exactly the same words from the Republican side of the House that he heard today, that he would be interested in appointing a Republican to this place which has been vacated by a

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman. I think I would be amused by some of those remarks. I do not think I would lose by sense of humor, and I know the President will not lose his.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman does concede that the Republicans are entitled to pay their share of the taxes to support these offices?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Oh, I say to the gentleman that throughout my whole speech I have tried very hard to make it plain that I have a wholesome respect for other points of view on all of these questions, whether they agree with mine or not. I do not think I know what the purport of the gentleman's question is.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I just wondered whether we would still be recognized and have the right to live in this country or express an opinion, or whether we were just to contribute, and I ask the gentleman if he thinks the Republicans do have some good points.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman does not think, surely, that members of his party have lacked opportunity to fully express their opinions. And in answer to the second part of his question I will say I am sure the Republicans have many good points.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the appointment of former Congressman Thomas Amlie to the Interstate Commerce Commission should be confirmed by the Senate of the United States. The Interstate Commerce Act provides that-

Not more than six Commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party.

Mr. Speaker, the present make-up of the Interstate Commerce Commission is as follows:

Chairman Marion M. Caskie, of Alabama, Democrat; Balthazar H. Meyer, Wisconsin, Republican; Clyde B. Aitchison, Oregon, Republican: Joseph B. Eastman, of Massachusetts, Democrat; Frank McManamy, District of Columbia, Democrat; Claude R. Porter, Iowa, Democrat; William E. Lee, Idaho, Republican; Charles D. Mahaffie, District of Columbia, Democrat; Carroll Miller, Pennsylvania, Democrat; Walter M. Splawn, Texas, Democrat; John L. Rogers, Tennessee, Republican. This Commission is a quasi judicial body, and the section of the law requiring that it be bipartisan was written into the statute to prevent it from becoming a political football of the administrative branch of our Govern-

The New Deal leader in the House claimed that Commissioner Eastman is an Independent. Why, he is an old-line Boston Democrat, who was first appointed to the Commission by our Democratic President Woodrow Wilson on December 19, 1918, and confirmed by the Senate on January 24, 1919. He was reappointed by our Republican President Herbert Hoover on December 17, 1929. If you doubt his party affiliations, which were considered when that reappointment was made, I suggest you refer to the New York Times of Wednesday, December 18, 1929, and other great metropolitan newspapers, and you will find that President Hoover reappointed Mr. Eastman as a Democrat.

So right at this very hour, without the appointment of Mr. Amlie, the law has been violated. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been packed, and now it is intended to pack it some more and have eight members from the same political army on the commission.

Beginning with the 1932 election campaign, and through the 1936 and 1938 election campaigns, in and out of Congress, former Congressman Amlie supported actively and openly our New Deal President of the United States. [Applause.]

Should he be confirmed, the letter as well as the spirit of law, which prohibits more than six members of one political party from being members of the quasi judicial Interstate Commerce Commission, will be violated.

In Wisconsin the New Deal political forces have two divisions. We have one division commanded by a Democratic New Deal general and the other commanded by a Progressive New Deal general. The progressive division of the New Deal army, of course, the division in which Mr. Amlie serves, has more members, because it has a company of the Communist brethren and a regiment of Karl Marx Socialist disciples. They are all in the New Deal political army and fly the New Deal political flag. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, I say with all sincerity that there are some other important matters which the Senate of the United States should consider before it confirms the appointment of Mr. Amlie. We have a Federal statute which is called the Logan Act.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman while I am looking for my copy of the Logan Act.

Mr. PATRICK. I should like to ask you boys if you would make up your minds whether Amlie is a Democrat or whether he is an un-American alien with communistic tendencies.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The Democratic Party of Jefferson and Jackson is a thing of the past. You forget all about the principles of the Democratic Party of Jefferson and Jackson until you shake down the Government employees with $100 Jackson Day dinners and force the economic royalists to purchase $250 autographed books in order to raise huge campaign funds. Democrats, Communists, Progressives, and Karl Marx Socialists are united in the New Deal political army to advance and put into effect the principles of Karl Marx and the Communist International. I think that will answer the gentleman. [Applause and laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further unless I can get some more time.

Mr. PATRICK. Some of these gentlemen who were appointed were good Democrats when appointed, were they not?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. No doubt they were. However, the New Deal Soviet Frankenstein monster has swallowed the Democratic Party, the Progressive Party, the Communist Party, and the Socialist Party. It may be interesting for the gentleman to know that William D. Carroll, of Wisconsin, the chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee, called his Wisconsin Democratic leaders together the other day and they unanimously passed a resolution denouncing the appointment of Mr. Amlie.

Mr. PATRICK. How many of the present commissioners does the gentleman regard as good Democrats?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. There are now seven members of the Commission who were Democrats when they were appointed. I will name them if the gentleman does not know them. You must not forget, however, that the Democratic forces have united with the progressive, Communist, and Socialist forces, and are in the New Deal army with them now.

Mr. PATRICK. Then appointing one even whom the gentleman calls Democratic would not be packing the Commission.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Oh, yes; because the law says you can only have six from the same political party. The New Deal now has control of the Federal Government, and should Mr. Amlie be confirmed the New Deal forces will have eight members on the commission.

Mr. PATRICK. But at least you release him from being a Communist, do you not?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Oh, no. I am going to put the Communist nightshirt on him right now. [Applause.] The "production for use and not for profit" program is not the original doctrine of our progressive New Dealers. It was stolen almost verbatim from this 72-page Communist program entitled "Why Communism?"

Mr. Speaker, I have a letter dated March 3, 1938, from a former distinguished Member of this House, with whom I have served, Hon. R. Walton Moore, who is now the very able Counselor of the State Department. Let us see what he says:

Counselor of the State Department. Let us see what he says:

In response to your inquiry of March 1, 1938, whether an individual American citizen is prevented by law from communicating directly with representatives of foreign governments and foreign parliaments, you are informed that the so-called Logan Act, which is found in United States Code, title 18, section 5, provides that every citizen of the United States, whether actually resident or abiding within the same, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or in any foreign country, who, without the permission or authority of the Government, directly or indirectly commences or carries on any verbal or written correspondence or intercourse with any foreign government or any officer or agent thereof, with an intent to influence the measures or conduct of any foreign government or of any officer or agent thereof, in relation to any disputes or controversies with the United States, or to defeat the measures of the Government of the United States, as well as any person who counsels or assists in such correspondence with such intent, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than 3 years.

Notwithstanding the fact that we passed the neutrality law approved August 31, 1935, a measure to preserve the neutrality of America, and later enacted the Spanish Arms Embargo Act, approved January 8, 1937, to preserve the neutrality of America, Thomas R. Amlie, in violation of the Logan Act, communicated directly with the "red" Communist Government of Spain, the puppet government of the Moscow Soviet Communist gang of thieves and murderers. His communication extended greetings and best wishes, and it certainly cannot be construed as helpful in carrying out the neutrality measures of the United States. I respectfully suggest that instead of presenting Mr. Amlie's name to the Senate for confirmation as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the administration would be rendering better service to the country if the Department of Justice would call the attention of the grand jury to Mr. Amlie's communication to the Spanish Government and ask that it be considered under the provisions of the Logan Act.

There must have been great rejoicing in "red" Communist Spain and Moscow when they received news of Mr. Amlie's appointment to the highly important Interstate Commerce Commission. Our New Deal leaders seem to be very interested in the welfare of the Communist brethren in Spain and Moscow. Why, our New Deal leader, the President of the United States, even sent a cable to Mikhail Kalinin, President of Russia, on November 7, 1938, the twenty-first birthday of Soviet Russia. Our President said:

Upon this national anniversary please accept my felicitations and sincere good wishes for the well-being of the people of your country.

Mr. Speaker, the confirmation of Mr. Amlie as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission will certainly not give encouragement to those who love our American constitutional democracy and are opposed to Soviet Communist autocracy.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I realize that the Members of the House cannot vote on Mr. Amlie's confirmation. However, since his appointment has been discussed on the floor of the House today, I asked for this time to voice my disapproval of his appointment. In my campaign I promised that I would not directly or indirectly give any aid or comfort to the bloody red Communist butchers in Moscow, or their puppets in Spain and America, who have been flooding our country with propaganda in favor of repealing our Spanish arms embargo. I know that these Communist forces will rejoice should Mr. Amlie be confirmed. The "red" Communist government in Moscow and its puppet Communist government in Spain have just about repealed the Ten Commandments of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, confiscated private and church property, destroyed the liberties of free men and women, and slaughtered millions, including the clergy and sisters of mercy, in order to shackle their people in bonds of regimented political and economic slavery. These Communist autocracies have effaced in blood every trace of justice, liberty, morality, and individual human and private property rights.

Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish], our ranking Republican member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, indicated that we would not swallow the propaganda and join in policing the world in the name of "saving world democracy" the way we swallowed the propaganda about "making the world safe for democracy" under the World War administration of the Democratic Party and the international bankers and munitions makers who controlled it then as they control it now. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, if there is nothing further to come before the House, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, January 30, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 27, 1939

(Legislative day of Tuesday, January 17, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. Barkley, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, January 26, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 2762) to consolidate and codify the internal-revenue laws of the United States, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. LEWIS. I note the absence of a quorum and ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] is detained from the Senate because of illness. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez] is detained on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE FOR LEGISLATIVE ESTABLISHMENT (S. DOC. NO. 26)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the legislative establishment, Architect of the Capitol, for the fiscal year 1939, in the amount of $1,200, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

DECEMBER 1938 REPORT OF THE R. F. C.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, reporting, pursuant to law, on the activities and expenditures of the Corporation for the month of December 1938, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

FINANCIAL REPORTS OF THE CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate letters from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting, pursuant to law, a corrected statement of the receipts and expenditures of the company for the full year 1938, together with a comparative general balance sheet of the company for the same year, which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the House of Representatives of the State of Colorado, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas it is to the best interests of the people of the State of Colorado and to the people of the United States that the Congress of the United States liberalize and enlarge the provisions of the Social Security Act to establish increased Federal grants for assistance to aged persons in need; and for assistance to aged persons in need; and Whereas said benefits can be accomplished by amendments to the Social Security Act increasing the allotment of matching funds to the States to be used for such purpose: Now, therefore, be it to the States to be used for such purpose: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the thirty-second general assembly (the senate concurring herein), That this general assembly memorialize the Congress of the United States to take such action as will accomplish the purpose of this resolution; be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in the Congress of the United States be requested to give their support to any measure that will increase the grants-in-aid to the States for the purpose of assistance to aged persons in need, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Colorado in the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of petitions from William H. Shenners, Jr., executive secretary, Wisconsin Democratic State Central Committee, and Maurice Fitzsimons, Jr., chairman, Democratic legislative caucus, both of Madison, Wis., praying for a public hearing on the nomination of Thomas R. Amlie to be a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and also that they be advised thereof so that due opportunity may be had for the presentation of testimony, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from F. D. Cowdery, of New York City, praying that the proposed reduction in the W. P. A. appropriation be sustained by the Senate, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of petitions from several citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the appropriation of $875,000,000 for the W. P. A., as recommended by the President, which were ordered to lie on

He also laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of petitions from the Office Staff Teachers Union, Ann Barish, Mable Smith, and other citizens, all of New York City, praying for the appropriation of $875,000,000 for the W. P. A., as recommended by the President, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from Morton Friedman, president, Works Progress Administration Local No. 1, United Federal Workers of America, Washington, D. C., relative to "two telegram forms removed from bulletin boards in W. P. A. administrative building urging W. P. A. administrative employees to petition their Senators by telegram to pass an increased appropriation and remove the ban on civil service," which were published in the RECORD, which were ordered to lie on the table.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday evening the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] had the floor. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, according to the unanimous-consent agreement, the issue before the Senate is an amendment in line 8 on page 1 of the pending joint resolution. The joint resolution as reported to the Senate proposes to appropriate $725,000,000. A motion has been made to amend that item by striking out "$725,000,000" and making it read "$875,000,000." When the vote comes on the amendment, I shall vote for it, but I do not desire to take the time of the Senate to discuss the particular amendment. I wish to call attention to another phase of this so-called relief issue.

Before I shall enter into the discussion which I contemplate. I desire to submit for the RECORD some extracts from current periodicals. First, I send to the desk and ask that the clerk may read portions of a news article by Roger W. Babson. I will ask that those portions of the article marked may be read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Washington Government has spent $62,000,000,000 in the last 10 years. Barring only the World War, this equals the entire amount spent from the day George Washington became our first Fresident until Herbert Hoover stepped into the White House. Yet, President Roosevelt has just indicated that another $9,000,000 will be poured out in 1939-40. We are currently spending at the rate of $18,000 per minute, or approximately $50,000 since you began reading this article (nearly 3 minutes). I have always considered $50,000 as a fair-sized estate. How can the Government go on destroying 20 fortunes every hour, 500 every day, 180,000 every year?

SUPPORTING 25,000,000

Last year, public spending, including not only the Federal but the State, county, and local governments, totaled $17,000,000,000. This represented more than 25 percent of the national income. Add up the number of individuals getting support from the Government. My figures show 25,000,000. One person out of every six gets his livelihood from the Government. There are only 51,000,000 workers who should be gainfully employed. This means that every private wage earner is not only supporting his family, but another person on the public pay roll.

HALF THE BILLS UNPAID

Yet, with all our taxes, we are only paying half the current cost of Government. The other half is being borrowed and left for our children to pay. The Federal Government has borrowed $24,000,000,000 in the last 10 years. How much money State, county, and local governments have borrowed I cannot say. The interest on this new debt alone is $500,000,000 a year, or more than the Government spent in any year prior to 1900, except during the Civil War. Yet, there are no convincing signs of a letdown in this wild orgy of spending. Despite the economy talk on Capitol Hill a balanced Budget is further off today than ever.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on January 8 the Washington Star had an editorial entitled "Our Debts." I send to the desk the editorial referred to and ask that the clerk read that part which is marked.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

When the United States started its dizzy plunge into the economic ill health of 1929, it was estimated as closely as can be done with any accuracy that the total of our outstanding indebtedness of all kinds was about $250,000,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will ask that the remaining portions marked be placed in the RECORD, but I will not ask that they be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

At the present time, or at the beginning of the present fiscal ear, the total of indebtedness was at just about this same level of $250,000,000,000.

of $250,000,000,000.

In the intervening 8 years, however, important changes had occurred in the character of this debt. For instance, in comparing a few of the major items, it is found that public debt, as represented by outstanding securities of Federal, State, and local governments, rose from $32,000,000,000 in 1929 to $53,000,000,000 in 1937; corporate debt rose from $47,000,000,000 to $50,000,000,000, and insurance company debts in the form of cash values of outstanding policies moved up from $12,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000. Off-setting these increases, however, was a drop in mortgage indebtedness from $40,000,000,000 to $35,000,000,000, and in short-term debts to banks and corporations from $53,000,000,000,000 to $30,000,000,000, and a drop from something more than $5,000,000,000,000 in withdrawable shares of building and loan associations to less in withdrawable shares of building and loan associations to less than $4,000,000,000. At the same time deposits in commercial and mutual savings banks dipped, but returned to their earlier level of about $56,000,000,000, and miscellaneous unmeasurable items held at about $7,000,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on January 22 the Dallas Morning News printed an editorial entitled "Thoughts on $40,000,000,000." I send the editorial to the desk and ask that one paragraph be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

[From the Dallas Morning News of January 22, 1939]

At the present time the national debt threatens to reach $40,-000,000,000 by the end of this fiscal year. The current year's deficit is estimated at $9,000,000,000 and the President recommends that this be continued, not curtailed. You remember the A. E. F. story about the doughboy who was told that Pershing intended to take Metz if it cost him 100,000 men. "Huh!" said the doughboy, "liberal so-and-so, ain't he?" The next generation may say that of 1003 20 generation. that of 1933-39 spending.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, recently the United States Chamber of Commerce appointed a committee of experts to consider the Federal debt and expenditures. A report has been made. I have a copy of it. On page 26 I find some figures which I think should be in the RECORD. The figures are in regard to the Federal revenues, expenditures, and deficits. I ask that the printed matter on page 26 may be placed in the RECORD at this point in my address.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I propose to try to show that the present condition of the country is due to the management of our monetary policy.

In this connection I send to the desk and ask to have read a portion of a report submitted by the Master Cotton Spinners' Association, Ltd., of Manchester, England. I ask that the portion marked on page 4 may be read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

It is currency devaluation in commodities, not devaluation in gold, that determines the measure of United States recovery. Gold has increased in commodity value since 1926 by over 100 percent, and by over 20 percent since April 1933. Rigid revaluation of the dollar at 60 percent of the 1926 gold value obviously prevents any further substantial recovery in wholesale prices toward the 1926 level. Clearly, also, the existing price level is far too low for full-scale profitable enterprise in farming and in the staple manufacturing industries. At this price level gold reserves and deposit-bank reserves will remain frozen no matter how high they pile up in amount.

bank reserves will remain from the up in amount.

With adequate devaluation of the dollar in commodities, the Roosevelt government could abandon all N. R. A. restrictions with equanimity and in full confidence that the existing price disequilibrium would be automatically righted, that national finances would be strengthened, and that the unemployed would be rapidly resheared.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, on December 29 an eminent economist, Dr. Lewis H. Haney, of New York University, made an address at Detroit, on the subject Our Great Need of a Standard of Value. I desire to read a few sentences from the address.

On page 3 I find this statement:

But in order to measure anything, we must have a standard.

On the same page I find this sentence:

The most fundamental source of our economic troubles today, is monetary uncertainty.

On page 5 I find these two sentences:

Economic democracy is founded upon a standard of value. By economic democracy, I mean "the price system."

On page 10 I find this paragraph.

In this connection, I desire to go on record as predicting that we will never pay our public debt in full.

This is Dr. Lewis H. Haney, of New York University, speaking—one of the eminent economists of our day and one of the writers in our financial publications.

Dr. Haney says, still further:

It will be paid in terms of dollars, but perhaps in terms of 50-cent dollars. The longer we wait, the greater the waste, and the greater the total loss. The longer we wait, the less possible it will be to settle up without the pressure which comes as a result of a financial collapse.

On page 13 I find the sentence I am about to read. Of course Dr. Haney is referring to and recommending that we return to the old orthodox gold standard. He recommends that we coin dollars in gold of the present weight and fineness, and use our fourteen and a half billion dollars' of gold for this coinage purpose. Then he recommends that we print paper money against the gold and make the paper money convertible into gold at the will of the holder of such money. So upon that recommendation Dr. Haney makes this statement:

This requires that the paper dollar be kept the same in purchasing power with the gold dollar; and the only way in which that can be done, is to allow and encourage a reasonable freedom of conversion between paper dollars and gold bullion.

Mr. President, it is admitted by those who claim to know that we have two dollars in this country today. We have the domestic dollar, which is the paper dollar. We have the foreign dollar, which is an exchange dollar. The exchange dollar in value a gold dollar. The paper dollar is a commodity dollar in value. These two dollars are not of the same value. Dr. Haney makes that admission in the closing part of his address.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. What is the difference in value between the commodity dollar and the exchange dollar?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There is no way to determine the value of the commodity dollar as measured in gold, because it is not convertible into gold. Every exchange dollar is based upon gold. Every exchange dollar is worth exactly 15521 grains of gold nine-tenths fine.

Let me say in passing that the United States has the only unit of money based upon gold, definitely and fixed. There is no other nation in the world that has its monetary unit based upon a fixed quantity of gold. We have that sort of a unit. So today the United States has the hitching post for all the currencies of the world; and today the currency of every nation is valued in terms of dollars, ours being the only definitely valued dollar in the world.

Mr. President, if I am correct, and if Dr. Haney is correct, that we have two dollars in this country—a domestic dollar and an exchange dollar—and these two dollars not of the same value, then we must admit that the commodity dollar is changing in value from time to time. That makes for instability. Dr. Haney argues for stability, and to bring about that result he recommends that we go back to a gold basis.

Mr. President, it is admitted that the present dollar is not a stable dollar. The kind of dollar we have here in the United States changes in value. If that is true, let me ask this question: How may we have stability when the yard-stick—that is, a dollar—by which we measure stability is itself unstable? There is no chance for stability when the thing by which we measure stability is itself unstable; and that is the condition in which we find ourselves today.

Mr. President, the resolution (H. J. Res. 83) now pending before the Senate proposes to make "an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939," in the sum of $725,000,000.

However much I regret the necessity for my act when the final vote is had, I shall vote for the resolution.

The Congress is the policy-making branch of our Government. Hence, for whatever is in the domain of government we must assume responsibility.

This debate in the Senate has been limited to the issue of the proper amount of money which should be appropriated. Little, if anything, has been said about the governmental policy or policies which have and are making this appropriation necessary.

This depression is now over 9 years of age. Since October 1929 we have increased our national debt from some sixteen to almost forty billion dollars. The States, counties, cities, and other units of government have increased their debts, if not correspondingly, then immensely.

This resolution when passed will provide no remedy for existing conditions. The funds appropriated, admittedly necessary, will do no more than provide a degree of shelter, fuel, and food for a portion of our unfortunate and distressed people.

When this appropriation shall have been made a new demand and a new recommendation will come to the Congress for still further appropriations to meet similar and continuing needs during the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, why does this depression linger on?

Why are economic conditions such as to make this appropriation necessary?

Is there not something that may be done to better existing conditions?

What is the answer?

During the time that I shall impose myself upon the Senate I shall undertake to give my answer. That answer is that our financial policy is out of harmony with economic conditions and the fixed overhead charges now resting upon the backs of our people.

It is reported that we are annually spending for government—Federal, State, counties, cities, and smaller units—a sum in excess of $17,000,000,000.

If this is correct, then one-fourth of our total annual national income is being expended for government.

It is estimated that the massed debts of all the people total some $250,000,000,000.

If this is correct, and should the annual interest rate be 5 percent, then the total annual interest bill is some $12,500,000,000.

If these reports and estimates are even approximately correct, then we see that the total bill for government and for interest is almost $30,000,000,000.

It cannot be denied that governmental costs, relief expenses, and interest charges are fixed or near fixed charges upon the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. President, it is utterly impossible for the people to meet the costs of government, the needs for relief, the interest charges, and maturing debts upon the present price level.

When the people cannot meet their fixed charges and maturing debts, it is obvious that they have no money for luxuries or even common necessities.

Such conditions confront millions of our people today.

Again I ask, What is the cause of such conditions?

It will take a little time to make my analysis, give my reply, and to suggest a remedy.

At the outset I assert that the dollar is too highly valued. Measured in commodities and property, the dollar is now worth 130 cents.

Highly valued dollars mean low prices, low incomes, unemployment, and depression.

The burden I assume at this hour is to show the relation between the value of the dollar and prices, income, business, and prosperity.

The dollar is the unit of our monetary system. The dollar is a measure of value and our medium of exchange. The value of the dollar controls prices, and prices control income and prosperity.

Today, having no gold in circulation and silver dollars being only token dollars, the unit of our money is the paper dollar. Gold today is available only to goldsmiths and dentists for commercial purposes and to foreign governments holding balances against the United States.

Today our unit—the paper dollar—being neither based upon nor redeemable in either gold or silver, is in fact a commodity dollar.

MONEY IN CIRCULATION

We now have in common circulation the following kinds of dollars:

Standard silver dollars worth intrinsically some 35 cents, silver certificates, United States notes, and Federal Reserve notes.

Silver certificates are the only class of our money which may be redeemed. Formerly silver certificates were redeemable in silver dollars, but more recently these certificates state on their face—

That there is on deposit in the Treasury of the United States of America one dollar in silver payable to the bearer on demand.

Literally construed, this promise means that upon presentation of a silver certificate for redemption, the Treasury will weigh out a dollar's worth of silver, which at present prices would be some 2½ ounces of fine silver.

However, under the law our Government redeems dollars with other dollars—probably of the same kind.

Today our monetary system is about 150 years old, and under the present system business is about as chaotic as was business in the Colonies and in the new States prior to the adoption of a definite monetary system in the early days of the new Republic.

HISTORY OF THE DOLLAR

Before discussing further the commodity dollar, let me refer briefly to the history of the unit of our currency.

In the colonial days each colony had its own money system. When the war for independence came on it was necessary to have a unit of money which would be accepted by and circulate in and among the Colonies, and the Spanish milled dollar was the unit agreed upon.

On July 6, 1785, the Continental Congress by resolution declared that the money unit of the United States should be a dollar.

On August 8, 1786, the Continental Congress by resolution fixed the weight of the dollar at 375.64 grains of fine silver.

Upon the adoption of the Constitution it was provided that the Congress should have power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof.

On April 15, 1790, the House of Representatives requested the Secretary of the Treasury to investigate and report on the advisability of the establishment of a mint.

On April 28, 1791, Alexander Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury, in obedience to the request of the House of Representatives, submitted his report, and in that report the Secretary recommended:

First. That both gold and silver be used as basic primary money:

Second. That the unit in our money of account shall be a dollar:

Third. That the gold dollar "ought to correspond with 24 grains and three-fourths of a grain of pure gold";

Fourth. That the silver dollar ought to correspond with 371 grains and one-fourth grain of pure silver; and Fifth. That the alloy in each case should be one-twelfth of the total weight, making the gold dollar 27 grains of standard gold and the silver dollar 405 grains of standard silver.

Whatever may be said of Alexander Hamilton, the first Secretary of the Treasury, it cannot be said with truth that he did not understand the money question.

As to the importance of the value of the dollar upon prices, income, business, and prosperity, I call as my first witness no other than Alexander Hamilton.

On the establishment of a mint, the creation of a monetary unit, and what the fixing of the value therefor involves, Hamilton said:

The general state of debtor and creditor; all the relations and consequences of price; the essential interests of trade and industry; the value of all property; the whole income, both of the State and of individuals, are liable to be sensibly influenced, beneficially or otherwise, by the judicious or injudicious regulation of this interesting object.

As to the effect upon prices of any considerable change in the amount of real money in circulation, I again call Alexander Hamilton to testify in support of the position I assert and maintain.

I contend that the same economic law which controls the price of corn, wheat, and cotton likewise controls the value of the dollar.

When either corn, wheat, or cotton is plentiful the price of such commodity is low, but when either such commodity is scarce, the price is high. The statement of this economic principle needs neither illustration nor explanation.

In Hamilton's time the trading nations of the world were on bimetallic standards, with 1 ounce of pure gold being equal to the value of some 15 ounces of pure silver, making the ratio approximately 15 to 1.

In the early days, gold and silver coins circulated in the Colonies and in the new States on this approximate ratio. To have denied the coins of either metal recognition as money would have restricted and curtailed the number of money units, with the effects stated by Hamilton as follows:

To annul the use of either of the metals, as money, is to abridge the quantity of circulating medium and is liable to all the objec-tions which arise from a comparison of the benefits of a full, with the evils of a scanty, circulation.

Secretary Hamilton, in his report to the Congress, recommended that the dollar be made the unit of our currency; that we adopt the bimetallic standard of gold and silver; that the value of the dollar controls prices, and that prices control income and prosperity, and, further, he committed himself and his Department to the quantitative theory of money. In this latter commitment he followed the authorities of the

On April 2, 1792, the Congress acted on the Hamilton report and passed legislation defining the-

Dollars, or units, each to be of the value of a Spanish milled dollar, as the same is now current, and to contain 371 grains and four sixteenths parts of a grain of pure or 416 grains of standard

Thus it will be seen that the first legal unit of our currency was the silver dollar, and the weight of such silver dollar has never been changed from the amount of pure silver recommended by Alexander Hamilton.

PRESIDENT JACKSON DEVALUED GOLD DOLLAR

The weight of the gold dollar was changed twice during the administration of President Andrew Jackson.

By the act of June 28, 1834, the weight was reduced by 1.2 grains of standard gold, and by the act of January 18, 1837. the pure gold content of the dollar was changed again slightly, the new gold dollar containing 23.22 grains of pure gold, or 25.8 grains, nine-tenths fine, was to become and remain the gold dollar for 100 years, and from the administration of Andrew Jackson to the administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

While the weight of the silver dollar has never been changed, the act of Congress of 1873 demonetized silver as one of our two monetary metals.

The passage of the Silver Demonetizing Act of February 12. 1873, had the precise effect upon prices and prosperity as predicted by Secretary Hamilton in his report of 1791.

When silver was demonetized, silver coinage was stopped and the legal-tender privileges were practically annulled, and such curtailment of the supply of money brought on a major panic and depression.

With the demonetizing of silver by the United States, gold soon became the basic and primary monetary metal of the leading trading and commercial nations of the world.

By the act of March 14, 1900, the gold dollar became the single metallic standard for all the currency of the United States. In the meantime all nations came to accept gold as the basis for international exchange.

GOLD HAS INCREASED IN VALUE

In the 100 years from 1834 to 1933 the production of gold did not keep pace with the demand for gold and as a result the value of gold, in terms of property, increased materially.

The World War brought about, in many nations, a vast increase of debt and, consequently, a vast increase in taxes. In every such country, to meet increased debts and heavier taxes, more money was demanded.

It was soon discovered that the world's supply of gold was inadequate to support the then gold standard currencies at the existing weights of the several national units.

Nation after nation went off gold. Some nations devalued their units and tried to remain on a gold standard but in the end they all failed.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT DEVALUED GOLD DOLLAR

By the act of May 12, 1933, the President was given power to reduce the gold content of the dollar by as much as

On January 31, 1934, acting under the authority granted, the President, by Executive order, reduced the weight of the gold dollar by some 40 percent, or from 25.8 grains, nine-tenths fine, to 151/21 grains. Hence, today, while we have no gold coins or gold bars in circulation, yet our theoretical gold dollar contains 155/21 grains of gold nine-tenths

All United States dollars used in foreign exchange are, in effect, gold dollars and all dollars used domestically are, in effect, commodity dollars, for the obvious reasons:

First. Exchange dollars are based upon and backed by Second. Domestic dollars are based upon and supported by commodities; and Third. Such dollars may be redeemed only in commodities or in some form of property or in other currency dollars.

Under existing law the President has the power further to reduce the weight of the gold dollar from 15 1/21 grains to 12.9 grains. When and should this be done, the new gold dollar will be just one-half as heavy as the old gold dollar which served our Nation for 100 years.

So much for the history of our monetary system.

So far I have been discussing the kind of a dollar we have had from the beginning of our Government to the present

KINDS OF MONEY

Two monetary questions still confront us. The firstwhat kind of money do we have today and, second, what kind of money should we have tomorrow?

According to the latest available reports, January 20, 1939, we now have gold in our Treasury to the value of $14,619,-710,929, and in addition to the gold we have some $547,-079,218 coined standard silver dollars of which $40,962,394 are in circulation and some $1,586,976,416 silver certificates are outstanding.

The silver dollars in circulation, plus the silver certificates in circulation, plus our silver stock, against which no money has been issued, makes a total stock of silver money in the sum of $1,694,346,685.

By adding the stocks of gold and silver we find we have some $16,314,057,614 in recognized monetary metals.

Against this stock of monetary metal on January 18, 1939, we had in circulation the sum of $6,666,000,000; hence, it is seen that we could issue almost $10,000,000,000 in additional currency and have a dollar's worth of gold or silver back of each dollar now in circulation and back of each new dollar which might be placed in circulation.

NO INFLATION

During recent years we have heard much about inflation. Inflation is the printing and issuing of irredeemable paper money into circulation.

Under this definition there can be no real inflation in the United States until we have increased our money in circulation to the total sum of $16,314,057,614.

Under existing law, paper money may be issued upon 40 percent gold and 60 percent of liquid assets and upon this legal basis we have a gold stock sufficient to back over $35,000,000,000 of paper money.

From this analysis it is clear that there is no danger from the bugaboo of inflation in the immediate future.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator from Oklahoma would state the amount of money we could have in circulation without inflation.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will use January 24 instead of today in giving the figures. On January 24 we had in the Treasury the sum of $14,625,113,081.74 in gold. Those are the latest available figures.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Will the Senator state about what proportion of the gold of the world the $14,000,000,000 the United States now has in the Treasury represents?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, of course, no one knows how much gold there is in the world. Before devaluation it was estimated we had between eleven and twelve billion dollars. After devaluation the estimate was raised to $21,000,000,000. If $21,000,000,000 is a fair estimate of the amount of monetary gold in the world, then we have fourteen and one-half billion of that $21,000,000,000, or over two-thirds of all the monetary gold in the world.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to interrupt the Senator, from whom I have gathered from time to time much information on the question of money. We observe the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. Pittman] present in the Chamber. We all recall with what incessant labor he has fought to preserve what he felt to be the rights of silver. I now wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will be good enough, in addition to the definition he made with respect to the gold dollar, to state what he terms a silver dollar to be and what is its value?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Formerly our silver certificates were redeemable in silver dollars. Formerly one could take a silver certificate to the Treasury and it could be redeemed with a standard silver dollar. But since the silver purchase program was passed in 1934 the Treasury Department has changed the wording used on the silver certificate, so today a silver certificate is not redeemable in a silver dollar but in a dollar in silver. I construe that to mean literally that if you should take a silver certificate to the Treasury and ask that it be redeemed, the Treasury would weigh you out $1 worth of silver, which at present prices would be something like 2½ ounces of silver.

Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; it gives me a viewpoint, Mr. President. I thank the Senator. I was not clear on that particular point. I wanted to have it clarified.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I wish to state again that under the law the Federal Reserve System is authorized to issue Federal Reserve notes on the basis of 40 percent of gold and 60 percent of commodities—that is, commodities in the form of liquid assets. By "liquid assets" is meant a note, bond, or security that can be converted readily into money.

Mr. LEWIS. Some of my colleagues and myself are still in the dark and should like to ascertain the able Senator's view with respect to a certain matter. What is the difference between a dollar's worth of silver and a silver dollar in value?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. A silver dollar weighs less than 1 ounce. The weight of the silver dollar has never been changed since the days of the Colonies. In the colonial days a Spanish-milled dollar contained 371½ grains of fine silver. The standard silver dollar today contains exactly that much fine silver. It is not an ounce. An ounce of silver will coin $1.29. In other words, an ounce of silver will make $1.29 in silver dollars. That is the monetary value of silver. That is not its commercial value, but its monetary value. So, a silver dollar is not an ounce of silver. Under present prices a silver dollar intrinsically is worth only 35 cents. If silver is worth 43 cents an ounce, it would require some 2½ ounces of silver to be worth $1. Hence intrinsically 2½ ounces of silver is worth $1, and a standard silver dollar is worth 35 cents.

Mr. LEWIS. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I wish to say again that under present law we have enough gold legally to back $35,000,000,000,000 of paper money. We have enough gold and silver to back 100 percent, dollar for dollar, over $16,000,000,000 of paper money. The facts are that on yesterday we had in circulation only $6,623,000,000 of all kinds of money. We have ample gold and silver to back approximately $10,000,000,000 more of paper money, and then have in the Treasury a dollar's worth of gold—not 40-percent gold and 60-percent liquid assets, but a dollar's worth of gold, or a dollar's worth of silver measured in terms of gold—to back every dollar of that paper money. And yet when someone suggests that we could issue some United States notes, it is said that that would be inflation. We would have to issue $10,000,000,000,000 of new

United States notes before we reached the time when we could not redeem each of those notes with a dollar's worth of gold or silver.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the dollar was devalued to 59 cents, is it not true that under the practices of the Treasury the volume of money was not substantially increased at all? There is relatively about the same amount of money now outstanding as there was formerly.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. When the dollar was cut 40 percent, it was thought we would reduce the value of the dollar by 40 percent. When we took 40 percent of the gold from the dollar, we made it 40 percent lighter; 40 percent smaller. Gold is said to have intrinsic value. Then, by reducing the size of the gold nugget which we call a dollar, it was obvious to the public that we were cheapening the dollar by 40 percent. The results which were anticipated did not follow. At that time we had forty billions of deposits in the banks of the Nation. If by devaluing the dollar by 40 percent we had reduced the value of the dollar by 40 percent, we would by that act have killed, destroyed, and canceled 40 percent of the value of $40,000,000,000.

After devaluation prices did not rise greatly in the United States, except on world commodities. Prices did rise on world commodities. Wheat jumped up. Wheat is a world commodity. Cotton jumped up in price. Cotton is a world commodity. But how about domestic commodities? Take automobiles for illustration. Before the devaluation one could buy a very good car for a thousand dollars. After devaluation he could buy a better car for a thousand dollars. The prices of cars did not increase. The prices of clothing have not increased. Only the prices of world commodities increased. So the devaluation of the dollar in terms of gold operates effectively only on world commodities and does not operate correspondingly on domestic commodities.

When we passed the monetary legislation in 1933 the dollar had a value of 167 cents in terms of commodities. That meant that a farmer, or miner, or oil producer, or lumberman, or fisherman had to produce and dispose of 167 cents worth of commodities to obtain a dollar to pay a dollar's worth of taxes, or to pay a dollar's worth of debts, or a dollar's worth of interest. They did not do it. They could not do it. Because of such conditions prices were the lowest in generations.

We started to cheapen the dollar, to raise prices. We thought we were doing it. We did cheapen world commodities. After we devalued the gold dollar the foreigner could take $600 of the old gold dollars and buy a thousand dollars of American currency, and with that thousand dollars he could buy a thousand-dollar car. We did cheapen wheat and things of that character by 40 percent to foreigners, but not here in America.

Two monetary questions still confront us: First, what kind of money do we have today? Second, what kind of money should we have tomorrow?

During recent years we have heard much about inflation. I have just given a definition of inflation. Inflation is the printing and issuing into circulation of irredeemable paper money. We cannot print and issue into circulation irredeemable paper money until we have printed $10,000,000,000,000 more and placed that in circulation. So, under the definition of inflation, there can be no inflation until we have printed as much as $10,000,000,000 new, additional paper money and placed that in circulation. Then if we keep the laws upon the statute books that we now have, and issue paper money on the basis of 40 percent gold and 60 percent liquid assets, there can be no inflation until we have printed and issued into circulation more than $35,000,000,000 of money.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. May I inquire of the Senator what, in his opinion, the effect on the credit of the Government would be if it were to issue the $10,000,000,000 in additional currency to which the Senator has referred, and with that sum redeem outstanding Government obligations in order to stop the interest thereon?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, that question cannot be answered in one sentence. It is my judgment that if we should issue $10,000,000,000 of new paper money and place that money in circulation, the buying power of our paper money would be very greatly reduced. When money is plentiful it becomes cheap. Germany has inflated twice, and reduced the value of the German mark to nothing. It is possible to put so much money into circulation that one could not carry enough money to buy his breakfast. No one is in favor of that kind of inflation. The only kind of expansion I am in favor of is the placing of enough money in circulation to get the dollar down and prices up so that we can balance the Budget, so that the people can live, so that they can pay their interest and pay their debts and make some money. That result has not been accomplished in 9 years. It cannot be done on the present value of the dollar.

In 1933 we started to cheapen the dollar. We cut the gold content by 40 percent. If we take 167 cents, the value of the dollar in 1933, and multiply it by 40 percent, we get 67. Subtracting 67 from 167 leaves a 100-cent dollar. Some so-called economists must have thought that by cutting 40 percent of the gold out of the dollar we would reduce the value of the dollar back to 100 cents. What we did did not have that effect. We did start to cheapen the dollar, but the task has not been completed.

It is my judgment that of all the relief programs we have passed in Congress the silver-buying program has brought more relief to the people of America than all the rest of such programs combined. Under that program we have placed more than a billion dollars of new money in circulation. That money is now in circulation. It is not retired. Nobody pays any interest on that money. It is based upon silver, not upon the monetary value of silver, but the real value of silver. There is a dollar's worth of silver, measured in terms of gold, back of each dollar in circulation. So, of all the money in circulation today, the best we have is the silver certificate. It is the only money we have that has something definitely back of it and the only money that may be redeemed.

From this analysis, Mr. President, it is clear that there is no danger from the bugaboo of inflation in the immediate future.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Government should issue $10,-000,000,000 additional paper money against the $10,000,000,000,000 in gold in the Treasury, in order to avoid the effect of that additional money being inflation to that extent, would it be necessary to make that paper money redeemable in gold?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, we could issue greenbacks or Treasury notes, which, of course, are backed by all the property of all the people, plus the earning power of all the people in the United States. So it is my judgment the Treasury notes, greenbacks, so-called, are the best form of currency.

If we should issue some kind of money against this surplus gold, in my judgment, we should only put enough of that money in circulation in the form of certificates to bring the price level up to where it ought to be. I am not in favor of raising prices to the point they were after the World War. There is no occasion at the present time to have wheat selling at $3 a bushel or cotton at 44 cents a pound. I am not for such a proposal, but I want cotton to sell around 20 cents a pound and wheat around $1.50 a bushel.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The point concerning which I wish to develop the Senator's idea is whether in issuing additional money against the gold—and I am in accord with that view—it is necessary in any way to tie that new money on to the gold in the vaults?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Not at all. Treasury notes are based upon and backed by all the property of all the people. All the gold we have is back of our Treasury notes; all the unallocated silver we have is back of our Treasury notes; all the farm lands, all the factories, all the property of America are back of our Treasury notes. We can issue those notes and place them in circulation to make money a little more plentiful, a little cheaper, and that will raise prices to the point where the Nation can survive.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President-

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield now to my colleague from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, the Senator said that he would issue money but did not want inflation. I agree with that; but what barometer would the Senator establish to determine when we had reached the proper level?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Every nation in the world measures value according to a set of statistics. All these years we have measured value in this country according to the index prepared by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. That set of statistics is made up of 784 commodities. Each week the Bureau ascertains the price of a fixed quantity of each of those commodities; the prices of the 784 commodities are added, and then an average is taken. If the average is up, that means the dollar has gone down; if the average is down, that means the dollar has gone up in buying power. We measure the value of money by this system of statistics, and every nation in the world has a similar set of statistics by which it measures the value of its money.

Mr. LEE. That is called the "all-commodity index," is it not?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is the proper name for it; yes, sir.

Mr. LEE. And according to that index now, the dollar is worth how much?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It is worth 130 cents.

Mr. LEE. Then, if we issue sufficient money to bring its value back to 100 cents, that could not possibly be inflation; it would be reflation, would it not, until it reached the 100-percent level?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Exactly so.

Mr. LEE. Then, if the value of the dollar should pass that level, from that point on there would be inflation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. It could be construed as inflation according to one definition.

Mr. LEE. But it could not be inflation, at least, until the 100-percent mark was reached?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The inquiry submitted by my colleague suggests the question of what the public believes inflation to be. The public believes inflation to be rising prices. When prices start up the public understands that condition is being brought about by inflation of the dollar, which means cheapening the dollar. As I have said, at the present time we could bring the dollar down to 100 cents, and that would be, to that extent, inflation as the public believes, but it would not be inflation according to the dictionary meaning of inflation.

In 1933 the dollar was at 167 cents. We cheapened the dollar through devaluation and through the broader use of silver, together with the liberalization of credit, and we got the dollar down to 112 cents in March 1937. At that time we thought we were getting out of the depression, and we did not think it would be necessary to make any appropriation for relief to tide us through the next year. We thought that unemployment was being taken care of; business was becoming good; prices were going up slowly; and, of course, the dollar was falling. Then the bond-holding class and the big banking class became alarmed lest prices were going to go too high, lest their dollars were going to become too cheap, and so, obviously, they came to Washington and secured action on the part of somebody or a number of somebodies until that trend was stopped and the dollar did not fall any lower than $1.12. When the money managers changed the trend the dollar started back up again; when the dollar started up prices began to fall, and we had a second depression beginning in March 1937, when the dollar was worth 112 cents. The dollar has gone back from 112 cents until on the 21st of the present month it was worth 130.5 cents. The dollar is now slowly going up in value.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will my colleague yield further?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. LEE. I am sure that my colleague agrees with me that after it reaches a certain point the Government should then, by the contraction of credit or by one method or another, prevent further movement to cheapen the dollar. Regardless of what definition each person may apply to it, I wish to say that I am in full accord with the distinguished Senator's views as to placing sufficient money in circulation to bring the dollar to the hundred-cent level and hold it there.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall cover that in the remainder of my address, but I may say, in passing, that I am in favor of a revaluation of the dollar or an adjustment of its value to 100 cents. That was the value of the dollar in the Coolidge administration, when we had an era of so-called Coolidge prosperity. At that time we had a dollar measured in terms of commodities and property which was valued at 100 cents. At that time we were collecting more money in taxes than we were spending. We were applying the surplus money to the retirement of the national debt. The national debt was reduced from $26,000,000,000 in 1920 to $16,000,-000,000 in 1930, and it was done by having good times and high prices. People made money. They paid their taxes. We paid the expenses of the Government and applied the surplus to the retirement of our national debt, so that in 10 years' time we reduced the national debt to the extent of $1,000,000,000 a year. I want to go back to that time. should like to see the dollar revalued on the same basis that it was valued in that era, namely, at a hundred cents. That would bring wheat back to a price of approximately $1.50 a bushel; it would bring cotton back to a price, possibly, of 20 cents a pound, and other commodities in proportion. If we can get those prices reestablished in this country, we have ample tax laws to raise all the money that we should spend, and, with a dollar valued at a hundred cents in terms of commodities, we could get rid of this depression; we could get rid of the unemployment situation and raise all the money we need to spend for every necessary purpose.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. Is it not true that one of the troubles now with our international trade is the difficulty that foreign governments have in buying dollars? Is it not true that they have sent practically all their gold to the United States, which has already been converted into dollars? So, in case we should issue new currency, would not the increased supply facilitate foreign trade by making it easier for foreign nations to acquire American dollars?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The reason gold is coming to this country is the reason assigned by the distinguished Senator from Texas. Foreigners must have dollars to buy goods in America, and dollars are so scarce and the demand for them is so great that the dollar constantly tends to go up in terms of buying power.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator one further question, if he will bear with me—

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that whenever we buy gold—and we are buying all the gold that is tendered, as I understand, and have been for some time—every time we buy gold we have got to pay for it in dollars? In order to get those dollars, the Treasury has been issuing bonds, and we are paying interest on those bonds in order to get the money with which to buy the gold and take it out in the country and bury it? Would it not have been entirely sound, instead of issuing bonds, to have issued money, because for every dollar we have spent for gold we got a dollar's worth of gold in exchange? We could double the volume of the currency now outstanding, and yet have more than a hundred percent of gold in the vaults and pay for every dollar of outstanding paper money and do away with the payment of interest on four or five billion dollars?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I think the Senator's statement is eminently correct. Let me show what this gold policy is doing to the world. All exchange throughout the world is based on gold. When any bank issues a bill of exchange or a draft on some foreign bank there has to be gold back of that draft. So to the extent that exchange is issued there must be gold back of the exchange. Gold is coming to America. We now have more than two-thirds of all the gold of the world. We are draining the gold of the world to America. That makes gold scarcer in foreign countries, and when gold is made scarcer in foreign countries, gold becomes more valuable in those countries. When it comes here, we put the gold in quarantine, so to speak, take it to Kentucky, where it goes back in the ground, and such gold is dead at least for the time being. The gold does us no good, but the scarcity of gold, because of its coming to America, is injuring foreign nations and gold from day to day is increasing in value in terms of property. So long as these policies are continued gold will still keep on going up in terms of property. That will mean that prices will go further down unless the United States further devalues its gold unit and in addition places more currency in circulation.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. NEELY. Earlier in the Senator's address he stated that the present value of the exchange dollar in terms of commodities is now $1.30.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. NEELY. I assume that the Senator means in commodities as of the price of today.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The present price of commodities based upon the average over many years.

Mr. NEELY. What I wish to know is this: Is the present valuation determined upon the basis of a comparison of the price of commodities in the United States today with the price of commodities in the United States in 1926 or some other year?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Exactly so; that is correct. Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I am glad to yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator speaks of issuing money—gold certificates, we will say—secured by the gold on deposit in Kentucky. In the Senator's judgment, what form would those certificates take? Would they be like our silver certificates? Would a gold $20 bill, for instance, say that it was payable on demand to the holder of the certificate?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, answering the Senator's question, and referring to the daily statement of the United States Treasury, I find that on the 24th of this month we had the sum of $688,943,367.53 of gold that was not in any way allocated. Nobody has any claim on that gold excepting the people of the United States. It is in the Treasury with no certificates against it. It is there as free gold. It would be easy to issue a form of money against that unallocated, unclaimed, free gold to the extent of practically $700,000,000. But answering further, it is my contention that we may issue United States notes backed by this gold, backed by the other gold, backed by all the farms, all the factories, all the railroads, all the people, plus their earning power: and I contend that United States notes constitute a better form of money than even gold certificates backed dollar for dollar by gold.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I pursue my question just a little further?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the Government should decide to issue gold certificates in lieu of the gold on deposit either in the Treasury or elsewhere, just so the Government has it and has the ownership of it. Would a gold $20 bill, let us say, provide that upon presentation of the certificate 20 gold dollars would be paid to the bearer?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That brings up the question whether or not we are to make these certificates convertible or redeemable.

Mr. NORRIS. To my mind that is quite an important question. Could we issue these gold certificates and not provide for their payment in gold upon presentation?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that there are different ways in which that could be done. In France, at one time, the authorities ceased to coin gold, but issued gold in bars, and the smallest-sized bar that they issued was a bar that cost about $8,000. French francs were redeemable in gold, but it was necessary to have $8,000 of French francs to get the smallest-sized bar used for redemption purposes. We might do the same thing in this country. That would result in having our money based upon gold and convertible, provided a man had, say, $10,000 worth of gold certificates to get the smallest-sized bar.

Mr. NORRIS. I have always been friendly to the idea of the issuance of money in place of bonds, backed by the gold that we own; but the question arises in my mind—and I think it is a practical one which would have to be solved—whether, if we did that, we should not have to provide for the redemption of the gold certificates in gold dollars; and, if we did, we might by that means lose the gold that the Government now owns.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, from my viewpoint that would be a merest incident of the problem. If we should decide to use the gold in a practical way, there are different ways in which it could be used. We could coin $10 gold pieces and $20 gold pieces, as we used to, making them, of course, smaller in size, or we could put out the gold in bars of different size and not coined at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Our object in trying to get all this gold was to prevent the gold from being exported, for instance.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. If we should issue it in the form of gold coin and put it in circulation, or in the form of gold certificates redeemable in gold, we should frustrate that object. All of it might disappear into foreign countries.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. From the practical standpoint, it is my judgment that it would not be necessary to place in circulation very much new money to raise the price level to the point where I think it should be. It would not take very much new money. It would not take $10,000,000.000. It would not take $5,000,000,000. Probably it would not take $2,000,000,000. I do not know the amount that would be required, but I would place money in circulation until we brought up the price level; and every man in the world who claims to know a thing about the money question must admit that by placing more money in circulation it is made more plentiful, and to the extent that money is made more plentiful it becomes cheaper. To the extent that it becomes cheaper, to that extent prices are raised.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President-

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Will the Senator inform us whether, in his opinion, the Government's $14,000,000,000 in gold at the present time has any sort of practical value?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Well, I am glad we have it. We can use it to liquidate our national debt; but in my judgment no good use is being made of it, except as a matter of confidence in the minds of people who have money, who have property, and great investments.

Mr. NEELY. If the store of gold down in Kentucky should be stolen and carried out and dumped into the middle of the ocean, and nobody ever were to find it out, what would be the effect on the credit of the United States or on the political economy of the United States?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. We take it for granted that the $14,500,000,000 is still in Kentucky. If it is not, and nobody should find it out, it would not make any difference. Of course, however, we know the gold is safe, and we can use it at will to reduce our national debt when we see fit to do so.

Mr. President, in this presentation I am contending that notwithstanding our vast hoard of gold and silver, we now have internally and domestically a commodity dollar. Likewise, I am contending that all nations now have commodity units of currency. By this I mean that all nations, save our own, have or are regulating the value of their monetary units in terms of price or value of their domestic products, Every nation should regulate the value of its money to suit its own domestic economy. This to date we have failed to do.

When the law was passed giving the President the power to cheapen the dollar, and thereby raise prices, our dollar was valued at 167 cents in terms of property.

This meant that in 1932-33 a farmer or any citizen had to give up 167 cents worth of goods or services to secure a dollar. It was because of this fact that prices were so low, budgets were unbalanced, and the most severe depression in history confronted us.

This law gave the President power to reduce the weight of the gold dollar; to issue additional money into circulation, and to expand the currency by a wider use of silver.

To date reducing the weight of the gold dollar has had little effect on prices save the prices of so-called world commodities, such as wheat and cotton.

For devaluation of the gold dollar to have raised domestic prices the gold taken from each dollar should have been either recoined and placed in circulation or paper currency should have been issued and circulated against such surplus gold.

By this process, gold dollars would have become more plentiful, hence cheaper, and prices would have been raised accordingly.

Nevertheless it is certain that had not the gold dollar been devalued and in the absence of our present system of commodity loans, wheat today would be selling for less than 25 cents per bushel and cotton would be selling for less than 4 cents per pound.

BENEFITS OF SILVER PROGRAM

It is my contention that since 1933 the expansion of the currency, through a wider use of silver, has been more beneficial to farmers, producers, and the people generally than any or even all other enactments or policies combined.

In 1933 we started out deliberately to cheapen the dollar and to raise prices. Through such efforts the value of the dollar was reduced from 167 cents in March 1933 to 112 cents in March 1937.

The cheapening of the dollar raised the price of wheat from some 30 cents to over $1 per bushel and raised the price of cotton from some 5 cents per pound to some 12 cents per pound.

In March 1937 the money managers decided that the dollar was becoming too cheap and that prices were getting too high, so that steps were taken to check the cheapening of the dollar and stop the rising of prices.

The action taken was effective and a new depression was the result of such action.

DOLLAR STILL TOO HIGHLY VALUED

Today, notwithstanding the gold dollar has been reduced in weight by some 40 percent, the smaller-sized gold dollar is worth 130 cents in commodities, property, and services.

Coming, as I do, from a farm and producing State and trying to represent the farmers and producers of our country, I am demanding that the dollar be reduced in value from 130 cents, its present value, to 100 cents, the average value from 1921 to 1930, when the bulk of the massed and consolidated debts, some $250,000,000,000, were contracted and which still rest upon the backs of the people of the United States.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Will the Senator be good enough to state to us the things that were done in the spring of 1937 which reversed the process of cheapening the dollar and started it back up again?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the amendment which was adopted as a part of the Agricultural Adjustment Act gave the President four powers.

He had the power, first, to issue or provide for the issuance of $3,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes. That is power No. 1.

The amendment authorized the President to issue $3,000,000,000 of Treasury notes, so-called United States notes, or greenbacks. That was power No. 2.

The amendment authorized the President to cut the gold dollar in two and make two dollars out of one, and had he done that, the new gold dollar would have been worth just one-half as much as the old gold dollar. The President exercised that power only to the extent of 40 percent. He cut 40 percent out of the gold dollar and left 60 percent in.

The fourth power was the power to remonetize silver. Under that power the President can open the mints to the free coinage of silver. Under that power he can fix the weight of the silver dollar at anything he sees proper, and then issue an order that the mints will coin all the silver that is brought to the mints in dollars of the weight to be fixed by him.

Those were the four powers that were given the President. The people thought, evidently, that the President would use some of those powers to bring about a substantial cheapening of the dollar. The people had a right to that opinion, and I will give the reason for that statement.

On May 6, 1933, over a Nation-wide hook-up, President Roosevelt said:

The administration has a definite objective of raising commodity prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will, on the average, be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollars which they borrowed.

Again, on July 3, 1933, in a message to the World Economic Conference at London, the President said:

Let me be frank in saying that the United States seeks the kind of dollar which a generation hence will have the same purchasing and debt-paying power as the dollar value we hope to attain in the near future.

On July 5, 1933, in a second message to the World Economic Conference in London, the President said:

The revaluation of the dollar in terms of American commodities is an end from which the Government and the people of the United States cannot be diverted. We wish to make this perfectly clear; we are interested in American commodity prices.

On October 22, 1933, in a Nation-wide radio address, the President stated:

It is the Government's policy to restore the price level first.

Also, in the same address he said:

When we have restored the price level we shall seek to establish and maintain a dollar which will not change its purchasing and debt-paying power during the succeeding generation. I said that in my message to the American delegation in London last July, and I say it now once more.

Mr. President, under the powers given the President, and because of his statements, the dollar became cheaper. It lost value, from 167 cents down to 112 cents. Then a determination was reached not to cheapen the dollar further, but to give the dollar more value, and policies looking to that end were initiated in March 1937. Gold was sterilized. Reserve requirements were raised. Rediscount rates were raised. In other words, restrictive policies on the issuance of money and credit were placed in operation. That had the effect of increasing the value of the dollar, and as the dollar went up prices began to fall, and today we have the dollar worth 130 cents plus, which means that the farmer must raise 130 cents worth of cotton, or wheat, or corn, or what not in order to get a dollar with which to pay his taxes or to pay his interest or to pay his debts. It is not being done; it cannot be done. There is no possible solution of this depression question save through cheapening the dollar.

The dollar must be made cheaper, and there will be no substantial relief to the people of this Nation until the dollar is made cheaper.

RUBBER DOLLAR

During recent years we have heard much about a rubber dollar. What is meant by a rubber dollar? The answer: A dollar of widely varying value or buying power.

When have we had a rubber dollar? Let history answer. From 1789 to 1873 our country was on a bimetallic standard and from 1873 to 1933 we were on a fixed gold standard.

In the first years of the new Republic the dollar varied only slightly from 100 cents as valued in property.

In 1812, because of war, money was placed in circulation, money became more plentiful, money became cheaper, and prices rose accordingly. In 1830 the value of the dollar was 152 cents. President Jackson reduced and held the value to near 100 cents. In 1864 the value of the dollar was 74 cents. That was during the War between the States. The Treasury had no gold and no silver, and Mr. Lincoln had to resort to the issuance of paper money, money called "United States notes," or "greenbacks"; and when those notes were placed in circulation, without either silver or gold back of them, they lost their value; and, measured in terms of gold, the paper dollar was worth only 74 cents, which meant that prices were correspondingly high. In 1896 the value of the dollar was 215 cents. That was when we had 50-cent wheat in Indiana. At that time hogs and cattle were not worth driving to the market.

Let me say to my colleagues on this side of the aisle that history records that no political party has ever succeeded itself on 50-cent wheat and 5-cent cotton. If our party desires to retain control of the Government, things must be done to raise the price level; and if wheat is not selling for more than 50 cents a bushel and cotton for more than 5 cents a pound next year, we may see a radical change in the structure of the next administration.

In 1920 the value of the dollar was 64 cents. After the World War we placed so much money in circulation, we made money so plentiful, that money became cheap; and when money became cheap, prices went up. Then it was that we had the highest prices I have ever seen. In my State wheat sold for $2.40 a bushel and cotton sold for 44 cents a pound. There were no foreclosures of farms in those days. Everyone wanted to buy farms. For every farm that was for sale there was a buyer at practically any price the owner wanted to ask.

From 1921 to 1929 Governor Strong, of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, so managed our money system as to bring back and keep the dollar at a 100-cent value. With the passing of Governor Strong the dollar value began to rise, until in March of 1933 the value was 167 cents.

In 1933 our administration undertook the task of reducing the value of the dollar in terms of property to 100 cents, or to the 1926 level, but to date the task is incomplete.

DOLLAR VALUE CAN BE STABILIZED

As stated, Governor Strong, although the United States was on a fixed gold standard, regulated the value of the dollar to 100 cents and stabilized such value during the remainder of his life. I contend that what has been so well done may be done again.

Also, I contend that our money managers have fixed the value of our dollar in terms of commodities, goods, and services at approximately 130 cents and that such dollar is being held at about that value. I contend that this value is entirely too high and that the Budget cannot be balanced on such a valued unit and that we will never work out of this depression until the dollar value is reduced to approximately 100 cents.

SUMMARY

Before making my recommendation, let me summarize: In the light of history it is obvious that the prosperity of a people depends upon the fairness and stability of their domestic price level.

Progress and prosperity depend upon prices, prices depend upon the value of the dollar, and the extent of prosperity and the level of prices depend upon the amount of money in circulation.

In times past money was limited to gold, silver, or copper metal stamped in the form of coins. Later the term "money" was expanded to include not only metal coins but paper currency as well. Today we define anything as money that has been, by law, declared to be legal tender for the payment of taxes, interest, duties, and debts.

Money exists by law and not by Nature.

Money is not always of the same value.

The dollar, when based upon a given quantity of gold, is of the same value as such quantity of gold; hence, as gold changes in value, the dollar changes in value.

Formerly by money we meant only gold, silver, and copper coins. Today by money we mean legal-tender currency, and by currency we mean gold coin, silver coin, nickel or copper coin, and paper money.

By "currency" I do not mean bank credit. Currency is money. Bank credit is only a substitute for money.

While bank credit serves as a medium of exchange and may be converted into currency, bank credit is not currency.

Currency units or dollars, as herein defined, measure prices. Bank credit or substitute money does not measure prices. The number of currency dollars in circulation, in the main, control the value of the dollar. An increase in the number of currency dollars in circulation means increasing the supply of price-measuring money units.

The same economic law which controls and governs the value of wheat and corn and cotton likewise controls and governs the value of the dollar. When any commodity is plentiful, such commodity is cheap; likewise, when dollars are plentiful, dollars are cheap; and when dollars are cheap, prices are high.

On the other hand, when dollars are scarce dollars are high, and when dollars are high prices are cheap.

The value of the dollar depends, in the main, upon the number of currency dollars in circulation. Scarce money means high-valued dollars, and high-valued dollars means unemployment, low wages, low prices, panics, and depressions. Plentiful money means cheap money and cheap money means employment, high wages, high prices, progress, and prosperity.

If there be those who disagree with the economic principles just stated, then I must leave them to answer, not me but the master financial minds of history.

MONETARY AUTHORITIES

Let me call a few witnesses, famous monetary economists of the world, to sustain my position.

Ricardo says:

The value of money is determined by the amount existing.

Ruffner says:

Doubling the amount of money tends to double prices.

Again he says

The price level will tend to rise in proportion to the increase in the money supply.

John Locke says:

The value of money in general is the quantity of all the money in the world in proportion to all the trade.

James Mills says:

And again, in whatever degree, therefore, the quantity of money is increased or diminished, other things remaining the same, in that same proportion the value of the whole, and of every part, is reciprocally diminished or increased.

Sir J. Graham says:

The value of money is in the inverse ratio of its quantity, the supply of commodities remaining the same.

John Stuart Mill says:

The value of money—other things being the same—varies inversely as its quantity, every increase of quantity lowering the value and every diminution raising it in a ratio exactly equivalent.

And again he says:

That an increase of the quantity of money raises prices, and a diminution lowers them, is the most elementary proposition in the theory of currency, and without it we should have no key to any of the others.

Modern economists have the following to say: Taussig says:

Double the amount of money and, other things being equal, prices will be twice as high as before and the value of money one-half. Halve the quantity of money and, other things being equal, prices will be one-half what they were before and the value of money double.

Gustav Cassel, one of the greatest living authorities on money, says that the value of money depends upon its supply and the demand therefor.

CURRENCY DOLLARS ARE PRICE-MEASURING UNITS

The Wall Street Journal, one of the leading financial publications of the country, in arguing against the payment of the soldiers' bonus with United States notes, used the following language:

The essential thing involved in the issue of more currency is that it increases the supply of price-measuring money units. Therein lies the fundamental difference between currency and bank credit. Both function as media of exchange but only one kind measures prices.

In harmony with these quotations, let me call your attention to the following facts:

In Andrew Jackson's day money was plentiful, prices were high, and prosperity was enjoyed by all.

Following the Civil War, greenbacks, or United States notes, were plentiful, prices were high, prosperity returned, and reconstruction was quickly accomplished.

During and immediately after the World War money was plentiful, prices were high, work was plentiful, wages were good, and America became the leading creditor nation of the world.

History sustains the contention that plentiful money makes good prices, and good prices make good times and general prosperity. Likewise, scarce money makes low prices, and low prices make hard times, panics, and depressions.

In 1873, through the demonetization of silver, one-half of the basic money of our country was struck down and discredited. The destruction of silver, by closing the mints for its coinage, brought about a scarcity of money, causing a fall in prices, deflation, and depression. The demand for more money and higher prices led to the Bryan free-silver campaign in 1896.

In 1921 prices were lowered by the process of taking money out of circulation. Beginning on March 4, 1921, and lasting for 18 months, the party in power deliberately made money scarce by taking out of circulation over $100,000,000 per month.

Thereafter, in less than 2 years' time, wheat fell in price from $2.50 to $1 per bushel, cotton fell from 40 to 20 cents per pound, and other prices were reduced in proportion. This deflation of our currency ruined agriculture first, then livestock, lumber, and mining industries followed the decline. Still later, smaller towns and cities suffered, and with one-half the people impoverished the 1929 crash came.

In 1930 to 1933 money was scarce—so scarce and so valuable that prices were the lowest in generations.

In 1933 the administration at Washington proceeded to raise prices by lowering the value of the dollar. The value of the dollar in foreign exchange was lowered by reducing the gold content of such dollar. The value of the domestic dollar was reduced by making money more plentiful through a wider use of silver.

The contraction of the currency just after the World War reduced prices. The expansion of the currency in 1933 to 1937 increased prices.

By expansion of the currency I mean a planned, orderly, and controlled increase in the number of currency dollars in circulation. Domestically our currency dollars are neither based upon nor redeemable in gold; hence, such dollars are commodity dollars. Not being based upon gold, the value of such dollars depends upon the number placed in circulation.

CONGRESS HAS POWER TO COIN MONEY AND REGULATE VALUE

The Congress has the right and power to increase or decrease the amount of money in circulation; hence, has the right and power, at will, to increase or decrease the general price level, which includes commodity prices and wages.

This power is constitutional.

The section of the country from which I come demands that prices and wages be increased through an absolutely safe and orderly expansion of the currency.

How may this be accomplished?

Under existing law the Federal Reserve System may expand the currency at will through the policy of open-market operations. Under this policy the Federal Reserve banks may enter the open market and purchase bonds and pay for such bonds with Federal Reserve notes. This policy places new money in circulation and thereby directly expands the currency.

Under existing law, our administrative officials have ample power to raise prices through a safe and orderly expansion of the currency. If this program should be inaugurated, and if money should become too plentiful and prices should rise too high, the Federal Reserve System now holds billions of bonds which could be sold, and thereby any amount of currency may be removed from circulation at will.

Economic laws are as immutable as are the laws of gravity. Expanding the currency will cheapen the value of the dollar. Cheaper dollars mean higher prices. Higher prices mean more profits, higher wages, greater income, and increased prosperity.

A REMEDY

Now, we come to the final point—the remedy, or perhaps

The Constitution gives the Congress power to regulate the value of the dollar. Under this power the Congress is responsible for whatever value the dollar has at any given time.

The Congress is responsible for the dollar having a value of 130 cents today.

The Congress has the power to cheapen the dollar and to raise prices at will.

As a Member of the Congress, I thought we were exercising our constitutional power in 1933. Such power was exercised by conferring discretionary power upon the President. To date the President has not used as much of the power conferred as I think he should.

As I see the picture, the Budget will not be balanced, unemployment will not be decreased, and prosperity will not return until prices are increased, and prices will not be increased until the managers of our money act.

PROFIT TO TREASURY AND METALLIC MONEY STOCK

Prices of world commodities may be increased by a still further devaluation of the gold dollar. The President has the power under existing law to take some 2½ grains out of the present gold dollar. Should this be done, the amount of gold so removed from each dollar would be profit for our Treasury. This profit would be some $2,500,000,000, and, when added to the former devaluation profit of some $2,800,-000,000, would make a grand total gold devaluation profit of some $5,300,000,000.

Should this legal act be taken, our present $14,619,000,000 of gold would become over $17,000,000,000.

Then our new gold stock added to our silver stock would give us almost $19,000,000,000—gold and silver—in our Treasury.

The immediate effects of such action would be:

First. Increase the price of all world commodities.

Second. To the extent that new currency is placed in circulation, the price of all commodities would be increased.

Third. With increased prices, business will be stimulated and profits will be possible; hence, tax payments will be increased, making possible the balancing of the Budget.

Fourth. Such action will enable our people to pay the present increased national debt with less gold than it would have taken to have paid the smaller national debt in 1933.

Fifth. Such action would reduce the present national debt and all debts in terms of commodities, such as cotton, corn, wheat, livestock, oil, and copper, to a point where our present debts, interests, taxes, and fixed charges could be paid with less of such commodities than could the smaller debts and charges have been met and paid in 1932.

For example, the President may cheapen the dollar in terms of commodities by ordering additional currency placed in circulation. He has such powers already conferred by law. The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System has the same power through the exercise of open-market operations, lowering of the discount rate, and liberalizing credit rules and regulations.

NO NEW LEGISLATION NECESSARY

It does not absolutely require any new legislation to have done the thing which I think should be done.

The specific thing which I think should be done is set forth in Senate Resolution 216, reported favorably to the Senate on February 9, 1938, and as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Federal Reserve Board, the Treasury, and the executive agencies of the Government should proceed forthwith to adjust the purchasing power of the dollar by the necessary monetary policies and measures to attain within the next 12 months approximately the 1926 price level of wholesale commodities, including farm products.

The program outlined in the resolution was intended to carry into effect the policy outlined by the President in his May 6, 1933, radio address and his subsequent addresses of July 3, 1933, July 5, 1933, and October 22, 1933.

The President's program was stated clearly in his address of July 5, 1933

To the World Economic Conference in London, he said:

The revaluation of the dollar in terms of American commodities is an end from which the Government and the people of the United States cannot be diverted. We wish to make this perfectly clear; we are interested in American commodity prices.

The Chief Executive is on record in this particular matter. Again permit me to summarize:

I have stated that the value of the dollar controls prices and that prices control income and prosperity. Also I have stated that a highly valued dollar makes a low price level, hence, low prices; and that a cheaply valued dollar makes a high price level; hence, high prices.

It is obvious that increasing the weight of the gold dollar decreases the value of gold in terms of dollars and thereby reduces prices. Also reducing the weight of the gold dollar increases the value of gold per ounce and increases prices.

From the foregoing statement of principles we must conclude that it is all important that the dollar should be properly valued in terms of domestic commodities and property, and that when such dollar value is regulated and adjusted such value should be stabilized and thereafter kept as fixed and unchanged as is humanly possible.

Formerly both gold and silver, on a fixed or definite ratio, formed the base for the moneys of the world. More recently gold has formed the metallic base supporting the monetary units of most of the world's currencies.

By this is meant that most of the nations were on the single gold standard. By the single gold standard is meant that the paper currencies issued into circulation by such countries were redeemable on demand in gold coin or in gold bullion on the basis of a definite weight of gold of a fixed degree of fineness for each unit of such currencies.

Now all nations are off the gold standard, domestically and internally, however, all exchange issued by the banks of the several nations is issued on the basis of so much gold by weight of a certain degree of fineness for each monetary unit of such nation.

The United States has always had a fixed weight of gold for the dollar, although such weight has been changed a number of times. At the present time the weight of the gold dollar is  $15\frac{5}{21}$  grains of gold nine-tenths fine.

The first gold dollar weighed 24¾ grains of pure gold. During the administration of Andrew Jackson the gold dollar was devalued twice and for the 100 years from 1834 to 1933 the gold dollar was fixed and retained at 25.8 grains, ninetenths fine.

For the 100 years prior to 1933 when the gold dollar was fixed at 25.8 grains, nine-tenths fine, an ounce of pure gold was worth $20.67.

At the present time, with the gold dollar fixed at 15\%1 grains nine-tenths fine, an ounce of fine gold is worth $35.

An ounce of fine gold, when valued at $20.67, meant that such quantity of gold could be coined into 20.67 dollars. When we raised the value of gold to $35 per fine ounce, it meant that the same ounce could be coined into 35 gold dollars.

Since gold at all times, even from day to day or from hour to hour, has a definite or fixed value in terms of monetary units or dollars, it follows that by decreasing the weight or size of the gold dollar decreases its value comparably.

As stated, gold has what is termed intrinsic value. For example, formerly an ounce of fine gold, because it could be coined into twenty and sixty-seven one-hundredths of a dollar, was worth $20.67, and obviously was, in effect, $20.67. At the present time, because an ounce of fine gold can be coined into 35 gold dollars, it naturally follows that such ounce of gold is worth $35 and, in effect, is $35.

Formerly and now fine gold had and has the same value either coined or uncoined. The only effect coinage has upon gold is to certify that the little nugget of gold stamped "one dollar" contains a certain amount of gold by weight and of a fixed degree of fineness.

Thus it is seen that an ounce of fine gold not only is worth $35, can be coined into $35, and, in effect, such ounce, either coined or uncoined, is $35.

By devaluing the gold dollar we accomplish two definite things. First, we reduced the weight of the gold dollar; and, second, we reduced its value in proportion that the weight was reduced. When the gold ounce was worth $20.67 each dollar weighed 25.8 grains, nine-tenths fine, and when gold was revalued so as to be worth $35 per fine ounce, then each dollar weighs only fifteen and five twenty-firsts of a grain of gold nine-tenths fine.

HOW DEVALUING GOLD DOLLAR RAISES PRICES

Gold has intrinsic value, if not inherently, then by law. Formerly an ounce of fine gold was worth by law $20.67. To-day an ounce of fine gold is worth by law $35. Formerly, when gold was worth $20.67 per fine ounce, each gold dollar contained 25.8 grains nine-tenths fine.

Today, with gold worth \$35 per fine ounce, each gold dollar contains only  $15\frac{5}{21}$  of a grain of gold nine-tenths fine. Thus it is seen that the higher the value of the gold ounce the smaller the size, weight, and value of the gold dollar. By raising the price of gold per ounce we reduce the size, weight, and value of the gold dollar.

Conversely, by lowering the price of the gold ounce we increase the size, weight, and value of the gold dollar.

From the foregoing it is obvious that by increasing the value of gold—thereby cheapening the value of the gold dollar—we raise prices, and that by decreasing the value of gold, thereby raising the value of the gold dollar, we lower prices.

Let me be more specific by giving a concrete illustration: Let us assume that the gold dollar which served us for 100 years has not been devalued but is to be devalued tonight at midnight.

Today an ounce of fine gold is worth $20.67.

Today an ounce of fine gold is worth 35 bushels of wheat; hence today a bushel of wheat is worth one thirty-fifth of such ounce, valued at $20.67, or 59 cents per bushel.

Tonight at midnight we reduce the weight of the gold dollar from 25.8 grains to  $15\frac{5}{21}$  grains, which means increasing the price of gold from \$20.67 to \$35 per ounce, so that our price of wheat changes as follows:

At midnight an ounce of fine gold is revalued at $35.

At midnight an ounce of fine gold is still worth the same 35 bushels of wheat; hence at midnight each bushel of wheat is still worth one thirty-fifth of such ounce, now valued at $35, or the price of wheat is thereby increased to $1 per bushel

The illustration might be simplified.

Today a bushel of wheat is worth one gold dollar of 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine. Tonight at midnight the bushel of wheat is still worth the 25.8 grains of gold, but by devaluation the 25.8 grains of gold becomes $1.59; so that the bushel of wheat has been increased in price from $1 per bushel to $1.59 per bushel.

The foregoing illustration, applicable to wheat, would be applicable to any and all world commodities. By world commodities I mean commodities valued from day to day in terms of gold. Wheat, cotton, corn, and oil are good examples of so-called world commodities.

The price or value of purely domestic commodities, or commodities not having a fixed value in terms of gold at all times, would not be similarly affected by the devaluation of the gold dollar unless, first, gold was actually in circulation, and unless, second, the surplus gold removed from each dollar should be recoined and issued into circulation.

It is my contention that the same economic law controlling the value of corn, wheat, cotton, and oil likewise controls the value of gold. When any commodity such as those mentioned is plentiful such commodity is cheap, and, conversely, when scarce is high.

In the past when new gold fields were discovered and gold was produced faster than the demand for gold increased, then gold itself became cheaper and prices increased.

On the other hand when the demand for gold increased faster than the production, coinage, and circulation of gold, then gold increased in value as measured by commodities and property generally.

Today the demand for gold as the basis for world exchange is great, and the fact that great quantities of gold are coming to the United States where, in effect, such gold is placed back in the quartz, is depleting the world supply of gold so that the value of the available diminishing supply is constantly increasing.

This policy or development is responsible for the value of our gold dollar, although reduced in size and weight by some 40 percent, being 130 cents, or some 30 percent greater than the value of the larger and heavier gold dollar in 1926.

It is obvious that in order for the gold dollar to remain constant in value or buying power, the production, coinage, and circulation of gold must be kept in harmony with the demand for gold.

Such a program is not to be expected, however; when the United States and the leading nations were on the orthodox gold standard we did not have either a stabilized or satisfactory monetary system.

For example, under such gold standard we saw the gold dollar in 1896 worth over 200 cents, as measured in commodities and property, and in 1920 we saw the same size gold dollar worth only 64 cents, as measured in the same class of property. Also in 1926 the gold dollar, before devaluation, was worth 100 cents and in 1932 the same dollar was worth 167 cents, as measured in commodities and property.

Then through devaluation the weight of the gold dollar was reduced from 25.8 grains to 15\%\gamma_1$ grains, yet today the smaller sized gold dollar is worth 130 cents when measured in commodities and property; hence I contend that under the old gold-standard plan our monetary system could be and was a managed-money system.

I contend that while gold and silver have been and are considered monetary metals, yet such metals are nothing other than commodities.

Also while we have said by law that 15½1 grains of gold nine-tenths fine would be a dollar, yet the value of such quantity of gold varies and changes with the production of and the demand for such a quantity of gold.

At this point I may say that while we now have in our Treasury over two-thirds of all the monetary gold in the world and about one-fourth of all the monetary silver produced to date. Our resources are such that we could acquire all the monetary gold and silver now available throughout the world.

It is a fact that we have fixed the price or value of both gold and silver and have and are maintaining such price throughout the world. However, no one would contend that it should be our policy to continue to acquire great quantities of either of these so-called monetary metals.

I make these statements not in approval of the suggested policy, but to show the economic power of the people of the United States.

As before stated, domestically or internally we are not on either a gold or a silver standard. Our exchange is based upon gold, but domestically we are on a paper-currency

While we now have over sixteen and one-half billions of gold and over one and one-half billions of silver in our Treasury, our $6,666,000,000 of currency in circulation is redeemable not in gold but only in other dollars, probably of the same kind

Now to another proposition. I contend that so long as we have our dollar tied to a given and fixed quantity of gold it is possible and should be the policy of our money managers to keep the value of such quantity of gold as stable as is humanly possible with the price of our domestic commodities. By price of domestic commodities I do not mean any given or named product, but, rather, the general price level derived from the average of our commodities making up our general price index.

Let me explain more fully. It must be admitted that we may raise the price level by increasing the amount of currency in circulation. At any time we can raise the price level by permitting or forcing additional currency into circulation.

The raising of the general price level would, as a rule, raise the price of any given commodity. Take wheat, corn, or cotton, for example. We could raise the price of such commodities by increasing the supply of price-measuring units, which would be currency dollars. No one denies but that we can double the price of wheat or corn or cotton by such a policy.

If this is conceded, then we can regulate and adjust the value of gold in terms of commodities at will, and we can do this without the necessity of changing the size or weight of the gold dollar.

For example, today wheat is selling for some 50 cents per bushel. This means that today while an ounce of gold is worth $35, such ounce is at the same time worth some 70 bushels of wheat.

By increasing the amount of currency in circulation I contend that we can raise the price level to such a point that wheat would be worth $1 per bushel. Then the ounce of gold. while still being worth $35, would at the same time be worth only 35 bushels of wheat. Or, in other words, the addition of currency to the circulation would serve to increase the price of wheat without the necessity of changing the size or weight of the gold dollar.

Since we are not on the gold standard or a gold basis from a practical standpoint, it would be very easy to place in practice this policy or plan. However, if we were on the orthodox gold standard, I contend that the policy herein outlined to a degree would work equally as well.

In 1933 our administration deliberately initiated a policy for raising commodity prices. The value of our dollar in terms of property was decreased from 167 cents to 112 cents by March 1937. As the dollar fell in value prices rose correspondingly. In 1937 our money managers stopped the cheapening of the dollar and the consequent rise in prices and reversed the trend. Since March 1937 the dollar has constantly increased in value and prices have fallen correspondingly.

During the past several months the dollar value has been fixed and retained at approximately 130 cents. I contend that the price level could be fixed at any other named point and that such price level could be maintained at such point exactly as the price level is now being maintained on a dollar valued at 130 cents

Again I say that the value or price of domestic commodities is governed by the number of price-measuring units or dollars in circulation.

The executive branches of the Government; having power and control over the coinage and circulation of money, and control over the issuance of credit, have all necessary power to raise the price level to any given point, and such agencies have full knowledge of how to use such power to bring about the end suggested and recommended.

To recapitulate the executive branches may use any or all of the following existing powers to bring about the end herein set forth:

First. Desterilize our surplus gold.

Second. Force into circulation available silver certificates. Third. Lower discount rates.

Fourth. Lower reserve requirements.

Fifth. Open-market operations.

Sixth. Further devalue the gold dollar.

Seventh. Issuance and use of additional Federal Reserve notes and Treasury notes as authorized by existing law.

For almost 10 years we have tried to work out of the depression under a low price level and we have failed. Today I am more convinced than ever that higher prices-hence, a higher price level-are not only advisable but absolutely mandatory before we see substantially better times.

The present dollar is a commodity dollar, but its value is not as yet properly adjusted and regulated.

The new dollar will be a commodity dollar, and a dollar so valued, regulated, and stabilized as to serve the best interests of all classes of our people.

With the new dollar in circulation the price level will be raised, wages and income will be increased, profits will be possible, the national income will be increased, the Budget will be balanced, and prosperity will return again to the people of the United States.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may at this time introduce a bill suggesting a remedy for the evils I am seeking to point out, and that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1057) for the regulation and stabilization of agricultural and commodity prices through the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar, pursuant to the power conferred on the Congress by paragraph 5 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

MONETARY POLICY

Section 1. Pursuant to the authority conferred in paragraph 5 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution, wherein the Congress is authorized to coin money and to regulate the value thereof, the Congress does hereby declare that the monetary policy of the United States shall embrace, among others, the following principles:

(a) To coin and keep constantly available an adequate supply of sound money;

of sound money;

(b) To regulate the value of the dollar so as to best serve the domestic economy of the people; and

(c) To place and keep in circulation a sufficient amount of properly valued money to adequately supply the demands and needs of the people: Provided, That the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar shall be a fixed policy and, in order to promote and give stability to agriculture, industry, commerce, manufacturing, mining, forestry, fisheries, employment, and other human activities, the regional Federal Reserve banks and the member banks of the Federal Reserve System, under the supervision and direction of the Monetary Authority, shall cooperate in carrying out the policy and principles herein set forth and as provided in this act. provided in this act

CREATION OF MONETARY AUTHORITY

SEC. 2. The Congress, in order to vitalize the provisions of the Constitution and to carry into effect the monetary principles and financial policy set forth in section 1 hereof, deems it necessary to, and does hereby, create the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System into a governmental agency to be designated as a Monetary Authority (herein referred to as the Monetary Authority) for the express purpose of regulating the value of money: Provided, That the constitutional clause regulating the value of the dollar to that point which will serve the best interests and best promote the domestic economy of the people: And provided further, That said clause regulating the value of money shall be construed to mean not only the adjustment of the value of money but also the stabilization of such regulated and adjusted value as hereinafter provided. SEC. 2. The Congress, in order to vitalize the provisions of the value as hereinafter provided.

DOLLAR-VALUE CONTROL ITEMS

SEC. 3. The Monetary Authority, in regulating, adjusting, and stabilizing the value of the dollar as herein provided, shall take into account and give consideration to, among other things, the

(a) The amount of the annual total tax bills necessary to support the several units of government;

(b) The amount of the annual total public and private interest items;

(c) The amount of consolidated or massed debts, public and private, owned by the several units of government, corporations, and the people jointly and severally;

(d) The general price level and the relation of such price level to the tax, interest, and debt burdens resting upon the people;

(e) The interests of taxpayers, mortgagors, debtors, producers, consumers, wage earners, holders of fixed investments, and those who live on fixed incomes; (f) The relation of the general domestic price level to the general world price level; and

(g) The relation of the value of the dollar to the values of the monetary units of the other governments of the world.

STANDARDS AND LIMITATIONS

SEC. 4. Immediately upon the passage and approval of this act, the said Monetary Authority shall assume and exercise the powers herein delegated and conferred according to the standards and within the limitations herein set forth: Provided, That the said Monetary Authority is hereby authorized and directed to proceed, as provided herein, to adjust and regulate the value of the dollar as expressed in terms of wholesale prices to the point of 100 as shown by the Bureau of Labor Statistics: And provided further, That, pending the regulation and adjustment of the value of the dollar to the point of 100 as provided herein, the said Monetary Authority shall proceed to investigate, consider, and determine the proper value of the dollar as provided in section 3 of this act.

EQUILIBRIUM PRICE LEVEL

SEC. 5. The Monetary Authority, in carrying into effect the principle of monetary policy stated in (b) of section 1 hereof, and after full consideration of said items (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), and (g) in section 3 hereof, shall regulate and adjust the value of the dollar, as provided herein, so as to effectuate, produce, and bring about as nearly as possible an equilibrium price level designed to serve the best interests of the people as mentioned in (e) of sections 3 hereof. tion 3 hereof.

STABILIZATION

SEC. 6. Immediately upon the completion of the regulation and SEC. 6. Immediately upon the completion of the regulation and adjustment of the value of the dollar, as provided herein, the Monetary Authority shall proceed to stabilize and thereafter keep stable as nearly as possible the value of said dollar at the point of value so determined as provided herein: Provided, That in the regulation, adjustment, and stabilization of the value of the dollar, the said Monetary Authority shall have all the authority herein delegated and conferred and, in addition, shall have all the power heretofore delegated and conferred upon the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

SPECIFIC POWERS

SEC. 7. In order to carry into effect the principles of the monetary policy set forth in this act, the Monetary Authority, acting under the powers conferred herein and acting as the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, shall have the following specific

(a) Full and complete control over reserve requirements of member banks of the Federal Reserve System;

(b) Full and complete control over the discount rate at each of the regional Federal Reserve banks;

the regional Federal Reserve banks;

(c) Full and complete control over the eligibility of all kinds and classes of collateral to be accepted by the several regional Federal Reserve banks, their branches, and other member banks of the Federal Reserve System; and

(d) Full and complete control over all open-market operations in all regional Federal Reserve banks, both in the buying and selling of securities at home and abroad.

MONETARY AUTHORITY STATISTICS

Sec. 8. For the purpose of assisting in the regulations, adjustment, and stabilization of the value of the dollar, the said Monetary Authority is hereby authorized to investigate, prepare, and officially adopt a system of statistics to be known as the Monetary Authority statistics: Provided, That in preparing such statistics, the Monetary Authority shall have authority to call upon other departments of the Government for such statistics, data, and information as may be desired and requisitioned: And provided further, That, pending the adoption of such Monetary Authority statistics, the said Monetary Authority shall make use of, and be governed by, the Bureau of Labor Statistics as provided herein.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 9. In carrying into effect the provisions of this act, the Monetary Authority shall have power to appoint officers and employees, to define their duties, fix their compensation, require bonds of them, and fix the penalty thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers and employees. The said Monetary Authority is hereby empowered to adopt and promulgate such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

INTERPRETATION OF DELEGATED POWERS

SEC. 10. The powers delegated to and conferred upon the Mone-tary Authority herein created shall be construed to be a delegation tary Authority herein created shall be construed to be a delegation of legislative powers conferred upon the Congress by paragraph 5 of section 8 of article I of the Constitution, to regulate the value of money: Provided, That such powers so delegated shall be further interpreted and construed to be a delegation of such specific legislative powers to a governmental agency to carry out a fixed policy of the Congress according to definite and fixed standards, and within definite and fixed limitations, as set forth herein and as provided by this set.

within definite and fixed limitations, as set forth herein and as provided by this act.

SEC. 11. All provisions of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913, with amendments, including title 3 of Public Law No. 10, Seventy-third Congress, and amendments thereof, and other public acts of the Seventy-third, Seventy-fourth, and Seventy-fifth Congresses, when not in conflict and not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be, and are hereby continued in full force and effect.

SEC. 12. There is authorized to be appropriated annually, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

SEC. 13. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 14. The Monetary Authority shall report to the Congress annually such data, report of activities, and statement of policy as may be deemed in the public interest and shall make recommendations to the Congress at its discretion relative to amendments of this act or of existing law.

SEC. 15. The short title of this act shall be the "Monetary Authority Act."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that I may place in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a copy of a letter from the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] to Mr. Edward A. O'Neal, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, which bears on the question I have just discussed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LETTER FROM SENATOR KEY PITTMAN TO MR. EDWARD A. O'NEAL, PRESI-DENT, AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION

UNITED STATES SENATE Washington, D. C., December 8, 1938.

Mr. EDWARD A. O'NEAL,

President, American Farm Bureau Federation,

Hotel Roosevelt, New Orleans, La.
My Dear Mr. O'Neal: It would appear necessary that the farmers My Dear Mr. O'Neal: It would appear necessary that the farmers of the United States take immediate and positive action to relieve the agricultural industry from its tragic condition of continued depression. Ever since the war, to my personal knowledge, the unjust disparity in the price of agricultural commodities by comparison with manufactured commodities, the earnings and standards of farmers by comparison with those engaged in other industries, has been fully realized and admitted. During that entire period of time the farmers have been discussing these conditions and have been making strenuous efforts to remedy them. Efforts have been been making strenuous efforts to remedy them. Efforts have been made by our Government at nearly every session of Congress to establish and maintain the parity of the agricultural industry with the other industries of the country. There has been temporary relief afforded, but no permanent relief has been accomplished. The the other industries of the country. There has been temporary relief afforded, but no permanent relief has been accomplished. The plans so far tried have largely involved policies depending upon tariffs, commercial manipulations of markets, reduction of production, loans, and payments of bonuses or subsidies. None of these policies or programs have taken into consideration our monetary system and our money supply.

The American Farm Bureau Federation, as far back as 1932, undoubtedly realized that the price of farm products was chiefly affected by money supply. In May 1932, in your testimony before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the United States Senate, when that committee was investigating the purchasing power of the dollar, you presented to that committee and had printed in its records a document published by the American Farm Bureau Federation, Chicago, Ill., January 7, 1932, entitled "Honest Money—An Explanation of the Relation of Money, Prices, and Prosperity." That, in my opinion, is one of the ablest and clearest discussions of our monetary system, particularly in relation to prices. That document should be read not only by every farmer in this country but by every Member of Congress. It is hardly worth while to suggest that those economists whose opinions have been formed at their colleges 30 or 40 years ago, and from reading books that were written by similar economists 30 or 40 years prior thereto, or selfish financiers who through greed, consummate conceit, and vanity insist upon the exclusive right to arbitrarily expand and contract money and credit—to suggest that they read this valuable document. These men, through their power to manage currency and credit, brought about the great inflation of credit and the delirious boom of 1929. They also induced, through their acts, the terrible depression that followed and which has continued ever since. They contend that there is ample power in our monetary system to expand money and credit. If that be true, then why have they falled to use such power? They contend, and accurately, that the Government since 1929 has been engaged in the process of deflation. Why have they falled to suggest any unselfish monetary plan of reflation?

Let me call to your attention a statement in the Farm Bureau document to which I have referred, found on page 146 of such hearing. It reads as follows:
"The value of every product depends on supply and demand.

"The value of every product depends on supply and demand. That is just as true of money as it is of wheat and hogs. When the price of hogs goes down while other prices are stationary, the reason is that there are too many hogs in proportion to the demand reason is that there are too many hogs in proportion to the demand for pork.

"But when the average level of all prices goes down, as from 97 to 68 in 2 years, that is not due to the supply and demand of goods. It is hardly possible that there could be such a sudden increase in the production of all goods in 2 years, or such a sudden lessening of the desire of people for goods.

"The cause in such a case is a change in the supply of money and credit. The price of money cannot change, for it is fixed by law. So, when the supply changes, the effect can only be shown by a change in the price of goods. Commodity prices not only must change to compensate for changes in their own supply and demand but also to compensate for changes in the supply of money and demand for it.

"Suppose we think of all the money and bank credit of the coun-demand for it.

"Suppose we think of all the money and bank credit of the country as being on one end of a pair of balances and all the goods on the other end. Take off part of the goods, and that end of the balance goes up. That is, goods are scarce and prices rise. We are all familiar with that result in the case of individual commodities.

"We are not so familiar with the fact that a change in the supply of money on the other end of the scale will have exactly the same of the read of the money of the money.

of money on the other end of the scale will have exactly the same effect. If we take off some of the money, the money end will go up and the goods end will go down. That is exactly what has happened during the past 2 years. The goods end of the scale has gone down—the average wholesale price level has dropped 29 percent—not because we put too many goods on that end of the scale but because there was not enough money on the other end."

Let us keep in mind that this statement was made in a document prepared by the American Farm Bureau Federation in 1932. That was a warning given 6 years ago. That warning has been ignored for 6 years. We find exactly the same condition existing today in 1938.

Credit is not money. Credit does perform one of the functions of money, and that is as a medium of exchange. It does not, however, have the functions of money as a measure of value and as a reserve for surplus labor and surplus income. It is not legal tender that a debtor can require his creditor to accept. We have in this country two kinds of legal-tender money, namely, non-retirable and retirable. Our silver specie and silver certificates constitute our nonretirable currency. Our retirable currency consists of Federal Reserve notes, and probably some other forms of currencies.

As of October 31, 1938, our circulating currency is given by the Treasury as follows:

Gold certificates	$76, 081, 139
Standard silver dollars	40, 962, 394
Silver certificates	1, 297, 382, 507
Treasury notes of 1890
Subsidiary silver
Minor coin	148, 331, 126
United States notes	286, 800, 867
Federal Reserve notes	4, 282, 000, 795
Federal Reserve bank notes	28, 440, 850
National bank notes	205, 599, 050

Total Oct. 31, 1938___ 6, 699, 707, 987

I call your attention to the fact that the total circulating money in this country is only $6,699,707,987.

in this country is only $6,699,707,987.

I take it that there is no controversy that legal-tender money is required in the monetary system of every country. Certainly there is some relation between circulating currency and the volume of financial transactions such as production and consumption, domestic and foreign commerce, deposits, debts, and income. It would hardly be asserted that the Philippine Commonwealth requires in its monetary system the same amount of currency as is required in the United States. If we admit, therefore, that such relationship exists, then we must ask ourselves the question: Was there sufficient circulating currency in the United States in 1914? The financiers of the country at that time held that there was sufficient currency in circulation. If that be true, then there is not sufficient currency in circulation today in 1938. in circulation today in 1938.

In circulation today in 1938.

Let us see how much the volume of transactions has increased between 1914 and the present time. In 1914 the national debt was only slightly above $1,000,000,000. Today it is over $39,000,000,000. In 1914 the State and local debts were approximately $4,500,000,000. Today they are approximately $1,900,000.000.

In 1914 bank deposits were $21,360,000,000. At this time, June 30, 1938, bank deposits are $59,380,000,000. In 1914 national income produced, estimated by the Department of Commerce, was $34,600,000,000. In 1937, the last computations we have, the national income is estimated at $69,600,000,000. In 1914 our gold holdings were $1,526,000,000. In 1938 as of October 31, our gold holdings are $14,064,534,061. In 1914 our silver holdings were $750,279,000. In 1938, as of October 31, our silver holdings are in money $1,648,382,507 and 1,086,941,083 ounces. And yet the circulating currency of the country in 1914 was $3,459,434,174, while in 1938, as of October 31, it was $6,699,707,987, an increase of only 93 percent. During that period of time our national debt has increased 3,211 percent; our bank deposits have increased 178 percent; our national income has increased 82 percent; our metallic reserves have increased 606 percent.

I am aware that some of our economists will attempt to answer the foregoing argument for an increase in our circulating currency by asserting that the circulating money per capita in this country is as great as it was—in fact, slightly larger than it has been for a number of years. If this argument has merit in it, then such increase is due chiefly to the increase of sliver coins and silver certificates. I contend, however, that per capita circulation is not the measure of the necessity of circulating currency.

China has possibly a population of four hundred millions of people. The per capita money circulation in that country has rarely exceeded $2. The Chinese people do not require the same amount of circulating currency as is required by the people of the United States. The commercial and financial transactions in China are far less than they are in the United States. Only an infinitesimal portion of its population engage in any financial or commercial transactions of any extent. It is true that the credit system in China is not highly developed and, therefore, the practice of settling debts often and in cash and dealing in cash transactions is far more prevalent in China than in the United States. And yet the circulating currency in China with its over four hundred millions of people is less than one-twentieth of the per capita circulation in the United States. lation in the United States.

It must be evident that per capita circulation is not the proper measure for the necessity for circulating currency.

Some economists and financiers contend that when commerce and trade require more circulating currency it can be obtained and will be provided through the issue of Federal Reserve notes. This assumption in effect holds that a free circulation of currency is will be provided through the issue of Federal Reserve notes. This assumption in effect holds that a free circulation of currency is not a stimulation to commerce and trade; and yet, when Congress granted President Roosevelt in 1933 the power to issue $6,000,000,000 in Treasury notes—which, of course, would have been circulating currency if he had issued them—the economists and financiers of the United States expressed great fear and contended that it would give him the greatest power of inflation that any President had ever been granted. At the very time that that proposed act was under consideration, at a conference between executive-legislative officers and outside financial advisers, at which I was present, one of these outside financial advisers proclaimed that if the act were passed and executed every depositor in the country that understood the situation would realize that the value of his money would be depreciated and he would seek instantly to transfer the money into commodities, real estate, or some other kind of physical property. The administration was then seeking to startle banks and depositors out of their fear and to bring money and credit out of hoarding for again starting industry, trade, and commerce. And the predictions of this able financier were verified. Commencing with the passage of the act, the revival of business started, and the upward curve continued rapidly and steadily until July 1933. Then it was announced by the Treasury Department that there would be no inflation. Immediately the curve dipped, leveled out, and stayed comparatively level until business was again stimulated by large Government loans through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other governmental lending agencies and through expenditures of large sums of money by the Government, under its relief proand other governmental lending agencies and through expenditures of large sums of money by the Government, under its relief program and by the payment of the soldiers' bonus. This, of course, was credit reflation. Unfortunately this credit reflation was not participated in by private institutions. It was credit reflation that the regular private credit institutions of the country were either unable or unwilling to turnible its way to be a country were either unable or unwilling to turnible. unable or unwilling to furnish. It was not a currency refiation. The credit had to be liquidated. Such Federal Reserve notes as were used in the process were interest-burdened money and could be and would be inevitably retired. The $6,000,000,000 in Treasury notes were not issued. The curve of business continued to rise in "35 and "36 by reason of such governmental credit reflation.

In the letter part of 1936 and early in 1937, the Treasury Depart.

In the latter part of 1936 and early in 1937, the Treasury Department conceived that the country was going into another boom. How such a conception could have originated in view of the fact that industry had not nearly risen to normal, as was clearly proven by the nine or ten millions of unemployed people in the United States, is incomprehensible. However, that was the opinion undoubtedly of the Treasury Department and the Federal Reserve Board. The Secretary of the Treasury announced the sterilization of our unallocated gold. While sterilization had no real effect, because the gold might as well have been in the mines as it was not used, still it indicated the intention of the administration to prevent any reflation of our credit or of our currency based upon gold. used, still it indicated the intention of the administration to prevent any reflation of our credit or of our currency based upon gold. It was a warning to all credit institutions in the country to be cautious, if not to restrict credit. About the same time Mr. Eccles, Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, doubled the reserve requirements of national and member banks. Some banks were required to liquidate some of their securities so as to comply with the order. The real effect of it was however to excir notify the credit instituto liquidate some of their securities so as to comply with the order. The real effect of it was, however, to again notify the credit institutions of our country that the Government intended to restrict credit. The result was instantaneous. Commodity prices fell. Recession started in and the business curve rapidly descended. And now we are informed that the Treasury Department favors reductions of Government expenditures, while Mr. Eccles contends that expenditures by the Government must not be reduced, at least to any extent or suddenly.

I do not know that the Secretary of the Treasury has been accu-I do not know that the Secretary of the Treasury has been accurately quoted. I have heard no contradiction, however, emanating from the Treasury Department. There has been an improvement recently in certain industries in the country which gives hope that the Government may reduce its expenditures. This hope cannot be realized, however, until the farming industry of this country has to purchasing power restored by providing a market for its products at a compensating price. The farming industry of the country today is faced with bankruptcy. If this condition is not relieved through the adoption of some sound policy, most of the farmers will have to go on relief. go on relief.

Then let us analyze our circulating currency. Federal Reserve notes in circulation amounting to $4,282,000,795 can be retired. National-bank notes amounting to $205,599,050 can be retired. It is National-bank notes amounting to $205,599,050 can be retired. It is not worth while to discuss the legal question as to whether gold certificates amounting to $76,081,139, United States notes amounting to $269,800,867, Federal Reserve bank notes amounting to $28,440,850, and national-bank notes amounting to $205,599,050 can be retired. No one will deny that the Federal Reserve notes can be retired. Then, if only the Federal Reserve notes are retirable and all the other forms of currency are nonretirable, sixull we only have in circulation $23,417,707,192 in proporticable circulating currency.

Then, if only the Federal Reserve notes are retirable and all the other forms of currency are nonretirable, still we only have in circulation $2,417,707,192 in nonretirable circulating currency.

In the first place there are a great many of our economists and financiers who have constantly called attention to the fact that varying from 90 percent to 95 percent of our commercial and financial transactions are conducted through checks and drafts and other evidences of credit. They are, therefore, inconsiderate of the necessity for circulating currency. Our highly developed credit system is a great advantage in facilitating commerce and business. There are, however, an enormous number of transactions that must be conducted in cash. Moving-picture shows, transportation companies, insurance companies, and other similar businesses in nearly every instance require payment in cash, which is currency. A large proportion of the population of the United States have no bank account, never did have, and never will have. They must eat and buy clothes. They, out of necessity of the case, must pay in cash, which is currency. Need I call attention to the fact that the lack of circulating currency during depressions incidental to panics has compelled the supplying of substitutes for currency such as script and all kinds of tokens?

But it will be contended, of course, that the currency will find its way into the banks. Not all of it. Communities that have suffered the closing of all banking institutions have been compelled for considerable periods of time to transact business with the currency that was in the till and safes and in the pockets consisted entirely of small currency which was almost exclusively dollar silver certificates and silver coins. It is true that at the present time our Government issues silver certificates in larger denominations. I doubt the wisdom of this act. I think the people of this country would be better off if they always kept more real money in their tills, their safes, and in their pockets. It is but banks' inaction.

There are distinguished economists and financiers who contend that the power to issue Federal Reserve notes to banks meets every that the power to issue Federal Reserve notes to banks meets every requirement of circulating currency. It has not met the requirements during depression. Banks do not circulate Federal Reserve notes except when currency is demanded at the time they make loans or when currency is demanded upon a check on a deposit. When they are not making loans and deposits are inactive, there is little necessity for the banks to call upon the Federal Reserve banks for Federal Reserve notes. Again, the bank must borrow these Federal Reserve notes. It must pay interest for the loan of such money, and therefore the tendency is for the banks to obtain as little of this currency as possible. The proven result of the use of the Federal Reserve notes has been that in prosperous and in boom times banks circulate large amounts of such notes, thereby accelerating the boom; while, when the boom breaks and the panic spreads and prices fall without apparent bottom, business stagnates, commerce ceases to move, depositors are afraid to buy, and the commerce ceases to move, depositors are afraid to buy, and the banking business stagnates. The bankers then, not making loans and the depositors having ceased to issue checks and drafts, sur-render their Federal Reserve notes to the Federal Reserve Board, and then the Federal Reserve notes cease to circulate. This is just and then the Federal Reserve notes cease to circulate. This is just the time when circulation is required.

Now, about the assertion that currency and credit will be supplied when business demands it. Was that true when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was established and organized under President Hoover? Oh, no. The railroads, the insurance companies, the trust companies were screaming frantically for loans. Would the banks supply the credit and the essential part in currency that would be required by such institutions? Not at all. The United States Government was compelled to meet the failure of our normal credit institutions and to make the loans and to furnish the necessary currency to the railroads, the insurance of our normal credit institutions and to make the loans and to furnish the necessary currency to the railroads, the insurance companies, and the trust companies. Did the banks have plenty of money? In 1933 the clearing-house banks in New York petitioned President Hoover to declare a bank moratorium, stating that all of their gold, practically all of their real money, would be withdrawn and hoarded unless the banks were closed. The Governor of New York proclaimed the moratorium for the State of New York. President Hoover failed to declare the moratorium nationally. President Roosevelt declared the national moratorium on banks immediately on his inauguration. Could the banks protect themselves if and when the moratorium was ended? The President of the United States had to place the whole credit of the Government back of the banks before they could open. And later on Congress had to provide governmental bank-deposit insurance to maintain confidence in the banks. The only way that I know of that the Government could make good its guaranty of such deposits in case confidence in the Government were shaken and a panic arose and depositors demanded their money would be for the Government to have thirty or forty billions of dollars in Federal Reserve notes issued. That would not be reflation, but real and disastrous inflation. real and disastrous inflation.

real and disastrous inflation.

In the end there is nothing behind all of our deposits, our credits, and our guaranties, save and except the legal-tender money of the United States. I will admit that it is hardly possible, in my opinion, that our people will lose confidence in the credit of the United States; and, therefore, a reasonable amount of actual money will meet the requirements. This confidence has not always been shared by some of our great economists and financiers. We have snared by some of our great economists and manciers. We have no right, however, to base our monetary system entirely upon present conditions. We have no right, in acting for the future, to entirely exclude from our minds the possibility of a threat to our country that may to a certain extent shake the confidence of many people in our country in the soundness of Government and private people in our country in the soundness of Government and private credit. A large supply of gold and silver will, in my opinion, be the strongest support of the credit of our Government and its monetary system. Notwithstanding the fact that many governments have been compelled to resort to a managed currency with no metallic coverage, while others have inadequate metallic coverage, gold and silver will still purchase the necessities of life anywhere in the world. It is still the aspiration of governments to have metallic coverage for their currenties.

where in the world. It is still the aspiration of governments to have metallic coverage for their currencies.

There is nothing behind the Federal Reserve notes today save the power of the Government to pay the gold certificates held by the Federal Reserve bank, and it is undoubtedly its present intention to pay such certificates if it should become necessary to do so to maintain the parity of such Federal Reserve notes. The Federal Reserve notes were only required to have 40-percent gold reserve back of them; therefore, 60 percent of such issues were flat money. Even our silver certificates issued against silver dollars at the present price of silver have 33½ percent actual value behind them.

At this point let me emphatically assert that, in my opinion, every dollar of currency issued should constantly have 100-percent metallic coverage. No one may successfully contend that we have honest money until such coverage is provided and maintained. Prior to the time that we went off the gold standard and the mania for managed currency was forced upon the principal countries of the world, and we contracted the disease all of the gold.

Prior to the time that we went off the gold standard and the mania for managed currency was forced upon the principal countries of the world—and we contracted the disease—all of the gold that had moved into our country, except that which was earmarked or allocated, would have been coined into $5, $10, and $20 gold pieces and would have been in circulation in this country. Now we bury it in the ground while our Government pays interest for somebody else to furnish it with non-legal-tender credit. Professor Warren, I am informed and believe, who advised the bringing up of gold to $35 an ounce, anticipated as a part of his program that currency would be issued against the increased quantity and value, and thus raise commodity prices in this country. This essential part of Professor Warren's program was never carried out. The purchase of this gold was largely paid for by our exports, and to that extent our people benefited. The same is equally true of our purchase of foreign silver. The silver purchased through London was almost entirely paid for by our exports, as statistics will demonstrate. As our purchases of silver in London increased, our exports to Great Britain and her colonies and dependencies increased. So, as the price of silver increased did the exports increased, so decreased proportionately our exports.

We have not utilized the value of our gold to the fullest extent. We have not utilized the value of our gold to the fullest extent. It is probable, because it is natural, that after the political controversies of the world are adjusted—whether by war or peaceful means—that there will be a readjustment of international exchange. If and when that time takes place, the United States will find it necessary or advisable to part with a large portion of its gold in the process of the international stabilization of exchange and the support of those governments that desire to go upon the dollar exchange basis. To a certain extent this may be true of the Government's silver holdings, to a much smaller extent. S

Our Government has in circulation in the United States $1,689,-285,938 in silver coins and silver certificates. Each of the silver certificates is redeemable at the Treasury in a standard silver dollar. All of these silver coins and silver certificates are full legal tender for the payment of all debts, public and private. The silver in these coins is valued at $1.29 an ounce for the silver dollars and $1.38 an ounce for the subsidiary silver coins. The price is arrived at in this way.

this way:
There is approximately seventy-seven one hundredths of an ounce of silver in a dollar. Therefore an ounce of silver is valued at $1.29. There being less proportions of silver in the subsidiary silver coins, the silver in such coins is valued at $1.38 an ounce. The Government, in addition to this silver currency, owns 1,086,941,083 ounces of silver in bullion. The Government, in my opinion, has the power to raise and stabilize the world price of silver at $1.29 an ounce. It would be very advantageous and profitable to the Government to accomplish such an end, in my opinion. There would then be 100 percent intrinsic value behind all of its circulating silver currency. Its 1,086,941,083 ounces of silver bullion, which cost approximately, on the average, 50 cents an ounce, would have an intrinsic value throughout the world of $1.29 an ounce. The purchasing power of over one-half of the people of the world would be restored.

A great many of our economists and financiers contend that this Government, acting alone, has not such power; they contend that it can only be accomplished through concurrent international action. I do not believe that this is true. The Government has bid gold up to $35 an ounce, and has purchased gold very largely with its exports. By reason of such purchases by the United States the price of gold throughout the world is substantially $35 an ounce. If the Government offers to sell or trade our exports for silver at a price of $1.29 an ounce, such action will, in my opinion. raise and stabilize the price of silver throughout the world at $1.29 an ounce

It is contended that all of the silver in the world would flow into the United States because we would have valued the silver higher than other countries. If that were true then all importers would come to our country to buy our products and we would have a monopoly on world export to the extent of our export production. It isn't reasonable, however, that other countries would permit us this monopoly. They would, of course, meet the competition. That is, they would meet the competition by accepting silver for their resports at the same price.

The unfortunate part about the program is that our differential would not last long enough. There is not an unlimited quantity of silver in the world. In fact, it is estimated that there are not to exceed 15,000,000,000 ounces in the world. These estimates are based upon the records of production over a period of 400 years. The estimates of depreciation, in my opinion, have been entirely too small. India is estimated to have at least 6,000,000,000 ounces of silver, India is estimated to have at least 6,000,000,000 ounces of sliver, most of this silver, in fact, substantially all of it, being in the possession of the masses of people, held in the form of jewelry. It is their measure of wealth; it is their bank account; it is their hoardings. They reluctantly part with it. In times of distress they take chunks of it in to the market and with it buy food. In 1918, when the treasury of India was unable to redeem its paper rupee notes, the Indians refused to accept gold. Great Britain was compelled to come to the United States and have us, through an act of Congress, furnish them 20,800,000 ounces of silver, derived from the breaking furnish them 208,000,000 ounces of silver, derived from the breaking up of our standard silver dollars, so they could make such redemp-tion. In every effort of the British Government to get the silver out tion. In every effort of the British Government to get the silver out of India through melting up silver coins in the treasury and selling them on the world market as bullion at sacrifice prices and through the imposing of import duties on silver, they have utterly failed. The people of India continue to import and smuggle silver into India. They buy their cotton clothing with silver. The production of silver is decreasing by comparison with gold. For approximately 400 years the production of silver was 16 ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold. Today the production is only 7 ounces of silver to 1 of gold. With gold at $35 an ounce and silver at $1.29 the ratio would be 27.1 to 1.

It is send that India is on the gold standard. That is not true.

gold. With gold at $35 an ounce and silver at $1.29 the ratio would be 27.1 to 1.

It is said that India is on the gold standard. That is not true. The Government of India is on the pound sterling standard, but the people of India still have to buy their cotton clothes with silver. They buy the pound sterling with silver, and with the pound sterling they buy the cotton goods, chiefly from Great Britain, of course. When the price of their silver is high they buy more cotton clothes, and when the price of silver is low they economize, just as you and I do when there is a depression. The people of India are the chief users of cotton goods throughout the world. It is true that the people of India and the people in tropical countries are large users of cotton goods. The spinners of Liverpool, England, have only recently gotten out a pamphlet in which they prove, in my opinion, that the low price of silver is the cause of the loss of demand and the fall in the price of cotton goods.

In July I published through the press of the country an article in which I discussed the hopelessness of the cotton farmer and suggested that our Government trade 10 pounds of cotton for 1 ounce of silver. We have a surplus of over 13,000,000 bales of cotton which we cannot dispose of in the United States. In fact, we cannot dispose of it anywhere in the world at above the market price of around 8 cents a pound. It is probable that if we attempted to dispose of this large quantity at once, we either couldn't find any market for it at all or we would break the world price down to 4 or 5 cents a pound.

We have cotton that we must get rid of. The people that wear cents a pound.

We have cotton that we must get rid of. The people that wear cotton goods have silver that they are willing to trade for it. We are trying to fix an arbitrary parity price of 12.9 cents a pound for cotton. We should do it. It is the parity price. The wearers of cotton goods in India are unwilling to trade their silver at the value of 43 cents an ounce at any such arbitrary price as 12.9 cents a pound for cotton. Those opposed to the proposition say the cotton will only cost 4 or 5 cents a pound to the foreign importer. How would that affect us in this country? Our cotton producers would receive 12.9 cents a pound. The demand for cotton goods would be enormously enhanced. The incentive to increase the production of cotton abroad and to substitute other fibers would be eliminated. The foreign cotton market for the United States cotton would be restored and the destructive influences destroyed. ences destroyed.

The administration contends that it would lose the seigniorage on silver; that is, the difference between the 43 cents it has to pay for the silver abroad and the $1.29 an ounce that it would pay for for the silver abroad and the $1.29 an ounce that it would pay for it in the exchange for cotton. Maybe the loss for this extortion profit would be slightly more than the loss it has already sustained in paying bonuses and lending money to the cotton planters. It may not be as much as the Government will lose if it must continue with the present program. If not, then what? It seems inevitable to me that the present program must result in the absolute destruction of our foreign market for cotton. I believe that I am sustained in this conclusion by the opinion of many experts with regard to the raw-cotton industry.

Certainly, the receiving of such a quantity of silver—which would amount to approximately 800,000,000 ounces, injected into our currency—would not constitute infiation.

Our Government requires in its monetary system, in my opinion, at least $10,000,000,000 of legal tender, nonretirable currency. The $4,282,000,795 of Federal Reserve notes can be retired, which would permit a silver currency issue of $7,582,292,508 before the $10,000,000,000 in nonretirable currency was issued. It would never reach such an importation of silver, because other countries would accept silver for their exports.

silver for their exports.

I simply took cotton as an example. The same reasons apply to the trading of wheat for silver. In fact, if such program were put in force and effect, and it proved a success, there would be every reason why Congress should authorize such transactions with regard to all of our exports.

to all of our exports.

I delivered an address at the Mining Congress in Los Angeles, Calif., on October 26 dealing briefly with the plan for the exchange of cotton for silver. I am having a number of these speeches delivered to you. It will obviate the necessity of my going further into the discussion of the subject. I have of necessity written this letter hastily, by reason of my desire that it shall reach you before the organization of your annual convention. The American Farm Bureau Federation and the other farm organizations of this country are entitled to have great influence in the Government, and I sincerely hope that you will exert such influence. I know that it is the duty of your convention to speak for those whom you represent, and I do not think you will hesitate.

I wish the convention every success.

With personal regards, I beg to remain,
Sincerely yours,

KEY PITTMAN.

KEY PITTMAN.

Mr. BARKLEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it. Mr. BARKLEY. Has the time which has been occupied by the Senator from Oklahoma been charged to the proponents of the amendment, and is it the understanding that he having occupied all of that time, no one else may now speak in favor of the McKellar amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was the view of the Vice President at the time the President pro tempore took the chair that the time would be divided equally between the proponents and the opponents, allowing an hour and a half to each side.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I could not permit the record on the pending amendment to be closed without recording as clearly as I know how the reasons why I shall support the report and recommendations made by the Senate Committee on Appropriations to the Senate.

None will dispute the fact that I have given fullest support to the most liberal relief programs which have been advanced since Congress started appropriating to meet human needs resulting from the production of too much of everything needed. It may be said that, in addition to the production of too much of everything needed, our trouble has been traceable to years of economic propping in the hope and expectation that we could maintain the insane, unnatural, and unbalanced economy which war taught us to like while it lasted.

But, whatever the cause of our economic break-down, we know the price that has been and is being paid—human misery, lost homes and equities, lost hopes. To meet this need I have been willing to and have helped pour out unmeasured resources to alleviate that distress. I have helped pour priming into the national pump in the form of funds for loans and gifts to business, to home owners, to home builders, easy money to a broken banking system. I have given full measure of support to the creation and financing of P. W. A., W. P. A., Farm Security Administration, C. C. C., and every other cause which had as its purpose the restoration of normal opportunity for the people and the meeting of some of the needs of a people without the means to meet their own first needs. I have never questioned the wisdom of the huge amounts asked for these purposes, except as I have questioned whether we were meeting needs as fully as they should be met, as fully as a presumably rich nation ought to be eager to meet them. I have not been one who believed that we were impairing the future of the nation by adding to a national debt, for unlimited debt is still better than millions of hungry, unclothed, and unsheltered human beings. Give, give, help, help, help, has been my very definite purpose through each of these distressing years.

I have seen some most unhappy results flowing from our spending. I have seen heartless and impatient administrators giving of the help we voted here to those less—and sometimes least-deserving, while proud men and women have been coldly turned away. I have seen chiselers accommodated, but perhaps not more than were to be expected under necessarily hurried administration. I have seen waste. I have seen politics played with relief money and have felt the sting of the lash of relief politics; but this in spite of administration in my State, which did its utmost to prevent an inevitable result under a public relief program. I have seen some proud and courageous men and women drift and drift under relief to a point where it is all too apparent that they have come to assume that they shall always have relief and make no plans or seek no outlet whereby they might provide for themselves. I have seen men in business and operators of farms unable to get help they were ready to hire and needed because those whose help was needed were finding it easier under W. P A., but they were not the many whom we were trying to help.

I have seen all of this, yet have been willing to afford more of relief appropriations, because there seemed no escaping some of these consequences, and because I was sure we must one day find ourselves out of the economic swamp, and upon the road of normal recovery upon which to build a healthy prosperity and abundant opportunity for the millions of honest people who would welcome freedom from dependence upon relief. I insist again that I have given complete and unqualified support to those steps which were to accomplish this end.

Mr. President, I shall continue the pouring out of resources so long as there shall be need on the part of people who are helpless to help themselves through no fault of their own.

But when I see how little progress has been made against the conditions which we have been fighting, when I see as much or more unemployment than there was when we started our spending of billions, when I must see as many or more needy people than were in that unfortunate position when we went to the help of their kind with seeming unlimited relief, when I see and acknowledge those facts I swear it is high time to be taking strict and careful inventory of our direction and prospect, however good may have been and might be our purpose.

That inventory should pursue two definite lines. We should have determination of whether there is need for all that is being asked and proposed and if what we give in billions of dollars is being made to reach the largest possible number of people in need. Second, our inventory should be such a one as would let us know whether we are utilizing our resources spent in the name of relief and recovery in a way that accomplishes results against the fundamental ills.

There is no better time for that inventory than between now and next spring. We can best do this job by accepting, as a first step, the amount and provisions embodied in the pending relief bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee. And we can take this first step without inflicting any more suffering upon people than would be inflicted in February and March under the larger amount being asked for in the pending amendment to the deficiency relief appropriation

What is the situation? In the last session of Congress we appropriated such sums for relief as were recommended, as necessary up to the time when Congress would be reconvened. Upon convening we confront the fact that while Farm Security Administration and other agencies assisting in meeting the needs of people have balances to carry on operations to the end of the present fiscal year on June 30, the W. P. A. has only such funds as are necessary to carry on until February 4 or 7. A deficiency appropriation for a little less than 5 months of continued W. P. A. operation is asked. The President recommended an appropriation for this purpose of $875,000,000. The House of Representatives by a considerable majority voted to reduce this amount to $725,000,000, a reduction of about 17 percent. The Senate Appropriations Committee concurred in the House figure after writing into the measure provisions which would prevent any reduction of the W. P. A. rolls of more than 5 percent in the bitter winter months of February and March, and leaving the door wide open for additional appropriation in the event the President should see an emergency requiring more than would be left of the $725,000,000 for use in W. P. A. in April, May, and June. The committee had no thought of drastically departing from meeting proven needs under W. P. A. Now comes an amendment to the committee figure proposing restoration of the full amount recommended by the President.

What was the consideration which prompted the House and the Senate committee to adopt the lower figure? As a member of the committee, I can answer that question.

First in consideration was the determination not abruptly to force people off W. P. A. rolls in February and March. To have done otherwise would have been criminal. The committee had every right to believe that April, May, and June would bring conditions that would afford employment for many on relief and afford chance to reduce the W. P. A. rolls by June to at least a point approximating the number who were on the rolls a year ago this month when the employment problem was desperate throughout the country. What might be expected to make such reduction of numbers on W. P. A. possible? First, the natural opportunity for employment which comes with spring; second, employment resulting from the huge contemplated expenditures by reason of the emergency armament program involving several hundred million dollars; finally, there must come great opportunity for employment in March, April, and May and following months by reason of the tremendous public-works program which will get under way in full blast as soon as building weather arrives.

That, briefly, was the consideration which prompted the adoption of the lower figure of appropriation necessary to carry W. P. A. through to July 1, with, mind you, the promise of more if the President should report need for it as we approached those months when reduction of W. P. A. rolls is normally expected. What can be wrong, unfair, or unsafe about such a consideration?

Will it be said that we ought to appropriate definitely and finally for 5 months now and avoid the necessity of dealing with this question again? True, more time of the Congress might be required; but is it not certain that we can do a much more creditable job of measuring April, May, and June relief needs as we approach those months than by doing the longer range of guessing? Of course we can. We are going to have to be here. We are going to have to be determining the W. P. A. needs for the new year, beginning July 1, also during the same time. I think it is good sense to take advantage of the opportunity to do appropriating when we are nearer to what may be discovered to be the needs of the unemployed than we are now.

I have another, and, I believe, an equally sound, reason for wanting this chance for inventory of human needs.

Speaking only of the State I know best, and its neighbor States in the Northwest, I know the need for help by the people is greater today than has been true at any time in the past. That need will largely continue until there can be the harvesting of another crop in that section this fall. I would be the last to argue against probable need for more relief appropriation than is now being provided for unless I knew other sections of the Nation were showing larger prospect of early improvement than is true of my section. And frankness compels me to doubt how much of improvement is in store in the employment problem by reason of the W. P. A. and armament spending.

This brings me directly to the conclusion that this Congress must pause, take its inventory, and determine where we are going from here.

If we are going to have to conclude during this session that in spite of all we have done in a legislative way, in spite of all our spending, that we are where we were when we started this program, or worse off, then it is obviously our duty to change our direction of effort and go after our problem in a fundamental way.

I do not take the time now to argue in detail what I think we ought to do. I only want to say that, starting 18 years ago, I urged the thought shared by many more, namely, that no country could be long prosperous or could long escape quite complete economic decay if it permitted denial of an income to that third or fourth of our population at work and at home on the farms of America, such an income as would give a large part of our population the kind of buying power that would let them patronize American business and American labor. We all watched for years this denial to the farmer, even during years when other people, watching the stockmarket barometer, kidded themselves into believing that our Nation was enjoying a great prosperity. We all witnessed, finally, the crumbling of the whole structure builded upon a decaying agricultural industry.

Let us face the facts. We have tried to rebuild the structure. We have talked about and tried almost every plan suggested to rebuild, every plan but one as respects agriculture. For 10 years we have followed leadership in Congress, a leadership that was certainly sincere, yet a leadership that would hardly tolerate any plan that was not their own. Yet every plan tried, including the one now in operation, finds the farmer at the bottom of the heap, his obligations mounting, his lands getting away from him, prices for his product that do not even pay the cost of producing it.

This Government will come, must come, to adopt that farm program which guarantees the farmer an American price for that part of his product consumed in America—the American price of which I speak being the price that represents an average cost of producing the products plus a profit, with cost and profit to be determined on as sound a basis as that used by any successful businessman in determining his prices.

A large step in accomplishment of this purpose is found in the introduction of Senate bill 570, sponsored by 18 Members of the Senate. To its passage in this session I shall devote the most earnest effort of my life in Congress. Because the way for this legislation to become law will be made easier thereby, I hope this Congress may be confronted by an acknowledgment that we have really made no headway during these years of depression battling. That acknowledgment might be in the form of a request for more relief money to meet as large or a larger unemployment problem than we have found it necessary to meet in the late spring or summer of any one of these bad years. And when that kind of acknowledgment comes in the form of a request for more relief money than is provided in the pending measure, I am ready to appropriate as much more as is found necessary to meet the needs of the people, and then to become one of many, I hope, demanding that we go to the heart of this farm problem and make an American price possible for the farmers' products. Doing that is certain to afford more employment than all our relief bills combined, and do it within a very few months.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I have voted for W. P. A. bills and for relief bills since 1932. I intend to vote for the pending measure. However, I wish to reiterate what I have said on many occasions of this kind, that I cannot agree with the philosophy and the theory of economics which holds that spending for relief has anything to do with the permanent economic recovery of this country.

We must feed hungry people. We must vote for funds to feed hungry people. However, a permanent recovery cannot come from this form of expenditure of public money. We are treating the symptoms of a disease instead of the disease itself. Until we change the policy of treating the symptoms of disease instead of curing the cause of disease, I do not see any hope for permanent recovery.

When the time comes to consider the question of distribution of relief money I shall be in favor, as I always have been, of turning the distribution of that money over to local communities. Those in the local communities know who the needy are and will see that they are fed, and will see that chiselers are kept off the rolls, because the people in the community know who the chiselers are.

Although it is necessary to spend money for relief, I do not believe that form of spending is any more effective in bringing about permanent recovery than for a man to think he can drink himself sober.

I intend to vote to sustain the committee, because I feel that there is plenty of money to take care of all the needy, at least until the 1st of April or 1st of May. If by that time it becomes necessary to make further appropriations to carry on the activities until the 1st of July, I shall vote to provide funds to keep the needy from hunger and suffering.

Mr. BYRNES obtained the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ninety-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, during the debate on the committee amendment the time has been consumed in the discussion of what is known as the McKellar amendment. The Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, after careful investigation, recommended an appropriation of $725,000,000 as being adequate for W. P. A. until June 30. The House of Representatives, after debating the question, determined that that amount was sufficient. The subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee, after holding hearings for several days, concluded that $725,000,000 was a sufficient amount. By a vote of 17 to 7, the Appropriations Committee of the Senate agreed to it. Now that it is proposed to increase by $150,000,000 the amount that had been agreed upon by the House committee, by the House of Representatives, and by the Senate committee, certainly the burden of proof is upon those who seek to authorize the expenditure of the additional $150,000,000.

One argument made after the House acted was that during the cold weather, while snow was on the ground, men would be thrown out of jobs. Now, under the language of the amendment reported by the Appropriations Committee, that argument must be abandoned, because whereas under the McKellar amendment without the language of the Appropriations Committee amendment, the Administrator might reduce the number of persons on W. P. A. rolls from 3,000,000 to 2,500,000, or any other figure. Under the language of the committee report the Administrator cannot reduce the number more than 5 percent. It does not provide that he must reduce the number 5 percent, but it provides that he cannot reduce the number more than 5 percent. So, under the language of the joint resolution as it is presented to the Senate, every Senator knows when he casts his vote for it that, under no circumstances, could more than 5 percent of the people now working on W .P. A. projects be removed from their jobs prior to April 1.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The committee amendment, to which there is no opposition, would apply equally to the $875,000,000 appropriation as it would to the $725,000,000 appropriation.

Mr. BYRNES. I am glad to hear the Senator from Tennessee say that there is no opposition to it, because up to this moment I judged from the debate that it was opposed. Therefore there can be no question on that issue, and regardless of whether Senators accept the Senate committee report or adopt the McKellar amendment not more than 5 percent of those working for W. P. A. can be removed prior to April 1. So by action of the Appropriations Committee that assurance is given to those who believe there should be no reduction in the rolls prior to that date.

The next clause in the committee amendment provides that if prior to the end of the fiscal year the President concludes that an emergency exists justifying the appropriation of an additional amount he may submit such an estimate to the Congress and accompany it with a statement of the facts constituting the emergency. Members of the Senate have said the President could do that, anyway, but there should be no objection to our including in the pending measure the same language that is carried in the existing law. The law which is in existence today provides that should the President conclude additional appropriations are necessary he may come to the Congress and ask for them and submit a statement of

When Senators say there is no justification for such a provision, let me call their attention to the fact that last June the President believed that $1,425,000,000 would be sufficient to carry W. P. A. until March 1. Here, in January, the President concludes that that is not sufficient, and he submits an estimate for money to be appropriated prior to March 1, beginning February 7.

The purpose of this amendment is to tell the world that, under the language of the Appropriations Committee report, the President on June 1 can do exactly what he did on January 3. On January 3 he submitted a request for an additional appropriation which, in his opinion, is necessary under the conditions now existing. Under the language of the committee report, nothing can stop him from doing on June 1, 30 days before the expiration of the time for the expenditure of this money, exactly what he has done this January, a few weeks before the expiration of the time for the expenditure of the $1,425,000,000.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. It is only recently, is it not, that the President has been required to make two separate requests of the Congress in order to get the annual relief-work appropria-

Mr. BYRNES. The President has never been "required," but the President submitted an estimate of $1,425,000,000 to the Congress. That was his estimate and not one dollar was deducted from it. He submitted the estimate without any action by Congress. The Congress then acted upon the estimate and provided the funds until March 1.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes. Mr. PEPPER. If it is the present practice to require at least two recommendations by the President to make up the appropriation for the entire fiscal year, does the Senator propose that the President shall have to make three requests in order to complete the appropriation for the present fiscal

Mr. BYRNES. I do not think there is any need to answer the question. The President submitted in good faith what he thought in June was going to be sufficient until the middle of March. The President has found that it was not sufficient, and in the same good faith he has come to Congress and said, "The money given me is not sufficient, and I want additional funds from February 7 to March 1"; and the Congress is giving it to him.

There is one other phase of the committee amendment to which I wish to call attention. The third is that there will be an investigation of the rolls of the W. P. A. throughout the country in order to determine whether there can be eliminated from those rolls persons who are not in actual need. During the discussion one Member of the Senate said that might be inconsistent with the provision that not more than 5 percent should be reduced prior to April 1. That is not so. I offered the amendment. I want such an investigation made. I know it cannot be done in a few days or a few weeks; I know it would be fortunate if it could be done in a few months, but I believe it should be done, even in a small way.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that some weeks ago I wrote to the Administrator and asked him for a statement as to the number of persons on the rolls of W. P. A. who at the same time had husband or wife employed in one of the executive departments. I would not enter into a discussion such as we have had in the past as to whether or not a husband or a wife should be on the rolls of the Federal Government when the spouse of one or the other is working; but I think that when it comes to a relief agency, organized for the purpose of providing employment for persons who are in need, it is in a different situation from that of any other department of the Government. Certainly in an organization which seeks to provide jobs for people who are in need we should not provide jobs for husband and wife in the same organization, but rather if a man is at work in the W. P. A. organization, his wife should not also be given a job so long as there are thousands and thousands of people in this country without any work at all.

The Administrator responded to me with the statement that there are 46 persons employed in an administrative capacity who have husband or wife employed by the Works Progress Administration. In other words, here in Washington there are 46 persons employed by the W. P. A. in an administrative capacity, husbands and wives, in the same organization.

My other question was as to the number employed who had husband or wife in any other department of the Government. The answer was that 211 of their employees here have a husband or wife employed in other departments of the Government.

I then asked for a statement as to the situation throughout the Nation in the field. Though I made the request on November 19, 1938, and though I know the Administrator made an effort to secure the information, up until a few days ago he had been unable to secure the information except from some of the States. He has sent me the list up to this date, showing that 128 of the employees in the field have husband or wife employed in other branches of the Federal Government. I judge from the list that most of the States have not been heard from.

I know that in every community in which I have visited and discussed Works Progress projects, I have been toldoften, I think, erroneously-of just such things that have caused the people to inquire of me as to what could be done. I believe the Administrator can make an investigation throughout the country of those who are on projects, and in many instances find it possible to reduce the number. I may say, too, that when this matter was discussed with the Administrator before the Appropriations Committee and he was asked as to his procedure in case we should adopt a provision of this kind, he said he would be glad to cooperate. I am satisfied that when he does, it will be reflected in a reduction of the rolls.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. The committee amendment does not provide for dismissing any persons from the rolls during the months of February or March, does it?

Mr. BYRNES. During February and March, during the cold weather, not more than 5 percent may be discharged by administrative act. A man may leave. The amendment does not say that 5 percent must be dismissed, but says that in no case shall the number dismissed be more than 5 percent. Then in May, in June, or in April, if some emergency shall arise, or if the President shall conclude, as he has concluded now, that more money should be appropriated, he may ask the Congress for it. The Senator from Pennsylvania knows, as I know, that there never has been a time when the Congress has not provided him with appropriations for this purpose.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. The President is not limited to asking for the difference of $150,000,000. He may ask for $250,000,000 or $500,000,000 in April or May, may he not, if he wishes to do so?

Mr. BYRNES. He may ask for any amount that he deems necessary, whether it is $100,000,000 or $500,000,000.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. One minute. The President may come to the Congress then in the light of the conditions which then exist.

What is the reason for the action of the committee? Let me say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that there is a reason for its action. There should be no substantial reduction until April 1: but when April 1 comes, and agricultural operations are resumed in the country, when the farmers of the West and the farmers of the South and East want agricultural workers back on the farm. I do not agree with gentlemen who say there should be no reduction. I say the rolls then should be examined, and the authorities should be encouraged to remove from the rolls men who have been placed on the rolls recently, when there was some question as to their need, and the farmers should be given some chance to get agricultural workers back on the farms of the country. If the rolls are not reduced, we shall be put in the position of paying men fixed wages, based on an hourly wage, working not more than 120 hours a month; and no farmer growing wheat and no farmer growing cotton can compete with W. P. A. for such employment.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. Let me go on because my time is limited.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.
Mr. DAVIS. Looking at the matter from a practical point of view, then, this is just an appropriation, so to speak, for 2 or 3 months. The President may use it all if he desires to do so, and then come back and ask for additional funds?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNES. One minute; one at a time.

There is this provision: The amount is appropriated for the fiscal year. The President may come back on April 1, if he desires to do so, just as he has come back now in January when the amount was appropriated until March 1. There is not any reason why he may not come here for more money, and he will never come here with an appeal of this kind for money if there is no demand throughout the country for it.

Let us be fair. I do not have to go to a mayors' conference. There is not a mayor in the United States who is not going to send a telegram here asking us to vote for an increased appropriation for this purpose. We are not children. Look at the minority views and at the answers of the mayors. A mayor says, "I need money here." "I need so much in Wisconsin." "I need so much in Columbia, S. C." The mayor says, "I need it." He would be a fool if he did not say so, because when he gets a telegram from the authorities here asking him to send a message of that kind, if he says he does not need the money, he will stand a fat chance of getting allotments for projects hereafter; so he has to say, "I need the money." When the mayors talk to us personally, they say, "Well, you did not expect us to say anything else; did you?" We know that some of the mayors have been here; and this is the vicious circle: After sending such a telegram, I see the mayor of Columbia, S. C., when he comes here again. He will walk into headquarters and say, "When you were in trouble, and you needed money, I got a telegram asking me to say I needed money, and I sent the telegram. You used me. Now I do not want any crumbs from the table. I am a telegraph man. I want big money. I am tired of your handing me any $50,000 or $75,000."

I do not care whether it is the mayor of Squedunk or of Columbia or of New York; the attitude is the same; and why not? Because the mayors have to stand for reelection. Their success is dependent upon the monuments they can show around their cities. I have never been able to interest a mayor on the question of relief; it is the question of projects they can get that interests them. That is human nature. It always will be so.

Some of us must remember what I heard the late Champ Clark say when I first came to the House of Representatives, long, long ago. He said:

You will often get telegrams, you will get letters, and you will think everybody in the world is writing you; but, after all, the duty of a legislator is to remember the man who never wires him, who never writes him, but who has confidence in his integrity, and relies upon the legislator remembering him and his interests instead of the special interests that have his ear and can present their pleas to him.

I always think not only of the 3,000,000 employed on W. P. A. projects, but I think, in addition, of the 127,000,000 people of this country. How many gainfully employed men are there? There are now thirty-two million and a fraction who are gainfully employed. As they go to work today, they go to work knowing that if they buy a package of cigarettes on the way they are going to pay a tax, and we are going to take that tax and use it to employ persons on W. P. A. They say, "If you do it, be sure that the man who gets the money is actually in need. Be sure that the money is wisely spent. Do not tax me 1 cent a gallon on every gallon of gasoline I buy, do not tax every cigarette I smoke, and then take the money and spend it unwisely." It is our duty always to remember the 127,000,000 who send us no telegrams, but whose interests are just as important as the interests of those who are employed on W. P. A. jobs.

Let me tell the Senate something. One million nine hundred thousand men were employed on W. P. A. projects in January 1938. Who does not recall the condition in January 1938? At that time the automobile industry was prostrate. The textile industry was closed down over the entire Nation. In January 1938 the farmers were out of work. All over the country there was gloom. At that time Congress thought it was generous when it provided for an appropriation of $1,900,000. Today we have increased the number of employed persons in the country by 1,000,000; and at the same time, instead of reducing the number of W. P. A. workers below 1,900,000, we have added 1,000,000 to the number in January 1938.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, does the Senator decline to yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I will yield to the Senator from Florida for a question.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator said that if an emergency should present itself, the President could come back to Congress and ask for more funds. I should like to ask the Senator if he is not aware of the testimony of Colonel Harrington, the Administrator, that the W. P. A. is taking care of only 27 percent of the 11,000,000 unemployed persons?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if there is anyone aware of it, the Senator from South Carolina is.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. In view of some questions which have been asked, I wish to recall the Senator's attention to a verification of his statement as to the occasion for the appropriation for a limited time. On April 14, 1938, the President in his message on relief and unemployment recommendation said:

I recommend an appropriation of $1,250,000,000 for the Works Progress Administration, to be used during the first 7 months of the next fiscal year. Such a grant is ammunition of the highest grade for attack on recession. It will not greatly increase the present rate of expenditure, but ought to be sufficient to care for the additional men and women who have come or are coming to an end of their unemployment insurance payments.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, that is true, Mr. President. That was the figure the President submitted, and I voted for it, and all the Members of the Senate, as I recall, voted for it, certainly with very few exceptions, if any. We voted for it because we believed that appropriation was essential. And just in the same way the President can come back in April, May, or June next and present his request for more money.

The Senator from Florida asks about the 27 percent. I have had to give considerable study to that question, and I hope the time has not come when the Senate is going to believe that we can ever regard the Works Progress Administration as the first line of defense against unemployment in this country. The very statement he makes is proof that we cannot. The figures as to the number of unemployed in this country will vary as the estimators vary it, but let us say that out of 10,000,000, only 3,000,000 today are on the rolls of W. P. A.

What about the unemployed? Where must they look for help? The unemployment compensation insurance covers 60 percent of the gainfully employed people of this country. If of the 10,000,000 unemployed 60 percent, or 6,000,000, can be covered by unemployment insurance, it must be recalled that that does not include agricultural workers, domestic servants, or those who have been on the unemployment-insurance rolls for more than 13 weeks. But there are only 4,000,000 of those. Therefore, we can see that we must look to unemployment-insurance compensation to take care of the people who are out of work among the 60 percent of the

Where are we to get the money to take care of these people? We have already collected it from the people of this country, and it is in the Treasury. On January 1, 23 States entered upon unemployment compensation programs. They will take care of that class from now until June 1 to an extent that we have not done heretofore. Then there are other factors.

Then there are other factors.

gainfully employed people of this country.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator know how many of these 10,000,000 are eligible for unemployment compensation during the next 5 months?

Mr. BYRNES. I was just saying to the Senate that it is 60 percent, according to the unemployment insurance people and their estimators—and it is only an estimate—or perhaps 62 percent.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Sixty percent of the 10,000,000? Mr. BYRNES. They say 60 percent of the gainfully employed people.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. What percentage of the 10,000,-000 have been gainfully employed long enough to be eligible within the next 5 months?

Mr. BYRNES. It would be, of course, impossible to estimate that. I suppose it would vary from day to day. Every man knows that since 23 States will now have unemployment insurance which did not have it before, we are better fixed financially to take care of this situation.

We are urged to spend the money. We made an appropriation for P. W. A. of $965,000,000 in the closing days of the last Congress. How much of that has been spent? I asked the Treasury this morning to give me the figures as to how much had been spent to date, and I find that of the $965,000,000 only $170,000,000 has been spent, on the basis of checks issued.

Let us see how this money is allocated. Thirty-five million dollars is allocated for administration, $200,000,000 for Federal projects, $667,000,000 for grants. When $667,000,000 is allocated for grants it means that every sponsor has to put up 55 percent against 45 percent, so it means that there is available for expenditure $1,482,000,000.

On the question of public spending, if we have $1,482,-000,000, plus the $725,000,000, plus all the other amounts, who can say that we are turning our backs upon a program because we do not increase the appropriation $150,000,000 over what the House put in the bill?

Let me tell the Senate another thing: The sponsors of the proposed increase say: "Yes; but those sponsoring the contributions are not able to contribute." Not able to contribute? I would demand that the local governments put up this year what they put up last year, and if I did, I would have about $32,000,000 more. Last year we had sponsoring contributions by local governments to the extent of 22 percent, and this year we have approximately 17 and a fraction, 5 percent less. We can take the 5 percent additional if the States, counties, and cities put it up. But it is said they cannot put it up. Why? Who is putting up this money for P. W. A. down in one corner of this city? The States, counties, and cities put up a hundred and some million dollars, and are clamoring, from California to the Carolinas, for the privilege of putting up 55 percent more for every dollar they can get from the Federal Government-clamoring from the State of every Senator here. Therefore they cannot come and say, "If you cut the W. P. A. appropriation, we cannot put up more than 17 percent."

Of course, if we give it to them, we cannot blame them for not putting up more than they have to. I would require them to do just what they were doing last year, and if we did that, there would be no quarrel about money at all.

Only one thing more, Mr. President, because the Senator from Colorado is to close the debate.

I wish to call attention to what the House of Representatives did. The House passed the bill by 100 majority, as I recall or approximately that. It put $725,000,000 in the bill. Today is Friday. Next Wednesday will be the 1st of the month. There has been much talk about not having money. There is nothing to that. Every bit of the testimony shows that the Administrator has money to run until February 7.

But I know what is going to occur. If we change the joint resolution as it passed the House, if we say that because the mayor of Squedunk has telegraphed here we will not stand by the action of the House and the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and increase the amount, we know that tomorrow the Government Printing Office will not be working, and after we have gotten through with the bill, even if we passed it tonight, it would be printed and sent to the House Monday morning, and when it goes to the House the House will determine whether to agree with the Senate amendments or to send the bill to conference. The bill will be sent to conference. On one side the House will stand for $725,000,-000, and the Senate for another amount, and we will stay in conference. The Senate conferees, no matter who they are, will finally say, "You must go back to the House for a vote." It will go back to the House, and, under the rules of the House, must lie over another day. Some time at the end of next week, as we approach February 7, this matter will be hung up in conference. Those in charge of W. P. A. cannot know any better than we know whether it will come out by February 7 or not, the two Houses being in disagreement. They will be in disagreement about what? About absolutely nothing, for, after all, as men of common sense, we know that when we have appropriated money to keep every man on the rolls during the cold weather, and to carry them to June, and have provided that not only shall the existing law be carried out, but have invited the President to ask for anything more that is needed, why should we tie up this bill, send it to conference, incur the delay, and leave the uncertainty in regard to W. P. A. that is certain to exist?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would not be absolutely necessary that the bill go to conference. The House never had a roll-call vote on the amount. They could have one if the bill went back containing the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNES. They could have it on any question. The bill has other items in it, amendments which we know are controversial, which we are going to find controversial, and which will occasion a great deal of debate after the pending amendment is voted on. I have not the slightest idea we could get through with the bill today, from the number of Senators I know who desire to talk about other amendments. We will be fortunate if we get a vote on it Monday night, when the bill will start on its long trail to conference, and then come out; and all for what? For nothing. If Colonel Harrington says it should be $875,000,000, it must not be $874,000,000.

We do not want any such situation. All legislation is a compromise. There is no great moral issue involved in this matter. It is solely a question of method and procedure. Congress is going to afford whatever appropriations are essential. I hope the Senate will sustain the Committee on Appropriations and sustain the House of Representatives in this matter.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] stated that there was not much involved in the difference between the two sums. I have rather come to a different view after listening to the argument. I discover that $150,000,000, according to the stories which are told on the floor of the Senate, will employ 2,000,000 men, while the $725,000,000 will employ only 1,000,000; that if we can add $150,000,000 to the $725,000,000 we can add 2,000,000 people to the rolls. If we could get another $150,000,000 as potent as that $150,000,000, we would need but $300,000,000 to do the whole job. The difference between the sum included in the McKellar amendment and that carried in the House amendment is 17 percent, but we find all through the country, all through the Senate, and all through the Capitol, that statements are being made that if the appropriation is cut 17 percent employment will be cut 67 percent.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Gladly.

Mr. FRAZIER. The figures show that in North Daketa, from October 29 to January 14-

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask whose figures?

Mr. FRAZIER. W. P. A. figures. Figures given by the Administration. We have to take their figures if we take anyone's figures. Those figures show that the cut in W. P. A. workers was 19 percent from October 29 to January 14. In North Dakota the number of W. P. A. workers has been cut down by 19 percent in that period because of lack of money. That was during the cold weather.

Mr. ADAMS. The two differing views started from the same point. They started with the present basis of employment. The question is as to what can be done with the respective sums of money and what ought to be done. The Appropriations Committee gave very careful consideration to the problem. The committee came to agreement with the House that $725,000,000, in addition to the moneys available, would be adequate to meet the situation, but, out of precaution, the committee added in its amendment the suggestion that if the committee's judgment was erroneous additional appropriations could and would be made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado vield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. A moment ago the Senator referred rather facetiously to what was suggested might occur in the event of a 17-percent cut.

Mr. ADAMS. No; I was not facetious.

Mr. BARKLEY. I withdraw the "facetiosity." [Laugh-

Mr. ADAMS. I was very much in earnest.

Mr. BARKLEY. We are likely to be misled, unintentionally, by the suggestion that a 17-percent cut in the amount reflects a certain figure in the number of men employed, but in order for the 17-percent cut in the amount to be reflected in employment, the entire 17 percent would have to be eliminated at once. But no one proposes that. No one proposes that we cut off 17 percent on the 1st day of February, and continue that 17-percent cut until the 1st day of July. In order for the 17 percent in money to be reflected by 17 percent in employment it is necessary to eliminate 17 percent at once. No one proposes that, and because no one proposes it the unemployment list, the dismissals, must be stretched over a period. When the time comes, be it April or May or June, it will be necessary to dismiss many more than 17 percent, because that many have not been dismissed in February and March and probably in April. Has the Senator given consideration to that?

Mr. ADAMS. Very much consideration. Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator admits, though, that 17 percent, if it is reflected in employment, must take effect at once.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator is dealing with the same two sums. The Senator is dealing with the same decline in employment, and the Senator finds a 17-percent difference.

Mr. BARKLEY. The 17 percent cut in money takes effect at once, so that if it is to be a criterion by which we are to go, the 17 percent in the cut of employment must take effect at once.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have noticed that the most ardent, the most vigorous, the most vociferous supporters of the recovery program have the least confidence in it. Some of us who have not had the fullest confidence in the recovery program have more confidence in it than have those who have more vigorously asserted their confidence. Why do I say that? We are dealing with the question of names on the rolls. Colonel Harrington has said to us that if we give him the money he asks for, he will have a reduction in the employment rolls of only 300,000 between the 1st of January and the 1st of July, notwithstanding all of the tremendous expenditures made by the Government in public works, for farm relief, and in a hundred other ways. Notwithstanding the coming on of the agricultural season, notwithstanding an upraise in business conditions, the colonel sees a decline in the work-relief rolls of only 300,000. He does not have much confidence in the recovery program, and those who are supporting his high figure have the same lack of confidence he has.

Let me give the Senate some figures. In 1936, from February to July, the relief rolls dropped 786,000. In 1937 the relief rolls dropped 576,000. We have had a drop in relief rolls from the end of October 1938 until the 31st of December, 2 months, of 256,000, almost as many in 2 months in the wintertime as the Administrator figures will be dropped from January until July, through increasing private employment due to agricultural and industrial activities. The majority of the committee have confidence in the recovery program. We look to see men put to work.

Let us take the other side of it. In 1938, from January to July, there was an increase in the relief rolls of 1,066,000. Yet when we talk of a decrease in the employment rolls of 600,000 or 700,000 under favorable conditions, it is said that that is preposterous. Back in 1929 we saw from 10,000,000 to 12,000,00 men go out of employment in almost a day, and yet it is said to us that it is not possible to put a million men to work off the relief rolls in 6 months. I think it is. I think it will be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The hearings show that 27 percent, or practically 1 out of 4-the other day I said 1 out of 5, and I was evidently mistaken, but 1 out of 4-of those on relief are employed every time private industry takes people back to work. In other words, in order to employ a million of those now on the rolls of the W. P. A. it would be necessary to have 3,000,000 outside of the rolls reemployed, making a total of 4,000,000, on the basis of 1 to 4. Does the Senator or anyone believe that from now to July there will be 4,000,000 persons taken back in private employment?

Mr. ADAMS. I say to the able Senator that, following his leadership, following the leadership of the head of our administration, I do believe we shall see such an increase in employment in the next 6 months.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the Senator believes that in the next 5 months-it is not 6 months-

Mr. ADAMS. Five months; yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. That private industry will take back four times as many men as were taken back in the year 1938?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should devoutly hope that that would occur, but I am not optimistic enough to believe that it will

Mr. ADAMS. As I have said, I have far greater confidence in the recovery program than has the Senator from Kentucky. I believe when we have put a billion and a half dollars into the Public Works program, when we have paid to the farmers $750,000,000, when, in almost endless quantity, we have poured out money throughout the land, that it is going to result in great reemployment, and I think that business conditions are on the upgrade. I am sure that if Congress gives encouragement to the country, if the country believes that Congress is going to act with some discretion, that Congress is going to put the brakes on a program of spending and borrowing, we will encourage industry, and we will be surprised and amazed at the reemployment in our land.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. I am sorry, but I do not have sufficient time

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The $150,000,000 is but a part of this problem. The far greater question is, What is the judgment of the American people of their Congress? What is in the heart and mind of the people themselves? If the people of the United States, those who have the opportunity to employ others, feel that there is a chance to go ahead, that there is a chance to do business, a chance to make a profit, then we shall find business making use of the idle billions accumulated in our banks. Men will go to work. On the other hand, if the people of this country who are in a position to become employers think that Congress has only to be asked by any group to grant any sum, and it will do so, then the hearts of businessmen become chilled and unemployment will continue. We at this point are going to signal to the business of this country as to what is the purpose, what is the intent, what is the character of the American Government and its Congress.

That is what makes this vote important. So far as relief is concerned, so far as being hungry or cold is concerned, it will not make a particle of difference to any man, woman, or child in America whether we vote for $875,000,000 or $725,000,000, because the Congress will not permit the people to suffer from cold or hunger. However, it makes a vast difference in the attitude of mind that we create throughout the length and breadth of the land. There are some in this body and elsewhere who may well have read the signs in

I wish to say a few words about the three letters which were put into the RECORD yesterday. The first was a letter from Colonel Harrington. He stated that I had made an error in saying that he had made an error of $11,000,000. He said I was wrong, and that his error was only $5,500,000. I am willing to be corrected, and concede that the colonel was wrong only to the extent indicated.

Through this letter he calls my attention to the fact that there is another error. He said that he had been accused of being wrong in saying that $45,000,000 was available which he had not included in his figures. I was wrong again. There was available $90,000,000 and not $45,000,000. Colonel Harrington points it out by inference in his letter.

So the colonel and I have both been wrong. Nevertheless, there is left available for expenditure a net amount of $85,-000,000 which was not included in the colonel's figures.

We are told about the lapse of appropriations, and how there must be what the genial and distinguished majority leader, in his innocence, called a "hang-over." Senators know that under the law an appropriation is made for a fiscal period. A 1938 appropriation may not be spent in 1939 without the consent of Congress, and a 1939 appropriation may not be spent in 1938. Yet we are told that there is an apparent discrepancy in the Budget.

The Bureau of the Budget made an unusual provision. They recommended for the current fiscal year an appropriation of $875,000,000, and provided that they were going to spend $750,000,000, leaving a gap of $125,000,000 between what they were going to spend and what they asked for. Coupled with that statement was a recommendation as to 1940. The Bureau of the Budget recommended for 1940 an appropriation of $1,740,000,000 to cover an expenditure of $1,740,000,-000. Different treatment was given to 1939 than to 1940. What did the Administration say? They said, "We shall have to spend the $750,000,000 during 1939, but we want $125,-000,000 as a sort of working balance."

A working balance is necessary, but it can be spent only for obligations of 1939. To illustrate, if a contract for a bridge to be built is made in the latter part of 1939, it may not be paid for with moneys appropriated for 1940, but it may be paid for in 1940 with moneys appropriated for 1939. It is the date when the obligation was incurred which governs, and not the date when the payment is made. In other words, at the beginning of 1939 there was inevitably substantially the same amount of money hanging over to pay preceding bills as at the end. However, no allowance is made for that

Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes | mentioned the city situation. Much pressure has been sought to be exerted upon us by the cities of the country. I do not blame the cities at all. Why? The cities of the country have profited from the W. P. A. What have the cities, counties, and States received? On an average, they are putting up $17 in 1939 and receiving four times that much. In other words, W. P. A. money is being spent for improvements in cities, counties, and States. One hundred percent of the expenditures goes into the city, the county, or the State, and the city, county, or State puts up only $17. Our cities are being filled with new structures. Their sewers, water plants, streets, highways, and bridges are being built with Government money. I do not blame them. They say they cannot put up any more. Why do they say it? They say, "We have statutory limits on our taxing power or borrowing capacity."

The depression has continued for 9 years. The W. P A. has been in existence since 1935. It never seems to have occurred to any of the local authorities that they could go to the legislatures or the people and obtain permission to raise their taxing rate or their bonding power. So I do not blame them for coming to the Federal Government.

I am reminded of the notice which was put upon the bulletin board at W. P. A. headquarters. What did it say? Did it evidence an interest in the people who were hungiy? No. It said:

Spend 25 cents. Send a telegram to your Senator today. Pro-est W. P. A. appropriation cuts. Protest civil-service ban on W. P. A. employees. Protect your job.

In other words, the employees, whoever they were, were interested in their jobs. They did not want to lose the chance of their jobs being made permanent. They wanted their jobs, and they were not thinking of the public.

Mr. President, time does not permit me to say many, many things; so I merely wish to add that in my judgment the country is justly looking at the Congress to determine what is the mind of the Congress, whether we are looking forward or whether we are merely looking at what is immediately under our eyes.

We have an indebtedness of more than $40,000,000,000. We have a deficit which will be $4,000,000,000 next year. We have been very generous in the past years in providing for relief. But with whose money have we been generous? With our own? Have we raised the taxes from ourselves and our constituents to pay the cost? No. We have been liberal with the money of those who are coming after us. We have not spent any of our own money for relief. We have used all the money which we have raised by taxes in the payment of the ordinary running expenses of the Government, and in a few incidentals. All the relief money which we have spent with such alleged generosity has come from borrowings, which will have to be paid by those who come after us.

Some have been very, very critical of those of us who are interested in the Public Treasury and in the public credit. We have a choice in the matter. Are we interested in the United States of America as it will be tomorrow and the day after? Are we interested in the Constitution and institutions of the United States of America, under which we hope that our children and our grandchildren will live? Or do we propose to go on spending endlessly and thoughtlessly, being comfortable today because we protect ourselves temporarily against uncomfortable sights? No. We are seeking to bridge over the depression and the unpleasant things by using the credit of the United States, and we are passing on to those who are to come after us the cost of doing the things for which we claim so much.

I have a personal interest in this problem. I have children of my own. I am more interested in them than I am in myself. I have stood here day by day fighting the battle, not that I might be popular with those who are eating public money, not that I might receive the acclaim of those who would benefit, but in my fervent hope that I might help to pass on a sound, stable government to those for whom I have more regard than for myself, that my children and my grand-children might live under the Constitution and institutions of this Nation, and that those institutions may not be broken down by loose fiscal policies and spending beyond our means. Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	Lee	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	Lewis	Schwartz
Ashurst	Frazier	Lodge	Schwellenbach

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I again announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez] is detained from the Senate on important public business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ninety-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The clerk will read the unanimous-consent agreement entered into yesterday which governs the proceedings at this time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, that at not later than 3 o'clock p. m., Friday, January 27, 1939, the Senate proceed to vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Mc-Kellar] to H. J. Res. 83, a joint resolution making additional appropriations for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will now state the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee, which is under consideration. The Legislative Clerk. On page 1, line 8, it is proposed to strike out "$725,000,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$875,000,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar].

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. McKELLAR asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Bridges] who is detained from the Senate because of illness in his family. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea," and if the Senator from New Hampshire were permitted to vote he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Chavez], if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. BYRNES. I may say that the Senator from New Mexico is absent but could not obtain a pair.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I may say in connection with the absence of my colleague [Mr. Chavez] that he advised me by wire that he understood that he had a pair. He regrets very much that he does not have a pair. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 47, as follows:

		110 10
Andrews Ashurst Barkley Bilbo Bone Borah Brown Caraway Clark, Idaho Connally Donahey Downey	Ellender Frazier Green Guffey Hayden Hill Hughes Johnson, Colo. King Lodge Lucas McCarran McNary Nye Radcliffe Reed Reynolds Russell	Shipstead Smith Taft Tobey Townsend Truman Tydings Vandenberg Van Nuys White Wiley
	NOT V	OTING-3
Bridges	Chavez	Thomas, Utah

So Mr. McKellar's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote which has just been taken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] to reconsider the vote just taken.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, on account of the limitation of the time for debate, and the fact that I had no opportunity to speak on the subject, I should like to have printed in the Record, in connection with the debate, a statement giving the reasons for my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the statement may be printed in the Record.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR WALSH

The uppermost consideration with respect to the resolution before the Senate to provide funds, in view of the present deficiency, to carry on the W. P. A. for the remainder of the current fiscal year, namely, to next June 30, is the question of the necessities of the needy and avoidance of suffering. There are other questions—as to methods of administration, as to scales of work-relief wages and differentials, as to the extent of the States' contribution to relief, as to politics in relief, and many other phases of the subject. All of these are important. All of them must be dealt with by the Congress in the general W. P. A. appropriation bill for the fiscal year beginning July 1. But the paramount question now is how rapidly the present relief rolls may be reduced without excessive distress and suffering.

Those Senators who are able to reach the conclusion that the relief rolls may be progressively reduced in large numbers during the coming months without turning loose thousands of men and women genuinely in need of the relief, and who are able to reach women genuinely in need of the relief, and who are able to reach the conclusion that the States and the cities will be able to take care of such as are dropped, and also who are able to persuade themselves that under the spur of necessity large economies and reduction in administrative expenses of the W. P. A. can be put into effect, may thereby justify their support of the $725,000,000 reported by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate.

Such Senators as entertain the opposite views, namely, that an appropriation of less than $875,000,000, the amount requested by the President, will necessarily result in far greater reductions in the relief rolls and far more rapidly than conditions will safely permit, and that the States and municipalities are utterly unable to take over the care and maintenance of additional quotas of needy unemployed, which, I am advised by the mayors, is the condition in Massachusetts, have no alternative but to vote for the amount of money now requested by the President. A telegram from a Massachusetts mayor, and which is similar to many others I have received, illustrates the situation which might follow any reduction: "City of Lynn expenditures for relief in 1936, outside of Federal aid for old-age assistance and aid to dependent children, was:

"City of Lynn expenditures for relief in 1936, outside of Federal aid for old-age assistance and aid to dependent children, was: Welfare, $670,799.49; dependent children, $92,075.36; old-age assistance, $437,813.91; soldiers' relief, $77,536.73; materials for W. P. A., $400,000; a total of $1,678,225.39, or $12.14 on the tax rate. We have about 2,500 families on welfare and 2,600 on W. P. A. Every city and town in Massachusetts faces an increased tax rate this year from $2 to $6 on the thousand of valuation. Any reduction on W. P. A. such as is contemplated will mean a further increase in tax rates. It is impossible for us to carry a greater burden."

city and town in Massachusetts faces an increased tax rate this year from $2 to $6 on the thousand of valuation. Any reduction on W. P. A. such as is contemplated will mean a further increase in tax rates. It is impossible for us to carry a greater burden."

And so I find myself in the latter group of Senators. I intend to vote for appropriation of $875,000,000. I shall do so regretfully—regret that it is not possible, in my judgment, to lighten now, at once, this drain upon the Federal Treasury; regret that it is not possible now, at once, to improve the administration of relief, to remove the injustices, and to make two relief dollars do the work of three. But it seems to me that we are face to face with facts and stern realities that admit of only one answer.

It is true that the resolution in the form reported by the committee while retaining the reduced amount of $725,000,000 seeks to escape the ensuing penalty of wholesale reductions in the relief rolls prior to April 1 by limiting the reduction prior to that date to 150,000. It is in effect an admission that no large cut in the rolls during the remainder of the winter is feasible.

It is self-evident that to carry the relief rolls through February and March at substantially the present level of 3,000,000 on the rolls will so far deplete the new fund now to be appropriated (if the in the amount of $725,000,000) as to leave available an obviously entirely inadequate amount of money for the remaining 3 months of April, May, and June. It would, in effect, require the dropping of more than a million persons from the rolls promptly at the 1st of April, a course which I am confident no one would now contend is likely to be humanly possible.

In my judgment, such an arrangement does not meet the present issue, but merely postpones it. If we are not going to require sharp, progressive reductions in the relief rolls—if we conclude that such a policy is inexpedient and inhumane—then we may as well vote now the sum which those charged with the administration of reli percent everywhere?

Furthermore, in administering relief we should make a clear distinction between the employables and the unemployables and have separate classifications and a much clearer picture than has been heretofore presented of exactly where we stand in what may be regarded as the permanent relief load and the temporary relief load.

I believe that we should apply the brakes to Government spending. I do not share the view that continued deficit financing is the road to recovery and prosperity. But when we start to economize we may better-begin with dubious ventures, such as the Florida ship canal, Quoddy, and the St. Lawrence seaway, and the large subsidies to agriculturalists amounting to almost half a billion dollars and the half billion dollars appropriated for highways and P. W. A. grants, rather than with the meal tickets of the needy unemployed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Evening Post. It relates to the subject now under consideration by the Senate. It was my purpose to comment upon it, but I was unable to get the floor before the vote. I must content myself by putting it in the RECORD. I hope it will be read.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"THERE, BUT FOR THE GRACE OF GOD * * *"

To the United States Senate.

GENTLEMEN: On your way to Capitol Hill most of you drive past a W. P. A. project. Maybe several. Did you ever watch a gang on a sewer job, see several men obviously unused to swinging a pick, and * * * *

Did you ever have the same thought we've had, the thought John Bradford had when a criminal passed him on the way to the gallows:

"There, but for the grace of God, go I"?
That man hacking away at the ice-encrusted street—he might have been you.

There aren't two kinds of real Americans. Only one kind.
And among them all, how many feel so secure, either in their jobs or in their resources, as to dare murmur smugly to themselves, That couldn't happen to me"?

It could. It has.

On W. P. A. today are many men who, by slim margins, missed sitting, if not in the United States Senate, at least in legislative chambers of several States; men who recently held high posts in some of our large cities; men whose names—once—were known to more thousands perhaps than some of yours.

"Foxy Grandpa's" creator died the other day. He was famous. Of late W. P. A. kept him alive. Three winners of Guggenheim fellowships were found on W. P. A. Likewise several prominent writers, former college professors, quite a few distinguished engi-

Comb the lists further. You'll find businessmen who only yesterday were leaders in their communities, men who once asked favors of none, men who remember that after the depression, after their savings were gone * * * W. P. A. let them carry on.

Bright men. Smart men. Many, Senators, are men like you. They just missed the same train.

And those others, perhaps not so smart or so well educated—they're Americans none the less. They don't regard a W. P. A. job as charity. They don't want charity. They want work, consider their job is work.

they're Americans none the less. They don't regard a W. P. A. job as charity. They don't want charity. They want work, consider their job is work.

They're proud of the parks they build, the schools they repair, the sewers they construct; proud of the reclamation of swamp areas, of the fights they've waged against soil erosion, for flood control.

The voice of those men may not reach the Senate floor. But it is the voice of men who work and sweat in jobs which not a Senator covets, despite the legend that W. P. A. work is one long and lazy picnic. picnic.

Loafers among them? Of course. There are loafers in every business, every factory, even in Congress. But you don't burn a ship to get rid of its barnacles.

And better that some men loaf than that worthy men starve. Remember, any of them might have been you or yours. So, gentlemen, before you act on the proposal to cut down the W. P. A., bear in mind that you won't just cut off dollars. You'll abolish livelihood.

Yes; we hear one of you say, "But we must stop spending."
If it means a million men stop working? A million families stop

If it means a million men stop working? A million families stop eating, stop buying?

The answer is, "No!" And again, "No!"

Let no one say that jobs in private industry are waiting. They're not. It's only been a short while since 700 men waited in line all night to apply for a few porters' jobs in New York City—with the crowd of applicants swelling to 5,000 by morning. Do you remember that right in Washington, shortly before Thanksgiving, 25,000 women stormed a police station for 2,000 jobs as charwomen?

Gentlemen of the Senate, your job isn't to destroy the jobs of others. It ought to be to create new jobs, enough jobs so that every man who wants work can have work—at least, enough work to care for his family.

People must eat.

People must eat.

If that means an unbalanced Budget, then it means an unbalanced Budget.

Or if that means we must tax, to balance the Budget, so as to please the conservatives

Then we must tax.

Starvation won't balance any budget. It didn't in 1932. It didn't again in 1937. It won't now.

Before you vote, Senators, try to put yourself in a W. P. A. worker's place. Imagine, if you can, the fear in his heart as he watches your debates over a proposal to abolish his job and a million more. Try to understand that his voice, faint in the clamor, asks not for gifts, for largess, but only for a chance—to

The chance to which every free-born American ought to be entitled.

As you watch the pick swing, listen to the scrape of shovels and clang of crowbars, remember the words of John Bradford; "There, but for the grace of God, go I!"

ADDITIONAL PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a petition of 23 citizens of Texas, praying for the granting of increased compensation to parents on account of the death of sons in the military service during the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying that the United States adhere to the principle of neutrality as contained in existing law, and the extension of the law so as to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Hazelton and North Branch, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit the advertising of alcoholic beverages by the press and radio, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MINTON presented a resolution adopted by the Vigo County (Ind.) Alliance, opposing the appropriation of $750,-000,000 for the W. P. A. and favoring an increased appropriation program for the W. P. A. as proposed by the Workers Alliance of America, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. REED presented a memorial of 71 citizens of Rolla, Kans., remonstrating against the operation of the landbuying program of the land-utilization project in Morton County, Kans., which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of 36 citizens of Walnut, Kans., praying that the United States adhere to the principle of neutrality as contained in existing law and extend the law so as to include civil as well as international conflicts, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of 23 citizens of Franklin County and 62 citizens of Manhattan, Riley County, in the State of Kansas, praying that the United States stop the shipment of all war materials and products that may be used by the Japanese Army in their Chinese operations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MALONEY presented a resolution adopted at a Lenin memorial meeting held by the Communist Party at Waterbury, Conn., favoring the dissolution of the so-called Dies committee, being the Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities (House of Representatives), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hubon and nine other citizens of New Haven, Conn., praying for the preservation of peace, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a Lenin memorial meeting held by the Communist Party at Waterbury, Conn., favoring lifting of the Spanish embargo, and also the supplying of surplus food in America to the Spanish people, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Silver City Council, No. 2, Knights of Columbus, of Meriden, Conn., favoring retention of the existing Spanish embargo and opposing the repeal of the neutrality law, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a letter from Martin H. Carmody, supreme knight, Knights of Columbus, embodying a resolution adopted by the supreme board of directors of the Knights of Columbus, at New York City, favoring strict adherence by the United States to the policy of neutrality in the Spanish war, and also that the embargo upon the shipment of munitions to either party in the Spanish conflict be maintained, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials of the Catholic Ladies of Columbus, of Manchester and New London; the Connecticut Council of Catholic Women, of Hartford; Joseph Fiorelli and 149 other citizens of Stamford; Stephen L. Chase and 11 other citizens of South Norwalk; the Rosary Society of the St. Thomas Church, Jerome P. Jermain and 20 other citizens, Raymond Gorman and 98 other citizens, John Russo and 146 other citizens, and Joseph T. Palladino and 35 other citizens, all of Waterbury; Antoinette Ciarlo and 54 other citizens, Joseph W. Lenz and 18 other citizens, and Anna Stemmer and 147 other citizens, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the retention of the existing neutrality law and remonstrating against lifting the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mrs. CARAWAY presented the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

"Sec. 8. None of the funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or by this joint resolution shall be used for the manufacture, purchase, or construction of any naval vessel, armament, munitions, or implement of war, or for the construction of quarters for military or naval forces."

TEMPORARY JOINT COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I ask consent to submit a concurrent resolution, which I request be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I also ask consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the concurrent resolution and two articles in reference thereto which appeared in the Washington Daily News.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution of the Senator from Washington will be received and referred as requested by him and the articles will be printed in the body of the RECORD.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 2) was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee (hereinafter referred to as the "joint committee"), to be known as the Temporary Joint Committee on National Defense. The joint committee shall be composed of the chairman and the ranking minority member of each of the following committees and subcommittees: The Senate Committee on Military Affairs, the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, the subcommittees on military and naval appropriations of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, and the subcommittees on military and naval appropriations of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, and the subcommittees on the House of Representatives, the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives, and the subcommittees on the House of Representatives, and the subcommittees on the Joint committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the Joint committee. The joint committee shall select a chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. (a) It shall be the duty of the joint committee to make a thorough study and investigation with respect to the national-defense problems of the United States, with a particular view to (1) determining the policy which should be followed with respect to the national defense, (2) determining the most effective means and methods for carrying out such policy, and (3) coordinating the activities of the various agencies of the Government dealing with matters relating to the national defense.

(b) The joint committee shall from time to time submit recommendations and reports to the committees of the Congress herein-Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concur-before designated.

SEC. 3. The joint committee shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act at such places and times, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the joint committee and shall be served by any person designated by him.

mittee and shall be served by any person designated by him.

The expenses of the said investigation, which shall not exceed $ , shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House of Representatives, one-half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 4. The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary in the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation fixed under the sation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. The joint committee is authorized to request the use of the services, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and agencies in the executive branch of the Government.

SEC. 5. All authority conferred by this concurrent resolution shall expire on February 1, 1941.

DEFENSE PROBLEMS

(By Raymond Clapper)

Recent world changes have thrust so many considerations into the problem of national defense that Congress would be justified in resorting to special procedure. The most practical method would be to set up a joint House and Senate committee on national defense.

This would be a special, temporary committee. It would be obligated to survey the whole field. It would ascertain what we proposed to defend. First of all, it would define the problem. Are we going to protect merely the shores of the United States, or the posed to defend. First of all, it would define the problem. Are we going to protect merely the shores of the United States, or the hemisphere? Then it would prepare a rounded program to support the policy, covering Army, Navy, aircraft, industrial preparedness, and the methods of financing. It all goes together.

In this situation it would be criminal to deal with the problem of national defense in the old piecemeal way. Can we do the job properly by working through some 10 House and Senate committees, each jealously going its own way and the others be damned?

Under standard procedure you have the House Military Affairs Committee holding hearings, running its own show. The House Naval Affairs Committee runs its own show. Neither knows nor cares what the other is doing. How can you relate air strength and the Navy, or Army coast defense and the Navy, without considering them together and in relation to each other? How can you decide how many Army airplanes are needed until you know what the Navy is going to consist of? These matters are all tied together and they should be considered together.

You can't have properly balanced national defense when you cut the job up into small pieces and distribute it among some 10 different committees each working independently. The working out of the defense program would be scattered piecemeal among the standing House committees on Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Appropriations, and Ways and Means, and among the Senate committees on Appropriations, Foreign Relations, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Naval Affairs, and Finance. Duplicate hearings would be held, and there would result a long time-consuming scramble in which Army, Navy, and aviation each would grab as much as possible. A joint committee would know where the emphasis was to be put—whether on the Army, aircraft, or Navy, and in what reconstructions.

proportions.

The joint House and Senate committee should contain repre-The joint House and Senate committees should contain representation from all of these committees just named, plus perhaps that of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, which, while of little consequence ordinarily, does have jurisdiction over neutrality legislation, which must be considered in connection with the whole national-defense problem.

Take two members from each of these standing committees, the chairmen and the top Republican and make up a special temporary.

Take two members from each of these standing committees, the chairman and the top Republican, and make up a special temporary joint committee of perhaps 20 members. That would be a smaller committee than most of the regular major House and Senate committees, and therefore not unwieldly. It would represent both Houses, both parties, and every standing committee concerned in the problem. By taking the top members you assemble the most experienced House and Senate members, each well-informed in his particular field.

particular field.

Put such a committee to work; first, on a carefully organized program of hearings to gather expert testimony, and, second, on the drafting of a balanced, unified program. Then Congress will know what it is doing. Bring such a program before the full membership of the House and the Senate, under the auspices of such a special joint committee, and it would be entitled to respect. Because of the men on it, such a committee would be powerful enough to protect the program from raiding on the floor.

Such a special joint committee as is here suggested quelt to

Such a special joint committee as is here suggested ought to produce the best program that is possible under our system—one that provides enough, but not too much, balanced and proportioned adequately to the needs of America at this hour.

[From the Washington Daily News, December 28, 1938] OUR WEAKNESS (By Raymond Clapper)

Each day makes it more clear that we haven't any reliable idea of what we need for adequate national defense. Every man is his own strategist now, and arriving legislators have their pockets stuffed with defense plans and requests from local chambers of commerce for new airplane factories, new Army posts, training schools, and other choice cuts of political defense pork.

They are already showing the Florida ship canal at us again. The

They are already snoving the Florida snip canal at us again. The last time it was offered as a gigantic work relief project, but Congress objected. Now it is being dressed up as a national defense scheme. Only a matter of time and we will have the Passama-quoddy tide-harnessing scheme revived as a national-defense project. Don't be surprised to wake up and find that a drive is on for a big naval base on the upper Mississippi. Why not? It would help business and provide the fleet with an inland base immune from attack.

Not only laymen but the experts are confused. They hear rumors that Hitler has 10,000 planes, and promptly demand the same for us. You will find one crowd of experts saying our air force needs but little expansion, and that the important thing is experimental progress in designing faster models, together with industrial preparations for quick enlargement of production capacity when required. A rival school of experts says that scheme is inadequate, that with the air force, as with the Navy, initial striking power is what counts; and that we must be prepared at all times to overcome any surprise attack because once war has come it is too late to build planes and ships.

come any surprise attack because once war has come it is too late to build planes and ships.

So you have experts taking various stances all the way from no more planes to 13,500 planes and up.

One group wants the Western Hemisphere encased in a ring of United States battleships. Others say we need only to concentrate decisive strength in the Caribbean, as that is the bottleneck of hemisphere defense. Then there are the experts who want a Nicarauguan canal and those who say that if the Panama Canal was good enough for the first Roosevelt it's good enough for this one.

All of which says pointedly that we need a general inquiry by a joint congressional committee to consider all aspects and to sift out a balanced conclusion. Demand for such a joint committee is growing. It is recommended by a committee on national defense in a report to the National Peace Conference. Such a committee would combine within its membership Democratic and Republican in a report to the National Peace Conference. Such a committee would combine within its membership Democratic and Republican members of the regular House and Senate committees which have to do with Army, Navy, aviation, foreign policy, and financing.

Mainly, the purpose would be to bring all phases of the defense problem into one inquiry instead of scattering them about among separate committees, into watertight compartments, as it were, where it would be almost impossible to dovetail a balanced program covering land, air, and sea. Recommendations from such a joint committee would be entitled to, and would receive, the confidence of the public.

committee would be entitled to, and would receive, the confidence of the public.

On this kind of question few of us can have an intelligent opinion. So much of it is technical that the layman must trust mainly to the judgment of a group of careful and well-balanced experts. A joint committee of seasoned and informed legislators would serve as a jury and, when it was through digesting the testimony of experts, its conclusions would be as sound and safe as is possible under our

Without doubt the country wants adequate defense. Everyone in Congress wants it. The only argument is as to what constitutes adequate defense. Strong opposition exists to unwarranted expense. Republicans and peace organizations are ready to pounce on any crackpot or hysterical schemes that come up wearing the false whiskers of national defense.

The administration, for its own protection and for the protection of the country, needs to have a program that has been carefully combed over and put together. A joint congressional committee is the best protection the administration can have against the twin mistakes of inadequate defense and wasteful expenditure.

PROPERTY RIGHTS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN MEXICO

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit for appropriate reference a resolution which I should like to have the privilege of reading to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the resolution will be received.

Mr. REYNOLDS read the resolution (S. Res. 72), as follows:

Whereas it has been stated and generally believed that a condition exists in our neighboring Republic of Mexico which if true, makes the Government of that country a violator of international law as well as of the natural rights of man; and Whereas it has been stated and believed to be true that millions of dollars worth of property belonging under the laws of Mexico and of international law to citizens of the United States has been

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first committee amendment will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, page 2, line 15, after "1939", to insert Provided further, That prior to April 1 there shall be no administrative reduction of more than 5 percent in the number of employees upon Works Progress projects and that the funds available for the remainder of the fiscal year shall be apportioned in the discretion of the Administrator: Provided further, That should there arise an emergency which in the opinion of the President would require the submission of an estimate for an additional appropriation, the President would require the submission of an estimate for an additional appropriation, the President dent, in submitting such estimate, shall submit a statement as to the facts constituting such emergency: Provided further, That the Administrator shall immediately cause to be made an investigation of the rolls of employees on work projects and eliminate from such rolls those not in actual need.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 17, after "1939". to strike out "but this proviso shall not apply to positions the compensation of which is payable from the appropriations made in subsections (5), (6), (7), and (8) of section 1 of the said Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938."

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the pending joint resolution provides for a number of our citizens who are unfortunate, which unfortunate condition I attribute largely to the fact that this country has many millions of aliens who no doubt has usurped the jobs that rightfully belong to American citizens, I desire at this time to bring to the attention of the Members of this body the fact that we never shall be able to ascertain the number of aliens within the confines of the United States until we shall have enacted some sort of legislation which would provide for the mandatory registration and fingerprinting thereof.

To that end, last year I introduced a bill calling for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens. At that time the bill was before the Immigration Committee of the Senate; and my recollection is that a similar bill was introduced in the House by my colleague, Hon. Joe Starnes, of Alabama. This year, during the first session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, I introduced a similar bill, which would require mandatorily that aliens within our borders register and be fingerprinted in order that we may ascertain the number within our borders. I am very happy at this time to bring to the attention of the Members of this body a poll which was conducted by Dr. Gallup.

I have before me a clipping from the New York Times of Friday, January 27, 1939, reading as follows:

Plan to register aliens backed in survey conducted by institute on pending United States bill.

Mr. President, I am more than happy to state to this body that 84 percent of the American people favor the registration and fingerprinting of aliens. That is evidenced by the poll conducted by Dr. Gallup and his associates. I read from the article just mentioned:

In the wake of the recent trial of German spies in this country several bills are pending in Congress to require all aliens living in the United States to be fingerprinted and registered with the Federal Government

Sponsored in the Senate by Senator Robert R. Reynolds, of North Carolina, and in the House by Representative Joseph Starnes, of Alabama, this plan meets with widespread popular approval in a national survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion, it was reported by Dr. George Gallup, director of the institute.

A cross section of voters in all sections and in all income levels was asked by the institute: "Do you think all persons living in this country who are not citizens should be fingerprinted and registered with the Federal Government?"

with the Federal Government?"

The vote was: "Yes," 84 percent; "no," 16 percent.

The survey likewise reveals that the majority of voters favor fingerprinting not only of aliens but also of everybody in the Nation, Dr. Gallup said.

The following question was put to a cross section of voters: "Do you think everybody in this country should be fingerprinted by the Federal Government?"

The vote was: "Yes," 71 percent.

Mr. President, I desire to state that when I first brought this subject to the attention of the Congress of the United States many Members thereof forthwith objected, for the reason that they stated that if we wanted to bring about the mandatory registration and fingerprinting of aliens within our midst, in their opinion, that would call for the eventual registration of the citizens of America. I am indeed happy that the citizens of America, through this poll, have evidenced to their respective Members in the Congress of the United States that it is their desire that all American citizens be registered for their particular personal benefit from the standpoint of protection.

In that connection I desire to avail myself of the opportunity of bringing again to the front my State of North Carolina, which always leads in matters of progress of every sort and kind, and particularly in this instance, since in my State there is a great and flourishing city, one of the most prosperous in the entire South, Charlotte, N. C., which is known as the Queen City of the Carolinas. It has a population of more than 100,000. There, about 2 years ago, all the girls and boys of high-school age voluntarily submitted to fingerprinting. I then might traverse this section of the North American Continent and mention Berkeley, Calif., where more than 25,000 citizens voluntarily came to a station where they were fingerprinted. All of this goes to show that the American people are not only anxious that aliens be registered and fingerprinted in order that we may know how many of them are in the country at the present time but, in addition thereto, they are desirous of bringing about the registration and fingerprinting of all American citizens for the protection of the American citizens themselves.

At this time, Mr. President, particularly in view of the fact that next week we will give serious consideration to the national-defense program which has been proposed by the President of the United States, we shall want to give more consideration than ever to the question of aliens and undesirable foreigners who have not filed their applications for citizenship in this country, because we know that that subject interests itself materially in the mammoth question of national defense, since we recognize the fact that were America to become involved in mortal combat tomorrow, every single alien in the country today would be deemed to be a potential enemy, a spy, perhaps, within our borders. I repeat, it would be useless for us to make expenditure of billions of dollars for the purpose of fighting enemies without who might perchance endeavor to make an invasion of this country without at the same time, in considering our national-defense program, taking into consideration the fact that if war were to come, our greatest enemies would be the potential spies and the potential enemies within our midst, and that those boring from within would do more damage to our defense than would those who were firing from without.

DENISON-DURANT DAM ON RED RIVER

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I wish to quote from the inaugural speech of Gov. Leon C. Phillips, the new Governor of Oklahoma. About one-third of his inaugural speech was devoted to opposition to the construction of the Denison-Durant Dam on Red River, a flood-control and power project which was authorized by the flood-control bill of 1938. The Governor says:

So far as I have been able to ascertain, neither the views, concerns, objections, nor advice of the sovereign State of Oklahoma have been invited or heard by either branches of Congress or by any committee thereof on this vital and far-reaching act, but on the contrary, it was passed in the closing days and hours of the last session of Congress without opportunity on the part of our State to be bear. State to be heard.

In answer to that, I wish to read from the hearings on the 1938 flood-control bill which included Denison Dam:

STATEMENT OF DR. HENRY G. BENNETT, CHAIRMAN, OKLAHOMA RESERVOIR PLANNING BOARD, AND PRESIDENT OF THE OKLAHOMA AGRICULTURAL AND MECHANICAL COLLEGE

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, my name is Henry G. Bennett. I am chairman of the Oklahoma Reservoir Planning Board and president of the Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College.
The CHAIRMAN. You are chairman of the Oklahoma Planning

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, sir.

The Charman. And you are president of what institution? Mr. Bennett. Of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Oklahoma.

The Charman. If you desire to make a general statement, we will be glad to hear you.

PLANNING BOARD FAVORS DAM

Mr. Bennett. Just a brief statement, Mr. Chairman, as to the attitude of our board and the people of the State toward the projects presented.

The Charrman. Are you advocating those projects?

Mr. Bennett. I am advocating the projects as presented by the rmy engineers, and we are in accord with their recomendations * * *. Army engineer mendations *

STATEMENT OF W. C. BURNHAM, ENGINEER FOR THE WATER RESOURCES DIVISION OF THE OKLAHOMA PLANNING AND RESOURCES BOARD

The CHARMAN. Mr. Burnham, will you kindly state your name, your occupation or profession.

Mr. Burnham. My name is W. C. Burnham, engineer for the water-resources division of the Oklahoma Planning and Resources Board.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a board that exists by virtue of a statute in the State of Oklahoma?

Mr. BURNHAM. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you been engaged in your pro-fession as engineer?

Mr. Burnham. Since 1910.

JOHN TOUR . The CHAIRMAN. What is your position with respect to the construction of the Denison Reservoir?

STRUCTION of the Denison Reservoir?

Mr. BURNHAM. My personal opinion as an engineer?

The CHAIRMAN. Tell us your views, whether personal feeling or otherwise, as a witness, are you advocating the Denison Dam as reported by the Chief of Engineers?

Mr. BURNHAM. I am supporting the construction of the Denison Reservoir. Just exactly how it is reported I have not seen the report. I did see part of it in Little Rock in the preparation, but we are supporting the Denison Reservoir.

STATEMENT OF W. C. AUSTIN, OF ALTUS, OKLA.

The Charman. What is your name? Mr. Austin. W. C. Austin. The Charman. And your official position or occupation or profession?

Mr. Austin. I am a lawyer by profession, and a member of the Mr. Austin. I am a lawye.
Oklahoma Resources Board.
The Chairman. You live where?
Mr. Austin. At Altus, Okla.

The CHARMAN. What is the position of your board with respect to the Denison project?

Mr. Austin. We look upon that project with favor.

The following members of the Oklahoma delegation testified: Hon. Lyle Boren, Hon. WILBURN CARTWRIGHT, Hon. WESLEY DISNEY, Hon. JED JOHNSON, Hon. SAM MASSINGALE, Hon. Jack Nichols, and myself. Hon. Phil Ferguson, of Oklahoma, was a member of the committee and was present during the entire hearing. Congressman Gomer Smith was also present. Mr. G. W. Archibald, member of Oklahoma Planning and Resources Board and editor of the Durant Daily Democrat, was also present at the hearings. I quote only extracts from their testimony bearing on this subject.

STATEMENT OF HON. SAM C. MASSINGALE, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. Massingale. Mr. Chairman, I represent that part of Oklahoma through which the Washita River in Oklahoma runs. I appear here this morning in behalf of that project and in behalf of other rivers in Oklahoma. The Planning Board of the State of Oklahoma are all for the Denison Dam project. Their main concern is to preserve and protect the rights of the people of the State of Oklahoma in the waters that flow down these rivers into the Red River, and the witnesses that have been requested to be here will make statements in reference to that matter. * * * statements in reference to that matter.

STATEMENT OF HON. WILBURN CARTWRIGHT, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CON-GRESS FROM THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. Cartwright. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I would be presumptious indeed should I try to discuss this in detail, because these engineers know it from the ground up. I am just returned from the location of this project area, and two-thirds to three-fourths of it is in my district. Of course, I am deeply concerned about it. People down there are fearful that their rights will not be protected. Of course, it is reasonably safe to expect that they will be protected, as they have at other places under similar conditions. I have been for this all the time, whole soul, heart, and body, and mind, and have made several trips with Sam Rayburn down to the different departments to see these engineers, and now this entire delegation is up here looking for water. The Lord knows they need it in Oklahoma at certain times of the year. * *

STATEMENT OF HON. JED JOHNSON, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. Johnson, I had the honor of serving on this committee several years ago, and at that time some of us were advocating these dams and reservoirs on the tributaries of the Mississippi, and at that time it seemed to fall on the deaf ears of the Army engineers. I congratulate the chairman on the complete change of front within the past 10 years on this proposition, in that the engineers now recognize the fact that if you are going to be safe from the floods on the lower Mississippi that we must impound the water somewhere near where it falls. * * *

STATEMENT OF HON. LYLE H. BOREN, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. Boren. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I simply want to say a word in agreement with the discussion on this project, a word of support for the general project. It has been well spoken that Oklahoma needs this water and States farther down spoken that Oklahoma needs this water and States farther down the line need protection from our water. Specifically I would like permission to extend my remarks in connection with the Manford project, in my district, which completely impounds water from the Cimarron River in this Arkansas watershed.

STATEMENT OF HON. WESLEY E. DISNEY, A REPRESENTATIVE IN CONGRESS FROM THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. DISNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am, of course, interested in this whole Mississippi Basin. * *

Mr. DISNEY's testimony did not deal with the Denison Dam directly.

I now quote from my own statement, as follows:

Senator Lee. I will make just a brief statement, Mr. Chairman. I heartily agree with everything that Congressman RAYBURN has

The question has been raised in my State as to prior water rights, and we are desirous of having that protection written into the law. For instance, in the case of Lugert Dam, on one of the tributaries For instance, in the case of Lugert Dam, on one of the tributaries of the Red River, there is a reclamation project under way providing for irrigation over a large territory. The legal question has been raised that if this water is once used for the generation of power below, there is thereby established a right to it, and that this water cannot be diverted above afterward for useful purposes of irrigation or any other purpose; that they have established, by once using this water for generation of power, the right to it.

Therefore I urge the committee to get the language in the bill that will protect the water rights above. I recall talking to the President on this very question, and he said that brings up the important thing of making your plan to cover the whole basin at one time.

one time.

I do not want the Denison Dam to be delayed until the upstream projects can all be completed, and I do not think that is necessary. It is further along than some of the others. But netther do I later want to be helpless in working out other projects after they have used all this water. If this were flood control only, the question might not arise, but since it is power development also, there certainly is a question that, in my opinion, should be asked now and decided before the project is started.

OKLAHOMA RIGHTS PROTECTED

The amendment finally included in the bill which gave Oklahoma this protection is (Public, 761, p. 5):

Provided, That in the consideration of benefits in connection with the Denison Reservoir all benefits that can be assigned to the proposed Altus project and other such projects in Oklahoma shall be reserved for said projects.

(Public, 761, p. 6:)

The Government of the United States acknowledges the right The Government of the United States acknowledges the right of the States of Oklahoma and Texas to continue to exercise all existing proprietary or other rights of supervision of and jurisdiction over the waters of all tributaries of Red River within their borders above Denison Dam site and above said dam, if and when constructed, in the same manner and to the same extent as is now or may hereafter be provided by the laws of said States, respectively, and all of said laws as they now exist or as same may be hereafter amended or enacted and all rights thereunder, including the rights to impound or authorize the retardation or imbe hereafter amended or enacted and all rights thereunder, including the rights to impound or authorize the retardation or impounding thereof for flood control above the said Denison Dam and to divert the same for municipal purposes, domestic uses, and for irrigation, power generation, and other beneficial uses, shall be and remain unaffected by or as a result hereof. All such rights are hereby saved and reserved for and to the said States and the people and the municipalities thereof, and the impounding of any such waters for any and all beneficial uses by said States or under their authority may be as freely done after the passage hereof as the same may now be done.

In addition to these who testified directly concerning the Denison Dam there was F. L. Vaughn, director, Water Resources Board of Oklahoma, and Oklahoma Planning Board, who testified in the hearings, but since no question of opposition to the construction of the Denison Dam had been raised or suggested, the question was neither directly asked nor answered in his testimony, it being so unquestionably assumed that his purpose in coming to Washington and appearing before the committee was to further the whole floodcontrol program. He states in his testimony that he is not opposing any projects.

In addition to that, there were others who were present or available who were then and are now strongly in favor of the construction of the Denison Dam, such as Representative WILL ROGERS and Senator Thomas, who attended the hearing but did not testify, as it seemed unnecessary to duplicate the testimony because not even a suspicion of opposition to the construction of the dam had been raised.

I now wish to read in part from an article in the Tulsa World of January 22, 1939, under the headlines:

Governor gains support in fight on Denison Dam.

Second headline:

NICHOLS says engineer report shows project impractical.

Oklahoma City (A. P.) -

The Governor was assured of aid in his fight against the dam by Representative Jack Nichols (Democrat, Oklahoma), who conferred with Phillips here today.

Nichols said he opposed the Denison project and has spoken against it on the floor of the House because it would deny the State other projects above the dam.

Phillips said Nichols had seen an engineers' report showing the project to be impractical. * * * project to be impractical.

First. I suggest that Representative Nichols have the Congressional Index corrected. I have searched through it but do not find that it contains a reference to any speech made by Representative Nichols on the floor of the House during discussion of the flood-control bill in the Seventy-fifth Congress in which he opposed the construction of Denison Second. Congressman Nichols testified before the Flood Control Committee last year, during the open hearings on the flood-control bill, which included Denison Dam, but nowhere in his testimony did he offer even so much as a suggestion of opposition to the construction of Denison Dam. He devoted his testimony to the desirability of constructing the Tenkiller Ferry Reservoir, which is in his own district.

I now wish to read a statement from Gen. M. C. Tyler, Acting Chief of Engineers, January 25, 1939:

The flood-control possibilities of the Denison Reservoir were the subject of a special report dated October 1, 1930, which is published as annex 18 of the Report on Control of Floods in the Alluvial Valley of the Lower Mississippi River. It was found that the Denison Reservoir would contribute to flood control on the lower Mississippi River. (H. Dec. No. 798, 71st Cong. 2d coss.) sippi River. (H. Doc. No. 798, 71st Cong., 3d sess.)

The next consideration was during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, as evidenced in House Document No. 259:

The Denison Reservoir was considered as one reservoir in a comprehensive reservoir plan for Mississippi River Basin flood control. The reservoir would contribute to flood control on the lower Mississippi River.

Next, during the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress-House Document No. 378:

The Denison Reservoir project was considered in the Department's report on the Red River, La., Ark., Okla., and Tex. In this report the Chief of Engineers stated that the Denison Reservoir is the key project of the system of reservoirs for control of floods in the Red River Basin and that its construction appeared to be warranted at Federal expense.

During the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress House of Representatives, Committee on Flood Control, Document No. 1:

In his report of April 6, 1937, presenting a comprehensive flood-control plan on the Ohio and lower Mississippi Rivers, the Chief of Engineers recommended construction of the Denison Reservoir to remove the threat of the coincidence of a large flood from the Red River with a flood on the Missispipi River. The Denison Reservoir would also afford highly desirable protection to the fertile bottom lands in the lower Red River Valley.

And last, during the third session of the Seventy-fifth Congress (H. Doc. No. 541), the latest report covering the Denison Reservoir was made:

The investigations on which the report was based were much more extensive than any previous investigations and permitted a detailed plan for developing the project to be made. The report recommends that the Denison project be constructed as a multiple purpose project for flood control and power development. The Federal Power Commission has reported that the power to be developed can be disposed of to advantage.

NINE YEARS STUDY VERIFIES DAM PRACTICABILITY

In connection with the foregoing reports, the Denison project has been under practically constant study by the Department for the last 9 years. In addition to its own engineers, the Department has employed a number of the most outstanding engineering specialists in the United States as consultants to work with the Department's staff in connection with the design of the dam and appurtenant structures. None of them have expressed any doubt as to the practicability of constructing a safe and satisfactory dam at the Denison site.

I now wish to read into the RECORD half of the editorial column from the Oklahoma City Times of January 20 under the caption of "The Tiny Times":

There is too much heat and not enough light on this dam business. Two years ago the Denison project was accepted as a unit in the New Deal's astronomical flood-prevention and hydroelectric program. Overnight it appears that the United States is to destroy Oklahoma with a wholly reprehensible piece of Federal villainy. What is the score?

Revert to the August primary for a moment. There were three principal candidates for the governorship. Phillips and Murray spoke openly against the Red River measure. Key favored it. Key carried more of the Red River tier of counties than both other candidates. The conclusion is logical that the dam was not the most important thing in the election or that the works. the most important thing in the election, or that the voters were not informed, or that they didn't care.

Look at the situation in the congressional delegation. Carr-wright, Congressman in whose district the dam is located, has been and is for it strong. The two Senators have been for it consistently, Boren is wavering and the baby Representative, Monroner, is on the fence pending the adjourned hearing when the committee from the seventeenth legislature will have a hearing.

the seventeenth legislature will have a hearing.

Governor Phillips is carrying the ball. He went into the line-up a brief fortnight ago. Washington's New Deal champions, fatigued from years of line play, showed signs of fatigue. The opposition pushed in a mob of fresh athletes in November. In New England a wing-back formation, composed of six Republican Governors, swung around the end with a play against the dam. The signal was States' rights. There Vermont demanded that the Government pay the sovereign State for invasions and loss of property before the work progressed. Captain Roosevelt said the project would be withdrawn if Vermont doesn't want it. First down.

When "Red" Phillips hit the line with his inaugural message he devoted more space to the Denison Dam than any other State problem. The splendid six-column argument was based on material prepared by the research department of the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co. This fact does not damn the statistics. Oklahoma Gas & tric Co. This fact does not damn the statistics. Oklahoma Gas & Electric has a capable research department. But the origin of the carefully documented logic might point to an alinement of basic importance.

WHY DO THEY OPPOSE THE DAM?

Some of Oklahoma's leaders lament the fact that other States have advantageous freight rates which discriminate against Oklahoma. Texas is one of the States, and these gentlemen say they oppose the Denison-Durant $54,000,000 dam on Red River for the reason that Dallas and Fort Worth will build a canal from the body of water which the dam creates, which will give Texas further advantages.

Harlow's Weekly, a political magazine published at Oklahoma City by Harlow Publishing Corporation, has carried several articles with this claim, and several metropolitan papers have followed suit. In their last issue of December 31 they use very little argument in an article against the project, simply saying:

"Oklahoma is to say that the project is not for the best interest of the State and its citizens; that it will not be effective as a water-

"Oklanoma is to say that the project is not for the best interest of the State and its citizens; that it will not be effective as a water-conservation or flood-control project; that it will submerge and remove from taxation thousands of acres of the State's best river bottom land; that it is not practical, not a necessity, and is calculated to be injurious to the State as a whole."

Then they undertake to outline the proceedings which the State

Then they undertake to outline the proceedings which the State may take to enjoin the project, and suggest to Governor Phillips that if necessary he may resort to the National Guard and military rule. Probably the editors have investigated and found how silly their Dallas-Fort Worth canal argument was, so have adopted the above poor excuses. Why the dam is not for the best interest of Oklahoma and its citizens we cannot understand. Fact is it is for the best interests of Oklahoma and its citizens, although it may not be to the best interest of Harlow's and its friends. They state that it will not be effective as a water-conservation or flood-control project. project

The Democrat would like to know how and why they arrived at this conclusion. The best engineers in the United States emphatically disagree with this statement, and if the editors of Harlow's will study the report of the Federal engineers on the project, which is a public record, they may read for themselves. It is the key project to control of floods from Durant to New Orleans.

Their pext statement regarding the invadation of some of the

Their next statement regarding the inundation of some of the State's best river bottom land has some truth in it. The lake will cover some good land, but the greater part of land covered is submarginal, and much of it is not in cultivation and is so unproductive that it should never be put in cultivation. And they fall to mention the fact that the project will save and reclaim three times as much land below the dam as it inundates above, and, while we do not know it to be a fact, we would think the reclaimed land below the dam would be rich bottom land. The closing criticism, "and is calculated to be injurious to the State as a whole," should have said injurious to the "few."

have said injurious to the "few."

There are a few people in this State who will suffer from the huge project. Progress always works a hardship on the few. Some schools, towns, and communities will suffer, but the lake cannot be built on stilts and Oklahoma cannot afford to block this huge project because of the opposition of the few people it injures.

While the Army engineers in their report state that navigation is not practical, it is probable that within a few years boats will be plying up and down Red River, and when that comes to pass Oklahoma will receive the benefit of water rates, which will benefit every citizen in the State.

The Democrat is unable to understand why Governor Philling and

The Democrat is unable to understand why Governor Phillips and other people, such as editors of Harlow's Weekly and metropolitan dailies, object to the dam on Red River. The Federal Government is not asking Oklahoma to share one dime of the cost, and the flimsy excuses offered by these individuals so far are downright silly. In fact, they surely must realize they are not arguments against it. Local communities affected may have reason for being against the dam, but big-business men outside the affected area must have reasons they have never presented for their opposition. Surely the Governor and the legislature of this State should not object to the Government's spending the major part of $56,000,000 in

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record at this point as a part of my remarks an editorial by Mr. Walter Archibald which appeared in the Durant Daily Democrat, and other articles which appeared in other papers, but which were quoted from editorials by Mr. Archibald.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARGUMENTS AGAINST DAM CALLED WEAK-ARCHIEALD INVITES GOVERNOR "TO SEEK OUT THE FACTS"

Gov. Leon C. Phillips is "following highly prejudiced advice" in his attacks on the Red River Dam, G. W. Archibald, Daily Democrat publisher and vice chairman of the State planning and resources board, asserted today.

Mentioned in a criticism of the power and flood-control project in Phillips' message to the legislature, Archibald said that he "sought out the facts" about the project and invited Phillips to "do the same"

"do the same."

He described reasons which Phillips gave against the dam a "weak."

"When he (Phillips) talks of inundating land, he does not tell you that three times as much land is reclaimed below the dam as is inundated above," Archibald asserted.

inundated above," Archibaid asserted.

Archibald's statement:
"Governor Phillips' real objection to the Denison-Durant Dam of Red River has never been made public. Although he devoted one-third of his legislative message to this project, reasons assigned against its construction are so weak that I am amazed that a man of his intelligence would present them. It convinces me the Governor is following highly prejudiced advice of the opposition and is not seeking facts. not seeking facts.

"When he talks of inundating land, he does not tell you that three times as much land is reclaimed below the dam as is inundated above. The land below the dam is in Oklahoma just the same as that above. When he states that we wait until the waters leave the State to utilize them, he misleads, because it is more than 200 miles by river from the dam to the Arkansas line on the "Oklahoma should receive even more benefit than Texas, but Governor Phillips does not seem to know that Louisiana is the State that will receive the greatest benefits. That State suffers from such disastrous floods that this Government realizes the need for relief, which this dam will provide.

"When navigation is established, if ever, Texas will lose her advantageous freight rates over Oklahoma, and every citizen in this State will benefit.

"State roads and bridges, railroads, communication lines, power lines, pipe lines, etc., will be relocated at Government expense, and probably in a better condition and better location than at present.

"I mailed Governor Phillips a statement under date of December 31, 1938, which said in part: "To get the waters from this proposed reservoir to Dallas and Fort Worth would require an engineering feat that would make the building of the Panama Canal child's play, and the cost would be so much more than the Panama Canal that it has never been considered."

"This statement was made after I had the technical advice of 2 private engineering companies of reputation and probably 20 of the Army engineers.
"I have also been advised that the Federal Constitution prohibits

"I have also been advised that the Federal Constitution prohibits diversion of water from one stream into another, which would make it illegal to divert the waters of the Red River into the Trinity.

"But this need be no argument—facts can easily be secured; I sought them out, and I invite the Governor to do the same. I have never talked to an engineer, private or otherwise, who had given study to the matter, that has not 'spoofed' at the talk about diversion.

The same unprejudiced investigation will reveal to any reason-The same unprejudiced investigation will reveal to any reasonable man that this project will produce both flood control and power. Governor Phillips' statement, in effect, that it must be empty for flood control and full for power generation, is not true, although that statement appears sound, especially to the layman. Its explanation requires too much space, but I believe I can consider a suppose. vince anyone.

"This State has no option as to spending our portion of the money for tenant farmers or smaller dams upstream—this is a Federal flood-control plan, along with power, conservation, irrigation, and reclamation, affecting four States, and Oklahoma cannot choose to take her share, whatever it is, to do with as we think best. I wish the Federal Government would acquire the 600,000 acres of land reclaimed below the dam and use it for the tenant farmers, which should satisfy this desire of the Governor.

"As a member of the Oklahoma Planning and Resources Board, my every act is open to the public. If Phillips thinks the board has not taken every possible means of protecting this State, especially as pertains to the Denison-Durant project, he is mistaken. It is possible I had little to do with this—other members deserving the credit-but Oklahoma's rights have been protected; and gret that any citizen, especially the Governor, would feel that I would knowingly waive or abandon, or permit it to be done if in my power to prevent, any of the rights of this State or any of its

"This board has not sold out, nor has it traded out. I have served in good faith, always considering Oklahoma as a whole, to the very best of my judgment and ability, pioneering a program of planning and conservation for my State.

"Reports of every department I have represented are in the hands of the Governor. They are too long to be reviewed here. Suffice it to say that our State received Federal authorization for $108,000,000 worth of Government projects out of a total of $375,000,000 in the United States, much of which is now under construction; and on account of executive opposition, the State is now faced with the danger of losing those not already under construction."

IMPOSSIBLE, ENGINEER SAYS OF CANAL PLAN-ARGUMENT AGAINST RED RIVER DAM DENOUNCED AS A "CRAZY IDEA"

Diversion of water from the Red River to the Trinity to make navigation of the Trinity possible for the benefit of Dallas and Fort Worth was described Tuesday by O. N. Floyd, of Dallas, as "one of the craziest ideas ever advanced."

Mr. Floyd has been consultant on several important Federal flood-control and power projects in the South as well as engineer nood-control and power projects in the South as well as engineer on Ohio River flood control and on Panama Canal Zone work several years ago. He was engineer for the Red River Improvement Association in its preparation of data which finally led to adoption by Congress of the $56,000,000 Denison Dam on Red River.

Proponents of the dam pointed out a number of inconsistencies in the arguments of Gov. Leon Phillips against construction of the $56,000,000 project as contained in the text of his first message to the Oklahoma Legislature, Tuesday. The concensus is that the Governor has been misinformed on many of his points.

He attacked, for instance, the recent statement of G. W. Archi-

He attacked, for instance, the recent statement of G. W. Archibald, Daily Democrat publisher, that a canal connecting the Trinity River and the proposed reservoir would be highly impractical. The project would surpass the building of the Panama Canal, Archibald maintained. Phillips terms this statement preposterous. "It is regrettable that a man who pretends to be a responsible public official (Archibald is vice chairman of the State planning and resources board) would issue such a preposterous statement," the Governor declared. the Governor declared.

the Governor declared.

Archibald's statement was based upon the report of every engineer who has ever investigated such a proposal. In support of it Floyd, who is better acquainted with the situation than anyone outside the Army engineering staff now at work on the dam, said Tuesday afternoon following Phillips' message to the legislature:

"Turning water from the Red River to the Trinity is absolutely impossible and undestrable," he said in discussing the report that one of the objects of the Red River Dam is to benefit Dallas and Fort Worth by this diversion. "You cannot be too strong in denouncing the idea as impractical.

"I do not know who started the idea, but it must have been

"I do not know who started the idea, but it must have been handed down from generation to generation. Answering requests for my opinion, I have repeatedly told various parties that the plan was impossible and other engineers have done the same. But the idea still persists somehow."

Asked whether a channel might be dug to connect the two rivers, he said it was possible, but the cost would be more than that spent on the Panama Canal. "It would require a channel 10 or 12 miles long, from 150 to 200 feet deep, and a considerable width," he continued. "And that would cost several times more than the Denison Dam.

"The idea never has been thought through, or it would have been rejected as impossible."

Mr. LEE. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record at this point, as a part of my remarks, a telegram which was sent to both Senators from Oklahoma by Don Welch, speaker of the Oklahoma House of Representatives.

and a reply which was sent to him by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas].

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JANUARY 20, 1939.

Senator Elmer Thomas,

Senate Office Building.

Dear Senator Thomas: If you mean to say that because the State of Oklahoma does not want one Federal project, which is definitely objectionable to the State of Oklahoma, it cannot get any at all, you are indicting the Federal Government for the worst tyranny. It occurs to me that a United States Senator ought to respect the opinion of the Oklahoma State Legislature expressed by the vote of 83 to 21 in the house and 28 to 10 in the senate.

Speaker, House of Representatives.

JANUARY 20, 1939.

Hon. Don Weich,

Speaker, House of Representatives,

State Capitol, Oklahoma City, Okla.:

Replying message this date, advise that I attended conference of States delegates with Oklahoma delegation this morning, and in such conference I specifically and positively pledged the States delegates that, as chairman of the Senate subcommittee having charge of War Department military and nonmilitary activities, the latter including appropriations for river, harbor, and flood control purposes, that I would see to it that the State of Oklahoma had every possible opportunity to prepare and submit any argument against an appropriation for the construction of the Denison Dam project. In all probability this bill will not reach the Senate until late in spring or early summer, probably as late as June, so that the State will have 3 to 5 months in which to investigate and prepare arguments against Congress making an appropriation for construction this project. I am advised that legislature has pending bill proposing repeal of consent herectofregiven Federal Government to secure by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise lands for public or governmental purposes. In conference this morning I cautioned all parties in authority to consider well all statements and acts for fear that repeal of such section might be considered here to be an unfriendly act and might result disastrously to Oklahoma. If this law is repealed and Government is unable to secure lands then such projects as Grand River, Fort Supply, Great Sait Plains, Lugert, Canton, Eufaula, Markhams Ferry, Mannford, Fort Gibson, Wister, Bramen, Colagah, Tenkiller, Optima, Kenton, Huls, and others will be blocked and stopped. Such repeal would have the further effect of preventing acquisition of land to be added to Fort Supply, military reservations, also submarginal land projects at Stillwater and Cookson Hills, and the one at Roger Mills County likewise would be interfered with. Such action would probably forestail any further activity looking to navigation of Arkansas Riv Oklahoma.

Chairman, Senate Subcommittee on Appropriations Having Control of War Department, River, Harbor, and Flood Control Appropriations.

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to call particularly to the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] the matter of which I am about to speak.

LXXXIV-57

I have been advised by the Works Progress Administration and by others that there has already been a reduction in the rolls, particularly in the case of many who are on the so-called art and professional projects. The Administration therefore takes the position that if there are to be further cuts in the personnel of the W. P. A. the class to which I refer should not be among those receiving cuts until there has been a pro rata diminution in the entire roll. I wonder if the fairness of that position is in accord with the sentiments of the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think it is an entirely fair suggestion. The only thing I said to the Senator from Florida was that I thought it was a matter to appeal to the fairness of the Administrator rather than to be included in the law as a definite amendment or provision.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Administrator were to follow the course suggested, it would not be contrary to the intentions of the subcommittee?

Mr. ADAMS. I think it would be in accord with the intentions of the subcommittee.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, one other matter. I desire to offer an amendment to the joint resolution. At the appropriate place I propose to insert the following provision-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWELLENBACH in the chair). The Chair will inform the Senator from Florida that at the present time the Senate is considering committee amendments, and any other amendment would not be appropriate at this time.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I take advantage of this occasion to give notice, for the consideration of the committee, so that it may be brought up at the proper time, that I shall propose an amendment to the effect that the receipt by any person of social-security benefits, and the receipt of loans or assistance from any Federal agency other than the Works Progress Administration, in an amount less than the minimum W. P. A. wage in the community in which such person may reside, shall not prohibit any person found otherwise eligible for W. P. A. employment from receiving enough W. P. A. work to bring his total compensation on an annual basis or on a quarterly basis up to the minimum W. P. A. wage for such period.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I rise to suggest that we should make some progress in the consideration of the committee amendments. I think most of them will arouse no controversy. I wish we could make some progress this afternoon on the committee amendments. It is obvious that we cannot finish the consideration of the joint resolution today. and that fact necessitates a session tomorrow. I should like very much to dispose of as many of the committee amendments as possible this afternoon. If we can finish the consideration of the joint resolution tomorrow, I see no reason why we cannot then recess until Wednesday. However, I am anxious to get the joint resolution out of the way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment commencing in line 17 on page 3, which will be again stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 17, after the date "January 10, 1939", it is proposed to strike out "but this proviso shall not apply to positions the compensation of which is payable from the appropriations made in subsections (5), (6), (7), and (8) of section 1 of the said Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 21, after the amendment last agreed to, it is proposed to strike out-

Provided further, That no money herein appropriated shall be available to pay salary, remuneration, or benefit to any person who shall hereafter in any way attempt to influence the vote of any person or persons receiving any salary, remuneration, or benefits

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 25, after the amendment last agreed to, to strike out—

Provided further, That the appropriations herein made shall not be available unless and until rates of pay of employees of the Works Progress Administration are so fixed by appropriate administrative order as to eliminate differentials in rates of pay of workers of the same general class exceeding 25 percent of the maximum rates as between workers employed in different States or different areas of the same general type in the several States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I inquire what disposition has been made of the committee amendment, commencing in line 25, page 3, and ending in line 8, page 4? That is the amendment which affects the hourly rate of wage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment was just agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not understand that the amendment had been agreed to. I understood that another amendment had been agreed to. I was endeavoring to watch that amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered, and the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 8, after the word "States", to strike out—

Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid to anyone who is not a citizen of the United States of America.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 15, after the word "children", to strike out—

Provided further, That no money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the compensation of any supervisor, foreman, or other official who attempts to influence the political opinions of workers under his direction or supervision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 19, after the amendment last agreed to, to strike out—

And provided further, That no funds herein appropriated shall be used by the Farm Security Administration or any other Federal agency, to establish hosiery mills on homestead, or other projects in competition with existing industries ## and insert-

Provided further, That no funds herein appropriated shall be used by any Federal agency, to establish mills or factories which would sell articles or materials in competition with existing industries.

Mr. RUSSELL. What disposition was made of the committee amendment to which I referred?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be recurred to later. Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the pending committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. In the committee amendment on page 4, line 23, after the word "appropriated", it is proposed to insert "or appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938", and on page 5, line 1, after the word "would", it is proposed to strike out the word "sell" and insert "manufacture for sale."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, from the standpoint of the committee, I think that is an amendment which would conform to the intention of the committee in preparing the amendment reported to the bill.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, let the clerk read the amendment as it would stand as proposed to be perfected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment will be stated as it would read if the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey were adopted.

The Legislative Clerk. Beginning on page 4, line 22, the committee amendment, if amended as proposed, would read as follows:

Provided further, That no funds herein appropriated or appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 shall be used by any Federal agency to establish mills or factories which would manufacture for sale articles or materials in competition with existing industries.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield for a question?

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly. I yield gladly.

Mr. PEPPER. Do the words "or sell" in the latter part of the proposed amendment relate to goods manufactured by the W. P. A.?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will say to the Senator from Florida that the words I propose to insert are "manufacture for sale" not "or sell"—"manufacture for sale."

Mr. PEPPER. I have another question I should like to ask the Senator.

Mr. BARBOUR. I yield gladly to the Senator from Florida. Mr. PEPPER. What I had in mind, for example, was, say, mattress factories. Some of the W. P. A. workers in my State are engaged in certain kinds of mattress making. I suppose, of course, there are instances where such mattresses made by W. P. A. would come in competition with mattresses manufactured by regular manufacturers. Would the Senator's amendment prohibit that sort of W. P. A. work?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will say to the Senator that if the product he refers to comes in competition with the products of private industries the appropriation could not be used for that purpose, and I feel it should not be.

Mr. PEPPER. I will ask the Senator another question, if I may.

Mr. BARBOUR. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. The sewing rooms of all W. P. A. projects make some kind of garments; so far as I know, every sewing room in America which the W. P. A. is conducting makes some kind of garment. They may be given away to the needy, but there are instances perhaps of a certain amount of remuneration being obtained for them. I suppose that would all be prohibited if the Senator's amendment were adopted?

Mr. BARBOUR. If I understand the Senator correctly, I cannot agree with the statement of the Senator from Florida in that the situation he speaks of would be covered by the amendment. I presume that this clothing is not manufactured for sale by W. P. A. in competition with industry any more than clothing and other articles made in certain penal institutions are intended so to compete. They are manufactured for their own use in the institution, not for competition with private industry. The amendment I propose, I repeat, uses not the words "or sell" but the words "manufacture for sale."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I add that the amendment merely prohibits the establishment of mills or factories to manufacture goods for sale?

Mr. BARBOUR. Exactly; that is the whole point.

Mr. PEPPER. If in W. P. A. sewing rooms women make garments, although similar garments may be made in private factories, the Senator does not intend to include that kind of a case, does he?

Mr. BARBOUR. If I understand the Senator correctly, I do not. Not, anyway, if the articles are not to be sold in competition with private industry.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated again? Is it an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. BARBOUR. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the committee amendment will again be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. The committee amendment as proposed to be perfected would read as follows:

Provided further, That no funds herein appropriated or appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 shall be used by any Federal agency to establish mills or factories which would manufacture for sale articles or materials in competition with existing industries.

Mr. BARKLEY. Where does that come in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will indicate where the amendment occurs.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 4, line 23, after the word "appropriated", it is proposed to insert "or appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938", and on page 5, after the word "would", to strike out the word "sell" and insert the words "manufacture for sale."

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not see much difference between that language and the language now contained in the joint resolution.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the only effect of that amendment, of course, would be to tie up the funds that were appropriated by the last Emergency Relief Act to the Farm Security Administration, under which, as I understand, plans have been made for some manufacturing plants. I note the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] is now present. I was going to suggest the absence of a quorum, because I know that he is interested in the matter; but since he is on the floor, I have no further statement to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the discussion seems to have reference to an amendment in which the Senator from Alabama is interested. I am not sure whether or not it covers the situation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was not present when the discussion began.

Mr. HATCH. The amendment under discussion comes in on page 4 and applies to funds appropriated by the 1938 Emergency Relief Act. It is suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] that this amendment will cover all the Farm Security money. I do not care to delay the Senate on the question. I merely thought the Senator from Alabama might be interested.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not see any occasion in this relief measure of taking action concerning the distribution of money that has no application to what is being appropriated for here. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from New Jersey, being absent from the floor temporarily; but, as I understand, the amendment proposes to prevent the use of money appropriated for a specific purpose by the relief act of 1938. Is that correct?

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, if the Senator will be good enough to let me interject a word on that subject, I think I will make it clear to him.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARBOUR. If the amendment reported by the committee applied only to the deficiency appropriation contained in the pending joint resolution, of course it would have not as much effect as if it applied to the preceding measure, the 1938 relief appropriation. It was for that reason that I included the 1938 act itself to which the appropriation contained in the pending measure is an addition. The amendment to the amendment simply means that the funds provided for relief will not be used for the establishment or creation of factories and mills to manufacture for sale in competition with private industry. That is the precise purpose of the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will again state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 4, line 23, after the word "appropriated", it is proposed to insert the words "or appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1933", so as to read:

Provided further, That no funds herein appropriated or appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 shall be used by any Federal agency—

And so forth. The second amendment to the committee amendment is, on page 5, line 1, after the word "would", to strike out the word "sell" and insert the words "manufacture for sale", so as to read, "which would manufacture for sale articles or materials in competition with existing industries."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, that is a very unusual course to take on a relief measure of this kind. The Senator, of course, must have some specific purpose in mind. I am not sure that the amendment is not legislation. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey does not seek to apply a limitation to the money to be appropriated by the pending joint resolution but goes back to a previous legislative declaration, as I understand, regarding a fund that is not covered by the pending measure. So, first, I make a point of order against the amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised by the parliamentarian that the pending measure not being a general appropriation bill, rule XVI does not apply, and the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, this subject was first dealt with in the House.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment? I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey will state it.

Mr. BARBOUR. Have I lost the floor? I had not intended to do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. My attention was called to the matter, and I assumed that the Senator from New Jersey had relinquished the floor. I do not care to take him off the floor. I am perfectly willing to have him proceed if he has not finished.

Mr. BARBOUR. No; under the circumstances, I feel it more fair that I yield the floor to the Senator from Alabama, and I will ask for recognition later.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Go ahead. I would rather hear what the Senator from New Jersey has to say.

Mr. BARBOUR. No; I shall be glad to hear further the Senator from Alabama now. I shall resume my own discussion when the Senator is through.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, this amendment involves some program of the administration. I think it is an improvident time for the Senate to go into the consideration of a matter of that sort. I think many questions of fact may be involved which ought to have the consideration of some committee before the subject is brought before the Senate, in view of the fact that the amendment offered is not limited to the future, is not limited to the use of money appropriated under this joint resolution, but, as I understand, seeks the elimination or condemnation, or whatever appropriate term may be used, of some activity of some agency of the Government under a previous appropriation bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I am trying to ascertain the effect of the amendment. I read in the newspapers that the Farm Security Administration had established some hosiery mills somewhere, and some question arose from the General Accounting Office that perhaps funds had been allocated for that purpose. Perhaps part of the work has been done, and an amendment of this sort would stop a project perhaps three-fourths or seven-eighths completed. I do not know whether or not that is the case. I am just wondering.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President-

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to point out to the Senator from Alabama that this proposal was not submitted to the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which held extensive hearings on the pending joint resolution, nor to the full Committee on Appropriations. The effect of it is very obvious. It would apply to the $175,000,000 that was appropriated to the Farm Security Administration in the Work Relief Act of 1938, as well as to the funds that were appropriated to the National Youth Administration. No witness appeared before the committee to give us any idea where this alleged competition was taking place, the effect of the amendment, the kind of project at which it is aimed, or whether the project is designed to finance in part some cooperative project or some nonprofit organization. In fact, the committee had the benefit of no facts in considering this

The National Youth Administration expends funds to assist the underprivileged children of the country in securing a high-school education and to assist college students in obtaining work by which they may attempt to earn their way through college. The National Youth Administration might have a little manufacturing industry producing some kind of specialty which would assist young men and young women in completing their education. If we adopt this amendment blindly, without knowing at what it is aimed and the full scope of it, when the committee had absolutely no opportunity to consider it, we may do a very great injustice and dislocate the program of the Farm Security Administration or the National Youth Administration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the Senator from Georgia very much for that contribution.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I yield. Mr. BARBOUR. I thank the Senator. I may point out that the amendment which I sent to the desk, and which has been discussed, is a perfecting or clarifying amendment to the committee amendment. In other words, this general subject was included in the joint resolution, and must therefore have been passed on by the committee, because the general subject is in the committee amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator from Alabama will pardon me, it so happens that I was on the subcommittee when this matter was considered; and it was considered only with reference to the funds appropriated in the pending joint resolution. There was no discussion of seeking to reach back and put limitations on funds already appropriated.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, if I have the permission of the Senator from Alabama to interrupt again-

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; go ahead.

Mr. BARBOUR. Would it meet the objections of Senators who doubt the wisdom of this amendment if it should be confined to the money appropriated in the pending measure, and should not embrace the Relief Act of 1938 itself?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That provision is already in the committee amendment.

Mr. BARBOUR. No; not in the same language, Mr.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to an amendment that is not ex post facto, that does not go back of this appropriation. I am on the Appropriations Committee. I did not object to the amendment as it appears in the joint resolution as reported; but I very strenuously object to legislating now, without careful consideration, about the use of money which was appropriated a year ago, under which action has been taken.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. The language which would eliminate the ex post facto part of the amendment simply amends existing language in the joint resolution by putting in, on page 5, the words "manufacture or."

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no objection to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I really do not see any need for any additional language. It seems to me the committee amendment is clear.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what the committee thought. Mr. BARKLEY. It applies to factories which would, if established, sell articles or materials in competition with private industry. Of course, they would either have to manufacture them or buy them from somebody else if they should sell them. When we prohibit the sale of such articles or materials in competition, it seems to me we go about as far as we need to go in protecting the industries.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We have already worked that out and have written into the joint resolution language to prohibit the use for any such activity in the future of the money appropriated by the joint resolution.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes,

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not want to delay the Senate unduly. I am convinced that the language I suggest is a better way of putting the matter; but I have already said that I will strike out, if necessary, on line 2, after the word "appropriated", the words "or appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938." I want, most of all, by my amendment to establish the principle involved.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from New Jersey is willing to strike out those words?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes, under the circumstances, for otherwise I fear I shall lose my whole amendment, and thus the principle involved.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all right. I shall have no objection if those words are stricken out, just so that the amendment does not go back behind this joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] as it has been perfected by him.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. As perfected, the whole amendment reads as follows:

Provided further, That no funds herein appropriated shall be used by any Federal agency to establish mills or factories which would manufacture for sale articles or materials in competition with existing industries.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all right. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the perfected amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Barbour] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The modified amendment to the amendment was agreed to. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I offer a further amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended, will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, line 2, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided further, That all building and construction under the Works Progress Administration shall be done on a contract basis under contracts which provide that the contractors shall pay the prevailing rate of wages.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this amendment would entirely destroy the program of the Works Progress Administration, which is founded upon the fact that employment is to be given by the Works Progress Administration to needy persons. The amendment would involve letting contracts for everything, and the employment then would be by the contractor.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, at this late hour, and after all the discussion that has taken place these several days on the joint resolution, which must be enacted immediately, I do not want to delay the Senate. I feel that the amendment is not only justified but absolutely necessary. Organized labor is very much interested in it, and should be. So am I. Moreover, if the amendment shall not be adopted now, the subject will have to be gone into again at some time in the future, either when some other method of administering relief is before the Senate or otherwise; but, anyway, I beg to insist that the amendment be voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended. The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now revert to the amendment objected to by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell], which will be stated.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I had intended to address myself to this amendment, as well as to the general relief program, for some little time, perhaps an hour or more. If it is agreeable to the Senator in charge of the bill and to the majority leader, I should like to have a recess taken at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Have all amendments except this one been disposed of?

Mr. RUSSELL. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why can we not go on with the others, and pass over this one?

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest that it be passed over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let us finish the committee amendments. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to which reference has been made will be passed over until tomorrow. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 2. No alien illegally within the limits of the United States, and no alien who has not, prior to June 21, 1938, filed a declaration of intention to become an American citizen which is valid and has not expired, shall knowingly be given employment or continued in employment on any project prosecuted under the appropriations contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution: Provided, That preference in employment on such projects shall be given in the following order: (1) Veterans of the World War and the Spanish-American War and veterans of any campaign or expedition in which the United States has been engaged (as determined on the basis of the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration) who are in need and are American citizens; (2) other American citizens, Indians, and other persons owing allegiance to the United States who are in need; and (3) those altens in need whose declarations of intention to become American citizens were filed prior to June 21, 1938, and are valid and have not expired.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. On line 17, following the word "Indians", I move to strike out the comma which follows that word, so that the phrase would read "Indians and other persons owing allegiance to the United States." The Works Progress Administration called this to my attention and stated that the original 1938 act did not contain the comma; that under the language as drawn, with the comma included, any foreign Indian would be entitled to preference. The committee has no objection to striking out the comma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Mexico.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, line 17, after the word "Indians", it is proposed to strike out the comma.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to ask some member of the committee about a provision on page 3, line 6. Why was the limitation of $60,000,000 as the amount which can be allocated to Federal departments raised to $83,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. That was done in the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why was it done? I do not care where it was done.

Mr. ADAMS. I will make an effort to state why it was done in the other House. The bill originally called for an appropriation for 8 months. The $60,000,000 would carry the work for the 8 months. The $83,000,000 is the sum required to carry the same work for the whole term, including the 4 months ensuing.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator, but I really see no reason why the departments should go to the W. P. A. to get money for their projects. Congress appropriates money for all the departments. They come here and get what Congress says they ought to have, and then they go to the W. P. A. and get projects approved.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the Senator from Texas permit me to make a cautionary suggestion? In the committee an amendment was offered by the very distinguished Senator from Arizona [Mr. Hayden] in an effort to raise the amount. We did pretty well to hold the figure at the amount which now appears in the bill against his persuasiveness.

Mr. CONNALLY. If it was the junior Senator from Arizona, I do not see how the committee resisted him.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, what deceives the Senator-

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope I am not deceived.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Senator is deceived by the word "allocated." It would appear on the face of the text as though 60,000,000, or 83,000,000, as the case may be, was being taken away from the W. P. A. and given to the various Federal departments to be spent as they saw fit, without reference to providing work for the unemployed. Let me illustrate how, as a matter of fact, the provision operates. The War Department, for instance, has an Army post adjacent to a city, and money is allocated from this fund to the War Department. Certain work is to be performed by common labor. If there are in the immediate vicinity unemployed men on the W. P. A. rolls who otherwise would be employed by the State, county, or municipality, the War Department can set up a W. P. A. project in its Army post and those very men will be employed there. That is all there is to the provision. In other words, we improve Government property by the labor of men who are being hired anyway, and the money is going to be expended anyway. So it is a very desirable arrangement. Wherever an Army post, or park, or forest, or anything like that, belongs to the United States, if there are unemployed people in the vicinity who are on the W. P. A. roll, and who have to be paid anyway, the department can set up a W. P. A. project, and the Government of the United States or a particular department will sponsor the project.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought that was the way it operated, but it results in the departments getting more money than Congress appropriates for their use, and it results in depriving the States, the municipalities, and local authorities of what people in other places are getting.

Mr. HAYDEN. No. The Senator will agree with me that there is no saving of money. The men are in the community, they are on the W. P. A. roll, and they are going to be employed anyway. The money will go out of the Treasury anyway.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not talking about that; I am talking about the beneficiaries.

Mr. HAYDEN. Is it not better for the Congress of the United States, if a wise expenditure can be made on Government property, to benefit the property of the Government, rather than give it to a State or county or municipality?

Mr. CONNALLY. If the War Department has appropriations for this kind of work, it can hire the people itself; it does not have to set up a W. P. A. project. Some instances have been called to my attention. One department says, "We are going to try to do this. We are going to get a W. P. A. project." In other words, it is another way of chiseling more money out of the Treasury which they do not get from the committees.

Mr. HAYDEN. The money goes out, anyway.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the money goes out; but we ought to have some concern with what is going to result from its going out.

Mr. HAYDEN. The appropriating committees of the House and the Senate do have concern. Each time when a regular appropriation comes before them they diligently inquire what is being done with W. P. A. funds. In a case, for instance, such as the appropriation for the eradication of the chestnut blight, with which the Senator is familiar, because he is a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, that is an ideal project for this kind of labor, which can go out and cut down trees affected with the blight. We cut down the appropriation heretofore made for the eradication of the chestnut blight, and have it taken care of in this way. In that way we provide the proper kind of employment in the neighborhood doing a very desirable Federal work.

Mr. CONNALLY. I think the Senator from Arizona has put the best possible face on the matter that could be placed

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas is correct in his suggestion for another and a differ-

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas is happy to be right for any reason at any time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Sometimes when we have even a great many reasons we doubt that we are right.

Appropriating money for one department and allowing it to be given or allotted to another department is a bad method of doing the Government's business. The War Department has the right to come before us with its budget and with its recommendations. The committee hears it, and then, after the Department has gotten all it can, it goes to the W. P. A. and gets a project approved. I call the attention of the Senator from Arizona to the matter he mentioned a while ago, the question of the chestnut blight. We reduced the Department's appropriation for that, and it was made up in this way. I have been on the Committee on Appropriations a long time and I have never known of a regular appropriation being reduced because the W. P. A. or any other organization might add to it. It may have occurred, but I have no recollection of it, and it is not a natural occurrence.

In my judgment, appropriating for one department and having the money turned over at the will of the head of that department to yet another department is not the right way to legislate. It is a bad method of legislation, and I hope it will not be indulged in any more.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Tennessee for giving much better reasons than the Senator from Texas gave. It is doing indirectly what Congress has refused to do directly. It has refused this money, but they go around and get it from the W. P. A., thereby reducing the amount available for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, after line 21, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 3. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indi-

SEC. 3. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to offer or promise any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit, provided for or made possible by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution, to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution, to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, by any means, any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit, provided for or made possible by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution, on account of any political activity, support of, or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

(c) Any person who knowingly violates any provision of this section shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

1 year, or both.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to offer some perfecting amendments to this amendment of the committee. In section (b), on page 6, line 6, I ask that there be stricken out the words "employed in any administrative or supervising capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution."

In explanation I will say, Mr. President, that the committee in considering certain amendments which I had offered misconstrued the amendment set forth as section (b), and sought to limit it to only employees of the Works Progress Administration. That was not the intention of the amendment, and the words I have proposed to strike out are merely the words added by the committee. The amendment with those words stricken out will remain just as it was originally drafted and submitted by me. I have explained the situation to the members of the committee, and I understand they do not object to my proposal.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am afraid I am one of the committee members who is not entirely in accord with that. It seemed to me, as we studied the matter before the committee, that what we were trying to do was to prevent the abuse of any power given to anyone by the W. P. A. acts or any of the appropriation acts. We tried to prevent the use of such power to influence anyone politically. If we strike out the language which the Senator from New Mexico seeks to strike out, it is my impression that we would go too far. That is, it would not be limited in its effect to those who were in Government employment, but it would apply to any person who threatened or attempted to deprive anyone of employment by any means. I mean that any individual who was not a Government employee or agent, who would threaten someone if he did not vote this way, or if he voted the other way, would be guilty of a felony. A Senator might be making a speech on a public platform, and proceed to announce that if W. P. A. workers took any part in politics they would be discharged. It seems to me that under the terms of the proposed language that Senator would be guilty of a felony because he had attempted to influence political action on the part of W. P. A. workers. One would influence the workers' action as much by saying that they must not do something as by saying they must do something. So I feel that the language of the committee amendment is correct. I am fearful that it will be dangerous to go as far as the Senator from New Mexico suggests.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this is a very important matter, which I discussed with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], who I thought was the author of the language. That is why I said I thought the committee would not object to my proposal. The Senator from South Carolina told me he would not object to it, and that so far as he was concerned there would not be any discussion of it. If there is to be discussion of it, and if we are to enter into debate on this subject, I certainly would not want to do it at this time, under the circumstances that exist in the Chamber. I should like to have the full membership of the Senate in the Chamber, and go into a thorough discussion of the matter.

If we leave in the measure the words the committee have inserted, they practically destroy the effect of the amendment. I have never taken the position that I was trying to legislate with any particular situation in view, nor have I had in mind certain things, or individuals whose actions I was trying to correct. In the arguments which I have made on the floor concerning this subject I have tried to present the matter from a general standpoint, in view of conditions which might exist, and which I hope do not exist.

The fact is, however, that any politics which has come into relief-if there has been politics in relief-do not, in my opinion, come from the officials of the Works Progress Administration. The evil, if there has been evil, comes from others. They are the ones whose political actions would be prohibited, under the amendment as I originally drafted it.

As I have said, if there is to be discussion, or objection to the amendment which I have proposed, I much prefer to have it go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. I have discussed with the Senator from New Mexico and other Senators the possibility of more comprehensive legislation than is provided for in the pending joint resolution. Not all the harm done by efforts to coerce and intimidate and influence Government employees would be prevented by language we may write into the pending joint resolution. We have passed legislation providing for social security, old-age pension benefits, unemployment insurance. Congress has very generously appropriated half the money not only for the payment of the pensions but for the payment of the salaries of all those who were to administer those laws in the States, and has retained no jurisdiction whatever either to approve or disapprove those who are appointed to administer the laws.

In connection with unemployment insurance, the Federal Government pays all the salaries and benefits, and the States shall make no contribution whatever; yet all those who are appointed to administer the act are appointed by the States, and not by the Federal Government.

The same thing is true in connection with Federal aid for highways. Outside of a few engineers who are Federal engineers, all the administrative work is done by employees of the States. The language of the pending measure does not in any way cover them, and it does not in any way penalize those who administer those funds in the States for promising jobs or punishing people who have jobs because of their political activity.

While I realize that the Senator from New Mexico and all of us are hoping to work out something on the subject of a permanent nature and which will be comprehensive, I have been very seriously considering the possibility of amending the language in the pending measure so as not only to include money appropriated in this joint resolution and the act of 1938, but all other acts of Congress making appropriations in aid of any activity within the States. I think if it is not reasonably certain that a comprehensive general law on the subject is to be enacted at this session, while we are on the subject, we ought to make the provisions of the pending measure a little broader.

Mr. HATCH. I am very glad the Senator from Kentucky interrupted me, and he is entirely correct when he states that he has conferred not only with me but with other Senators with respect to this subject. I see the Senator from Texas [Mr. Sheppard] on the floor. We have all at various times conferred about this matter and about permanent legislation along the lines the Senator from Kentucky has been discussing. I am quite sure we are all in accord that we should have permanent legislation which would not only reach the activities which the Senator from Kentucky mentions but would also prevent the necessity of writing legislation of this type into appropriation measures from year to year and time to time. We should have general comprehensive legislation along the lines the Sheppard committee recommended.

I myself have already introduced two measures looking toward that, and I am hopeful that the Senator from Texas will follow up the recommendations of his committee and introduce a bill and that we can all get together and work it out, and at this session of Congress enact broad, comprehensive legislation which will take care of the situation to which the Senator from Kentucky has referred and which he has discussed before on the floor of the Senate, and pointed out the vice of the situation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the particular activities I mentioned awhile ago are not all those which should be included. The ones I mentioned were those which occurred to me at the moment. There are many instances of the Federal Government making appropriations but having no check whatever over the personnel. No law applies to those people. They are not Government employees; they are not Federal employees; they are not responsible to the Federal Government in any way. And certainly, when Congress is appropriating money to aid communities, counties, cities, and States, leaving to such communities the power to appoint those who are to expend the money and administer the law, there ought to be some check over the political activities of those local officials as well as those who are on the Federal pay roll.

Mr. HATCH. I quite agree with the Senator from Kentucky. The only reason I did not suggest legislation to cover other activities is because it should be very carefully drawn and worked out, and I did not have it worked out. I have spent some time on the amendments I offered, and I believe that the amendments which I offered cover the situation so far as this particular activity is concerned.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further vield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Section 3 of the committee amendment provides:

It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to offer or promise any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit, provided for or made possible by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution—

What would the Senator think of inserting at that point the words "or any other act of the Congress," so that it would cover efforts to bribe voters or promise them positions in return for their support, not only in a Federal election but in any other sort of an election?

Mr. HATCH. I do not see how anyone could object to that. If the Senator will observe the amendments, he will find they are directed at two things: One, the giving of a bribe, in effect-we are all opposed to anyone giving a bribeand the other is coercion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, the insertion of such language in this measure would not in any way interfere with the general and permanent law on the subject.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator from Kentucky will state the language, I shall gladly accept it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I would simply suggest that after the words "joint resolution", on page 6, line 2, there be inserted the words "or any other act of the Congress", so that it would apply not only to the appropriations in the Emergency Act of 1939 but to this joint resolution, or any other appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico to the committee amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I am willing to withdraw my amendment and let the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kentucky be acted upon.

Mr. BARKLEY. On page 6, line 2, after the words "joint resolution", I move to insert the words "or any other act of the Congress." Those words should also be inserted wherever the words "joint resolution" are used in section 3.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. After the words "joint resolution," wherever they appear, I move to have inserted the words "or any other act of the Congress."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I may ask the Senator whether or not his language would go far enough to make it an offense for the Senator from Kentucky to employ someone as his secretary or take charge of his headquarters in a campaign simply because that person promised to vote for the Senator? Or would it be unlawful for anyone to offer employment to another as a reward for political activity or for his support? In other words, if the Senator hired somebody to conduct his headquarters, would he be violating this section?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think so. It would simply make it unlawful for any person in authority to offer another person a position in consideration of his vote. If I could not prove that I had employed a secretary to do my work instead of as an inducement to vote for me, I probably ought to be convicted.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that that is not what the amendment says. The Senator has not read it clearly. It provides that it shall be unlawful for any person-that is, not merely anybody in authority, but anybody-to offer any work to anyone for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party.

Mr. HATCH. Not any work.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is already the law, as a matter of fact, in the Corrupt Practices Act. It is unlawful for any of us, as candidates, to offer anybody a job, or money, or work, or any other thing of value.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator does not mean that he cannot hire a publicity agent?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; of course not.

Mr. ADAMS. The proposed amendment would make it an offense to hire a publicity agent to go out and work for the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course not.

Mr. ADAMS. I suggest that the Senator read the proposed amendment with some care.

Mr. BARKLEY. If it would do that with respect to any other appropriation, then it would do it with respect to this one. All I am trying to do is to make the same law apply to other appropriations which it is sought to apply to this one. Of course, it would not have any effect on a publicity employee or any other campaign employee, because they are not paid out of public money. This amendment applies only to money which is paid out of appropriations passed by Congress.

Mr. HATCH. As the provision is now drawn, it applies only to money paid out of this appropriation; but with the Senator's amendment it would apply to appropriations made by any other act.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 6, line 2, after the words "joint resolution", it is proposed to insert the words "or any other act of the Congress"; the same amendment, in line 11, after the word "resolution"; and the same amendment in line 15, after the word "resolution."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the committee amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 6, line 15, after the words "on account of", it is proposed to insert the words "race, creed, color, or."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, in the original act appropriating funds for the employment of W. P. A. workers there is a provision that no one shall be excluded on account of race, creed, or color. We have the same provision in the act with respect to the Civilian Conservation Corps. It seems to me it is logical that if no one shall be denied employment because of race, creed, or color, the same situation should apply with respect to discharge from employment. For that reason I offer the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I desire to reoffer the amendment to the amendment which I offered a moment ago, which I now modify so as to include the perfecting amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 6, line 6, after the word "person", it is proposed to strike out down to and including the words "act of the Congress", in line 11, so as to make the subsection read:

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment go over until we can really study it. As I see it, the Senator from New Mexico could not hire as a secretary for his office in the Senate Office Building, without violating this provision, a person who worked for his election.

I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this particular amendment be deferred until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that consideration of the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico be deferred until tomorrow. Is there objection?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ought not to be permitted to hire a secretary and say, "I am giving you this job to go out and support me."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. As I understand the language of this particular subsection, there is no difference between the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Colorado. It is simply a question of the proper wording to accomplish the object. The Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Colorado would not want to offer a job as an inducement to a person.

Mr. HATCH. That is what we say.

Mr. BYRNES. But we do not use that wording. I think an agreement can be brought about between the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Colorado. We have the same objective.

It might be well to defer consideration of this particular section so that we may sit down and consider the language which would accomplish the purpose. I ask the Senator from New Mexico if he will not agree to pass over this particular subsection. I think we can get together on language which we all have in mind.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. A number of years ago our beloved President thought he could change human nature perhaps more quickly than it developed that he could change it. The Senator must have had very little experience in the practical world whence we all came if he expects that a man can live in politics and not try to help his friends to the limit of his ability. In my observation very few persons have stayed in politics who did not follow that principle. If the Senator is trying to introduce a provision to the effect that I must hire as my secretary the man who fought me in the election, and a provision which prohibits me from telling my friends who have helped toward my election, "I will try to get you a job if I can," it will make us all ridiculous.

Such a provision would compel me to recommend for appointment as United States marshal a man who went out and fought me, for he is paid with Federal money. We might just as well admit that that would be ridiculous and would achieve something so utterly ridiculous that it is foolish to try it.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New Mexico has lived probably as long as has the Senator from Florida. I surmise that the Senator from New Mexico has had as much experience, practical and impractical, as has the Senator from Florida. I know something about politicians, and I know something about how party organizations are built up and maintained. I have never adopted, on the floor of the Senate or anywhere else, a hypocritical attitude about the matter. I hope I have not adopted a ridiculous attitude. The amendment in no manner attempts to tell the Senator from Florida or any other Senator that he shall hire his political enemies. It does not attempt to do away with party politics. However, it is an attempt in a measure to prevent anyone from promising jobs and benefits under an act appropriating money for the relief of human beings, and to prevent that appropriation from being used for political purposes. If that attitude is ridiculous, then I am ridiculous.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to say to the Senator that I understood that he proposed to amend the amendment reported by the committee to the joint resolution which limited that provision only to relief appropriations, so as to make it applicable to all Federal funds. Did I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New Mexico did not offer that amendment. The Senator from Kentucky did. However, the Senator from New Mexico is entirely in accord with the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky, which has been agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. So far as the relief appropriation is concerned, and so far as concerns any reasonable extension of the application which may be made of that principle, I am in favor of it. However, I am not in favor of it to the extent the Senator indicated a moment ago, when I understood the Senator to say that even his secretary could not be given an inducement.

Mr. HATCH. I did not say that.

Mr. PEPPER. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. I said that I should not be permitted to say to anybody, "If you will go out and do so-and-so for me, I will give you a job." Such action is already prohibited by an act of Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. What the Senator from New Mexico means is that no Senator or any other man should be permitted to hire a secretary with the condition that "If I hire you, you must support me."

Mr. HATCH. That is what I mean.

Mr. BYRNES. That is all the Senator means.

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not believe there is a man in the United States Senate or anywhere else who has any objection to that position.

Mr. HATCH. I do not think there is; and I do not think the Senator from Florida has any objection to it.

Mr. BYRNES. If a man promises someone a job under those circumstances it is the same thing.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion from another angle?

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator's amendment would read like this:

It shall be unlawful for any person to deprive any person of employment on account of any political activity.

That is simpler. Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. That would mean that when we recommend that a United States marshal be displaced by some-body else, we do not do it because the incumbent happens not to belong to our party, but we always do it because we think our man is a much better man.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator understands what I meant by the amendment. I applied to the relief bill the principle, which I urge with all the earnestness I have, that no man—I do not care who he is, what his politics is, whom he voted for or whom he did not vote for—no man, and I say it inclusive of everybody, has any right to say, "You cannot have this relief job." That is what my amendment does.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I know; but the Senator from New Mexico has accepted the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, which broadens the original amendment. Does not the Senator think we would be better off if we should adopt his original suggestion—

Mr. HATCH. I thought so.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. And let the matter go over until tomorrow?

Mr. HATCH. I am perfectly willing to have that done. I have said that I am willing to let the matter go over, but I also say there really is not any difference at all between us on this fundamental proposition. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that the reason why I did not extend these amendments beyond the relief measure was to avoid just such complications as he has mentioned. I thought the matter should be the subject of general legislation, carefully worked out, so that no inconsistencies or hypocrisies, if we may call them such, would be included in legislation; but I knew the interest of the Senator from Kentucky, and he manifested it during the debate last year. He mentioned then the condition which existed in his State and was very anxious to cover those things; and, if he wants to do so, I am perfectly willing.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. But, without commenting on the merits of the original proposal, we have now gotten entirely away from it by reason of this amendment. That is not what the Senator from New Mexico originally had in mind. It has been broadened out, so I think we had better wait until tomorrow and see if the Senator from New Mexico and the other members of the committee cannot get together on some language which will cover the subject.

Mr. HATCH. I am perfectly willing to have the matter go over

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from New Mexico and I misunderstood each other a moment ago, I do not want the session to close without making my position plain.

I am willing to vote for civil service for every single Federal employee. Nobody recognizes more than I do the virtual impossibility of Members of the United States Senate performing their senatorial duties by reason of the terrific demands made upon them with respect to petty patronage or political demands of one sort or another. I am heartily in favor of the original amendment, known as the Hatch amendment, which the Senator from New Mexico has so well pushed in this body for at least the past 2 or 3 years; and I will vote for the amendment known as the Hatch amendment which has just come out of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee. But I do not want, and I meant that I did not approve of, a measure which would put all of us in a position which I did not think we would sincerely carry out. I did not think the Members of this body were going to change the political rules under which we have lived, whereby, when it came to making appointments, Senators would recommend those who had been their friends in a political way. I thought the proposed amendment would forbid that sort of thing, and that we would be put in a hypocritical position if we should pass a law to that effect without actually intending to conform to it.

I want to make it clear that I am for the amendment relative to the relief appropriation. Nobody desires more than I do that every vestige of politics shall be eradicated from that appropriation.

IMPROVEMENT OF HARBOR AT RED WING, MINN.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, on January 17 I requested that a report from the Secretary of War pertaining to a re-examination of the Mississippi River between the Missouri River and Minneapolis, with a view to improvement of a harbor at Red Wing, Minn., be published as a Senate document. I have since ascertained that the report has been published as a House document, and I therefore withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request is withdrawn.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Schwelleneach in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations in the Army, and a convention, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the following nominations:

George A. Cook, of Illinois, to be a member of the National Mediation Board for the term expiring February 1, 1942 (reappointment); and M. Roland Reed, of Pennsylvania, to be a member of the Railroad Retirement Board for a term of 5 years from August 29, 1938, the office to which he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate, vice James A. Dailey, term expired.

Mr. DONAHEY, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, reported favorably the nomination of Robert E. Freer, of Ohio, to be a Federal Trade Commissioner for a term of 7 years from September 26, 1938, the office to which he was appointed during the last recess of the Senate. (Reappointment.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state in their order the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

TERRITORY OF ALASKA

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edward L. Bartlett, of Alaska, to be secretary of the Territory of Alaska. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

COAST GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard of the United States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the Coast Guard nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Coast Guard nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotions in the Regular Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the Army nominations be

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations for promotions in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William H. Burke, of Little River, Kans., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the leaders of the respective parties. I hope the President may be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Burke, of Kansas, as collector of internal revenue for the district of Kansas. There are exceptional reasons why it should be done.

I ask unanimous consent that the President may be notified of the confirmation of that nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Saturday, January 28, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Mr. McNARY. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

REPORT ON SCIENTIFIC AND OTHER NAVAL CONTRACTS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, pursuant to law, lists of contractors and subcontractors who have been granted exemption by the Secretary of the Navy from the limitation of profit under existing law to December 31, 1938, owing to the contracts being for scientific equipment and of a confidential nature; also report of a confidential contract entered into during the year ended December 31, 1937, and not previously reported upon, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

COLLECTION OF DATA ON PRISON-MADE GOODS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Bureau of Labor Statistics to collect information as to the amount and value of all goods produced in State and Federal prisons, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. EMPLOYMENT, WAGES, AND VALUE OF MATERIALS ON PUBLIC WORKS AND BUILDINGS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to require reports to the Department of Labor by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings and public works concerning employment, wages, and value of materials, and for other purposes, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORT OF UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Administrator of the United States Housing Authority, submitting, pursuant to law, the First Annual Report of that Authority for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1938, with supplementary data on activities to December 31, 1938, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

ALIENS EMPLOYED UNDER GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate letters from the executive director of the National Emergency Council and the secretary of the International Boundary Commission, United States, Alaska, and Canada (United States section), responding to Senate Resolution 285, agreed to June 8, 1938, and stating that there are no aliens employed by the Council or the Commission, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

House Joint Memorial 2

Joint memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, do hereby respectfully represent that

Whereas the application of water to the fertile desert soils in this northwestern part of the United States is of most importance in the matter of sustaining lives and homes and in the cultivation and growth of agricultural products, and without which most of the tillable soil in Idaho would be unproductive. That each year there flows to the sea numberless acre-feet of water which is lost to the use of man in the irrigation of land. That by the storage of said water during the run-off seasons of the year, when much devastation and damage is done by floodwaters, such waters are not only saved for the beneficent purpose of application to the soil but the great damage by flood is averted; and

Whereas the Mississippi River and its tributaries have become the source of great activity and study on the part of the Government for flood control, and that the Yellowstone Lake through the Yellowstone River drains into the said Mississippi River; and

Whereas it appears from engineering studies of the project that one of the most feasible plans for diversion of floodwaters from the said Mississippi drainage is by the diversion of the said floodwaters and natural flow from the Yellowstone Lake, situated in the Yellowstone National Park, through a tunnel and into the headwaters of the Snake River, thereby not only controlling that portion of the floodwater source from the Mississippi Valley but also diverting said water to a beneficial use by augmenting the natural flow of the Snake River drainage; and

Whereas the said diversion of the natural flow of the said Yellowstone Lake into Snake River would not in any way destroy or impair the scenic value now existent, but would permit complete control of said waters for the enhancing of the present scenic value of the lake and the rivers and channels thereof: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho (the senate concurring), That we most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States of America and upon the Reclamation Department of the United States Government the favorable consideration of such legislation and appropriations as are necessary to carry to completion a project that will divert the natural flow of the Yellowstone Lake in Yellowstone National Park into the headwaters of the Snake River; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to immediately forward certified copies of this resolution to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America, and to the Senators and the Representatives in Congress from this State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Idaho, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

House Joint Memorial 1

Joint memorial to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled

We, your memorialists, the Legislature of the State of Idaho, respectfully represent that—

Whereas the Yellowstone National Park is bounded by three intermountain States, namely, Idaho, Montana, and Wyoming, with three entrances from Montana, two from Wyoming, and none from Idaho; by reason of the reputation and popularity of the said Yellowstone National Park as a national playground thousands of people from the Nation and the world visit said park each year, and as a result thereof great publicity of a beneficial nature and of great value accrues to these two States, namely, Montana and Wyoming, and the gateway communities of said States; that

Whereas due to said travel the greatly increasing traffic in said national park is producing, and will continue to produce, unless relieved, great traffic congestion at said entrances and in the so-called "Bottle Neck" at Old Faithful in said park; and Whereas there now exists a State highway in the State of Idaho for an Idaho entrance via the Bechler ranger station and Bechler River the Yellowstone National Park line which would require an additional construction of highway by the Government of approximately 22 miles to extend such highway to the Yellowstone Loop Highway at Old Faithful and produce an Idaho entrance which would relieve said point and its traffic congestion and open up a highly scenic area within the said Yellowstone National Park not now accessible to the motorist, and would provide great additional benefits to the State of Idaho and to communities along said entrance: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Idaho (the senate concurring), That we most respectfully urge upon the Congress of the United States that the said Congress favorably consider such legislation and passage and make such necessary appropriations to provide for and carry to completion the highway above mentioned from the Yellowstone Park line to the loop highway of said Yellowstone National Park at Old Faithful, and that the National Park Service of the Department of the Interior of the United States be authorized to begin immediately on the construction of said highway; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Idaho be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to immediately forward certified copies of this joint memorial to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Civil Rights Federation, of Detroit, Mich., favoring the allotment of additional funds to the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor investigating violations of civil liberties, etc., which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of Porterville, Calif., praying for the enactment of general welfare legislation providing for old-age assistance, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by E. Butler Division, No. 507, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, in the State of Missouri, protesting against the enactment of legislation to regulate the mileage of train service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Frank J. Lusiak, financial secretary of Gentlemen Boot and Shoe Workers Local Union No. 170, of Milwaukee, Wis., praying for confirmation of the nomination of Thomas R. Amlie as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate telegrams in the nature of memorials from James L. Roddy, of Milwaukee, Wis., and Walter H. Farmer, Frank A. Beers and others, of Grand Rapids, Mich., remonstrating against confirmation of the nomination of Thomas R. Amlie as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Fourth National Convention of the International Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists and Technicians, at New York City, favoring an investigation of the operations of the so-called Dies committee, being the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities (House of Representatives), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, on the occasion of the unveiling of a bronze statue of Dr. Edmund A. Babler near St. Louis, Mo., on October 10, 1938, which appears in the Appendix.]

DENISON-DURANT DAM ON RED RIVER—EDITORIAL FROM OKLAHOMA CITY TIMES

[Mr. Lee asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Record a portion of an editorial published in the Oklahoma City Times of January 24, 1934, on the subject of the Denison-Durant Dam on the Red River, which appears in the Appendix.]

TRAINING FOR AVIATION DEFENSE-ADDRESS BY COL. J. E. MYERS

[Mr. Reynolds asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Record a radio address on the subject of the education of youth in aviation, delivered by Col. J. E. Myers, United States Army, retired, at St. Petersburg, Fla., which appears in the Appendix.]

AVIATION DAY

[Mr. Reynolds asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Record an article from the Independent of St. Petersburg, Fla., of January 12, 1939, on the subject of making August 19 each year Aviation Day, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 83) making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When the Senate took a recess yesterday afternoon it was considering the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Hatch] to a committee amendment. The Chair thinks probably it would be well to have the amendment stated by the clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 6, after the word "person," Mr. Harch's amendment proposes to strike out the following words:

Employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution.

And including the amendment agreed to on motion of Mr. BARKLEY, reading as follows:

Or any other act of Congress.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the amendment just read relates to subsection (b) on page 6. The amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley], and adopted, really does not apply to that subsection. I discussed the matter this morning with the Senator; and before voting on the pending amendment, if the Senator is agreeable, I ask that the vote by which his amendment was adopted yesterday be reconsidered, in the hope that the Senator from Kentucky will withdraw his amendment as to all except subsection (a).

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that was my original purpose. I offered the amendment only to subsection (a). It was rather automatically inserted at other places in the joint resolution, probably without proper consideration. I desire to withdraw the amendment insofar as it applies to the subsections other than subsection (a).

I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment offered by me yesterday was agreed to, applicable to all other subsections than (a), be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. I now withdraw the amendment as to the other subsections, and leave it in subsection (a).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, there are some other amendments to that amendment.

On yesterday a little discussion between the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] and myself seemed to point to some differences. This morning we have further discussed the question; and the point raised by the Senator from Colorado can be met by striking from the joint resolution on page 5, line 23, the words "offer or". Striking out those words will make no material difference in the main amendment.

I now offer the amendment, and ask that those words be stricken out.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I could not distinctly hear the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state for the information of the Senate the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico to the amendment reported by the committee, as amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the words "offer or", so that, if amended, the section will read:

It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to promise any employment, etc.

Mr. HATCH. In my opinion, those words really are surplusage. The amendment will remove a fear that the Senator from Colorado had, and I do not think it will change the main amendment in any way at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have still another amendment.

I am informed by officials of the Department of Justice that probably there should be a saving clause after each of these sections to protect against, perhaps, some conflict in laws. Therefore, to this section, in line 21, page 6, I offer the following amendment:

The provisions of this section shall be in addition to, not in substitution for, any other section of existing law, or of this act.

That is merely a saving clause suggested, as I understand, by the Department of Justice.

Mr. McNARY. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, line 21, after the word "both", it is proposed to insert:

The provisions of this section shall be in addition to, not in substitution for, any other section of existing law, or of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to; and, without objection, the amendment of the committee, as amended, is agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee. The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 6, after line 21, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 4. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. All such persons shall retain tion or affecting the results thereof. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, but they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, again it is suggested by the Department of Justice that the saving clause added to the other section be added to this section. I offer it, therefore, as an amendment to this section.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does that amendment take care of the suggestion made by the President in his message with reference to political activities?

Mr. HATCH. I think all these amendments are in exact accord with the message of the President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator think the whole set of amendments, as amended, will carry out the intention indicated in the President's message, and will not take away from these persons any of the ordinary civil rights to which they are entitled as American citizens?

Mr. HATCH. Quite right. We tried very hard to protect against that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment offered to the committee amendment by the Senator from New Mexico is agreed to; and, without objection, the amendment reported by the committee, as amended, is agreed to.

The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 7, after line 13, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 5. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to solicit, or knowingly be in any manner concerned in soliciting, any liett, or knowingly be in any manner concerned in soliciting, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for the campaign expenses of any individual or political party from any person entitled to or receiving compensation or employment provided for by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution.

(b) Any person who knowingly violates any provision of this section shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the amendment which I offered yesterday, and which has again been adopted this morning to subsection (a) of section 3, applies to any person who, directly or indirectly, promises any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided for or made possible by this measure, or by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, or any other act. We eliminated that provision from subsections (b) and (c). It strikes me that the same provision might be applicable to section 5, subsection (a), because it provides that "it shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to solicit, or knowingly be in any manner concerned in soliciting, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for the campaign expenses of any individual or political party from any person entitled to or receiving compensation or employment provided for" by this joint resolution or by the act of 1938. The same situation applies to a vast number of other employees all over the Nation who are not appointed under the Federal Government or by the Federal Government, but whose compensation is, either in whole or in part, paid by the Federal Government. Ought not this prohibition against assessments to apply to those persons as well as to those who are paid out of this appropriation?

Mr. HATCH. I will say frankly to the Senator from Kentucky that I think it should.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am going to offer the same amendment, then, to insert, at the end of line 20, the words "or any other act of the Congress", so that as amended subsection (a) will

It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to solicit, or knowingly be in any manner concerned in soliciting, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for the campaign expenses of any individual or political party from any person entitled to or receiving compensation or employment provided for by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution, or any other act of the Congress

I offer that amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Let the amendment be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 7, line 20, after the words "joint resolution", it is proposed to insert the words: "or any other act of the Congress."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment reported by the committee is agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, again I offer the savingclause amendment to this section, following the word "both."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico offers the same amendment that he offered to the other sections. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to; and, without objection, the amendment reported by the committee, as amended, is agreed to.

The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, beginning in line 1, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 6. Section 21 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 038 is hereby amended by striking out the word "projects." 1938 is hereby amended by striking out the word '

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 8, after line 3, it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 7. No person in need who refuses a bona fide offer of private employment under reasonable working conditions which pays the prevailing wage for such work in the community where he resides and who is capable of performing such work shall be employed or retained in employment on work projects under the funds appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution for the period such private employment would be available: Provided, That any person who takes such private employment shall at the expiration thereof be entitled to immediate resumption of his previous employment status with the Works Progress Administration if he is still in need and if he has lost the private employment through no fault of his own.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That concludes the committee amendments, with the exception of one passed over at the instance of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell], which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, beginning with the word "Provided" in line 25, it is proposed by the committee to strike out the following words-

Provided further, That the appropriations herein made shall not be available unless and until rates of pay of employees of the Works Progress Administration are so fixed by appropriate administrative order as to eliminate differentials in rates of pay of workers of the same general class exceeding 25 percent of the maximum rates as between workers employed in different States or different areas of the same general type in the several States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will see fit to reject the committee amendment which strikes from the joint resolution the provision which has just been read.

The purpose of the provision in the House measure is to eliminate the tremendous discrepancy in the rate of hourly compensation paid to persons employed upon projects of the Works Progress Administration who are doing similar work. If the Members of the Senate will turn to page 259 of the hearings before the subcommittee on this measure, they will find a table prepared by the Works Progress Administration which sets forth the variations in the hourly rate of compensation paid to all of the 3,000,000 persons who are employed upon these projects, divided into the several classes into which the various employees are apportioned.

There are four recognized types of employment—the unskilled, the intermediate, the skilled, and the professional or technical. Within each of these several general classes of employment there are any number of different types of employment for which varying scales of compensation have been fixed. A study of this table will disclose that the hourly compensation paid to the unskilled laborer ranges from 18 cents per hour as the low in the State of Tennessee to the high of $1.02½ cents an hour for unskilled laborers in certain sections of the State of Illinois.

In other words, for the performance of labor of the same general type in these two States a laborer in Tennessee will receive 18 cents per hour compared with $1.02½ an hour in certain sections of the State of Illinois.

Passing to the intermediate grade, we find in this classification that the rate of hourly compensation varies from 23 cents an hour, the low, also in the State of Tennessee, to a high of $1.57 an hour in the State of New York.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator where my State of North Carolina stands in the list?

Mr. RUSSELL. In the State of North Carolina, according to the chart that was furnished by the Works Progress Administration, the minimum rate paid unskilled labor is 20 cents per hour, the maximum rate is 29 cents per hour, as compared with a maximum rate in the State of Illinois of  $1.02\frac{1}{2}$  per hour.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President-

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to yield further as soon as I have gone through these various classifications of employment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. The pay of skilled labor varies from a low of 31 cents per hour in the States of Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia to a high of $2.25 per hour in the State of New Jersey.

When we come to those who are classified as professional or technical employees we find that the scale of hourly compensation ranges from $3.03 per hour in the State of Pennsylvania to a low of 34 cents per hour, paid in the States of Alabama, Kentucky, and Virginia.

Mr. President, I assert that there is no way by which it is possible to justify any such tremendous discrimination, amounting to almost 10 times as much per hour in the State of Pennsylvania as compared with what is paid persons engaged in the same type of work in other States, when these funds have been appropriated out of the common Treasury with the purpose not only of relieving the distress incident to unemployment but with the hope, on the part of some of us, at least, that the appropriations might equalize the incomes and the purchasing power of the people of the United States.

Mr. President, it has been asserted that the provision proposed to be stricken out would strike down the prevailing wage scale, and that for that reason the amendment should be agreed to. I do not concede that this provision would strike down the prevailing hourly rate of wages anywhere within the United States. There is written into the basic law guiding the administration of the Works Progress Administration this provision, found in section 9 of the Work Relief Act of 1938:

The rates of pay for persons engaged upon projects under the appropriations in this title shall be not less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Works Progress Administration.

The effect of the House provision would not necessarily be to repeal the prevailing-wage provision of the existing law; but the effect would be a declaration by the Congress of the United States, when facts are presented for its consideration showing that the rates of pay vary by as much as the difference between $3.03 in one State to a low of 34 cents in another State for doing an hour's work of the same general type, that that discrimination or difference cannot be justified in the expenditure of public funds, and that a greater differential or margin than 25 percent shall not exist.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. How would it be possible, then, to put into effect the differential provision contained in the language of the House text without reducing the prevailing rate of wages when that prevailing rate was 25 percent in excess of the prevailing rate for similar work in a low-pay community?

Mr. RUSSEIL. Mr. President, I hear Senators refer to the prevailing wage as if it were something as fixed and as definite as the Ten Commandments. How on earth was it possible for the Works Progress Administration to arrive at what was the prevailing wage for professional and technical workers? What yardstick did the Works Progress Administration use in arriving at the prevailing wage for lawyers who are out of employment, and who are engaged upon Works Progress Administration projects? There is no standard of which I am advised which could have guided them, save in the skilled-craft classifications, where there were union organizations, and where they could adopt the scale of union wages.

What is the "prevailing wage"? The Senator from Wyoming infers that it is something which has been arrived at after an investigation, or which has been fixed by the Congress. I should like to read to him some of the testimony of Colonel Harrington before the subcommittee on this subject. Of course, Colonel Harrington was very much opposed to this provision in the bill. After 6 years of service on the Committee on Appropriations, and on the subcommittees which have handled these relief measures, I have found that the officials of the Works Progress Administration oppose any change in any relief bill, even though it be the dotting of an "1" or the crossing of a "t," which does not originate with the Works Progress Administration itself.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The question which I addressed to the Senator a moment ago was intended to develop the facts, not particularly the argument. I think there can be no question that it would be a very difficult thing to say what the prevailing rate of wages was with respect to compensation for lawyers. I am not concerned about that. What I am asking the Senator is, what would be the effect of the proposal which came from the House? Could it be other than to effect a reduction in the hourly rate, or, upon the other hand, an increase in the hourly rate?

Mr. RUSSELL. It could be handled in such a manner as to eliminate these differentials without reducing the higher rates which are now being paid, if the compensation of those who are receiving the lower rates were brought up in proportion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. What I am concerned about, briefly, is the rate which is paid to the unskilled worker—the person who is at the very bottom of the economic scale. As the Senator well knows, the rates for those people vary from one end of the country to the other. It is too bad that they do vary. I regret very much that in some communities a very low scale of hourly wages is paid, and I should be glad to do everything in my power to raise it. But if such a provision as that contained in the House text were enacted into law. the inevitable effect would be, not to raise the wages of those who were at the bottom of the scale but to tear down the wages of those who were at the top of the scale; and the whole purpose of the basic law which the Senator read just a moment ago, and which he was largely instrumental in writing into the statutes when the work-relief appropriation was first under consideration, is to prevent the administration of relief from tearing down the established scale of wages for workers, not the professional worker but the man who works with his hands, the unskilled worker, and the man who follows a trade. I cannot for the life of me see how the effect of the provision which came from the House would be anything else than what I have described.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wyoming is correct, the Congress of the United States stands impotent and helpless to rectify the condition under which one man will be paid $3.03 per hour for doing professional and technical work in one State, and another man perhaps rendering service of the same general character in another State will be paid 44 cents an hour. At least this provision seeks to bring those margins within 25 percent of each other; and I say that when we are spending $10,000,000,000 out of a common Treasury, money raised by taxation from all of the people, or by pledging the credit of all the people of the United States, I, for one, will not admit that the Congress shall stand idly by, because of some imaginary threat of repealing the prevailing wage, and say that we will permit such tremendous discriminations to exist.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That could be very simply handled, it seems to me, if the concern of the Senator is with the professional rate of wages, by providing that the proposal be limited to the professional workers' wage scale. The professional workers who are on the relief rolls are not so numerous as the unskilled workers. It is the unskilled worker with whom I am primarily concerned. I would not hesitate to say that the Senator is absolutely correct in the declaration that a professional worker should not in any State of the Union receive 25 percent more than a professional worker doing the same kind of work in any other State. There is no justification for such a difference. That situation could be cured. But the House provision, while curing that situation, would bring ruin to the unskilled workers of the Nation. Those are the persons whom we ought to be concerned in protecting.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am not willing to assume as an established fact that the Works Progress Administration wage scale, as reflected in the report which was submitted by the Works Progress Administration, does set forth what is the actual prevailing vage rate. I do not believe that within the State of Illinois there is any such difference in the rates of pay to unskilled workers as is disclosed by this report, which shows that within the State the W. P. A. is paying to one man working upon a highway or digging a ditch 31 cents an hour, and paying to another man working upon a highway or digging a ditch a dollar and two and a half cents an hour. I do not believe that within the State of Illinois there is any difference so great between the prevailing wages as to justify the great difference in wages paid by W. P. A. between the several sections of the State, that in one section the prevailing wage rate for unskilled labor will be a dollar and two and a half cents an hour, and in another section of the same State it will be 31 cents an hour.

How is this prevailing wage arrived at? I will give the Senate Colonel Harrington's own testimony on that subject:

It was an administrative problem and a big one which was presented suddenly, to determine the prevailing rates of wages throughout the United States. Therefore the determination of those rates had to be decentralized and as comprehensive a letter of instructions as could be devised was sent out to our State administrative officers telling them to determine those hourly rates by considering P. W. A. wage scales, wages of other Government agencies; State and county agencies; private employment—anything they could lay their hands on—and then to determine what the prevailing hourly rate in county A was for a carpenter.

hourly rate in county A was for a carpenter.

Senator Russell. That is, the local representative of the W.P.A. made that determination and finding?

Colonel Harrington. Yes, sir. Now, they did the best job they could of it, but it was a pretty tough job and a pretty big one and had to be done right away. I do not believe they did a perfect job.

Yet when we seek to wipe out differentials within the same State, in which one man engaged in the work of digging a ditch is paid 31 cents an hour, and another man engaged in the work of digging a ditch in another part of the State is paid $1.025 an hour, the Senator says it means striking down the prevailing wage standard.

What is the standard? It is the opinion of 3,000 county W. P. A. administrators in 3,000 counties in the States as to what is the prevailing rate of wages for hourly employment. It has never been fixed by any central body in Washington. There has been no survey made. The law does not say that the Administrator shall pay exactly the prevailing wage. It says he shall pay not less than the prevailing wage. In some sections it is entirely possible that more than the prevailing wage per hour is paid; whereas in others, below the prevailing wage can be paid. There is nothing that is sacrosanct and sacred about the rates as fixed in a given community. The prevailing wage is fixed, as disclosed by the hearings, by the local administrators. I for one do not believe there should be any such great variation in the prevailing wages paid per hour between the various sections of the country and sections within the same State, as is reflected by the differences to be found in the State of Illinois.

Mr. President, I am as much concerned about the man who is actually working with his hands as is the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I know that that is true. I sat beside the Senator from Georgia in the Appropriations Committee and I know that he is actuated by the highest motives.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. A moment ago the Senator was kind enough to provide me with information to the effect that in my State of North Carolina those who are on W. P. A. get about 18 or 20 cents per hour, and in the State of New York they receive about $1.29 an hour. I wish the Senator would explain to me why there is such discrepancy. I want the Senator to tell me why the people of North Carolina are not entitled to the same consideration from the standpoint of receiving substantial remuneration as are those who reside in the State of New York. Can it be, I ask the Senator from Georgia, that the people of North Carolina do not contribute their just share to the necessary expenditures on the part of the Government? Can it be that the people of North Carolina are not just as patriotic as are the people of New York? What can it be, I should like to be advised, what causes this situation, in order that I may tell the people of North Carolina why we are getting only 20 cents an hour and in New York workers are receiving $1.29? Will the Senator be good enough to enlighten me on that point?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has all the data and information which is at my disposal in this connection. I do not know why the difference is so great. It is not quite as great as the Senator has suggested. The high in New York is 93 cents for unskilled labor, whereas the hourly rate of pay goes to as low as 20 cents in North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The highest rate of pay in New York for unskilled labor is 93 cents an hour?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In New York they get as high as 93 cents an hour? Is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. From 93 cents to 461/2 cents an hour.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The high in New York is 93 cents, whereas in North Carolina workers get 20 cents an hour. Is that correct, I ask the Senator?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the minimum. The rate is from 30 cents to 20 cents.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Is it the fact that they consider ordinary labor in New York better than ordinary labor in North Carolina?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina must draw his own conclusions from the difference in the wage scales. If the Senator from North Carolina will support the provision which I am defending, the House provision, the measure will provide that there cannot be a greater differential than 25 percent with respect to persons doing the same type of work in the several States.

I wish to be candid with the Senator from North Carolina. That will not bring all of his people who are working as unskilled laborers to within 25 percent of all those who are employed as unskilled laborers in New York.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Why not?

Mr. RUSSELL. Because the provision would break the work down by types. It is impossible to provide, with respect to all of the different scales, that there shall not be a difference of more than 25 percent. This provision does not undertake to say that you must pay a plumber or a skilled laborer within 25 percent of as much as you would pay a title setter in New York. It does say that you must pay a plumber in Illinois within 25 percent of what you pay a plumber in New York, and that you must pay a tile setter in California within 25 percent of what you pay a tile setter in the State of New York or any other State. It is merely an effort to bring within a differential of 25 percent those who are doing work of the same type.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In other words, it provides that there cannot be a difference in excess of 25 percent. May I ask the Senator another question? What was the pro rata expenditure of funds to persons in North Carolina?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am prepared to launch into a discussion of that subject, and I should prefer to take it up in its proper sequence.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Very well. I shall be glad to receive that information.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad to yield to the Senator from

Mr. MILLER. Assuming that there would be no reduction in the rate of pay in those States that are now enjoying a higher rate of pay, there would necessarily, of course, have to be a raise in the rate of pay of those engaged in similar classes of work in other States in the Union?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.
Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am always interested in what the able Senator from Arkansas has to say. Will he speak louder, please?

Mr. MILLER. I shall be delighted to. The question was this: Assuming that there shall be no reduction in the rate of pay in the more-favored States, there would necessarily be a raise then in the rate of pay in certain other States. Among them are the State which I have the honor in part to represent. Does the Senator know what additional expense would entail to the W. P. A., or what increase would there be in the expense of carrying on work relief? Is there any way of determining that?

Mr. RUSSELL. I know of no method of determining any such facts. Mr. President.

Mr. MILLER. In other words, the W. P. A. has not gone into the question of determining the number of employees in, we will say, the Southern States or other States, who are receiving lower pay, compared with the number of employees in other States like New York and Pennsylvania, who are receiving higher rates of pay?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Administrator did say that within the classification of those who are receiving $2.50 an hour, the majority of them were in the larger cities of the country.

Mr. MILLER. The reason I am submitting the question is that frankly I see no reason why a man working on a road in Arkansas or Georgia should not receive the same amount of pay that the man working on a road in the State of New York or elsewhere receives from Federal funds, especially in view of the legislation which has been enacted by the Congress-for example, the wage and hour law, and other laws of that nature. We are making fish of one and fowl of the other. If the policy of the Congress is to be that we are to have a uniform rate of pay in industry, it appears to me, unless there is some good reason to the contrary unknown to me, that the Government ought to meet the situation.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thoroughly agree with the Senator from Arkansas. The Senator from Arkansas, of course, will recall that when the labor-standards bill was pending in the Senate and in the House any suggestion of a differential based on freight rates or any other consideration was attacked as an effort to beat down wages. The American Federation of Labor, through its president, Mr. William Green, wrote a letter to a Member of the House of Representatives, which appears in the Congressional Record for the third session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, in which he stated that it was the position of the American Federation of Labor that on W. P. A. projects, and in every other kind of employment, every man should be paid identically the same wage scale for the same type of work throughout the United States of America.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma. Mr. LEE. Does the Senator believe that the effect of this provision would be to lower the wages of the workers in the Eastern States?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there would be at least three ways of applying the provision. One would be to reduce the wage scale of those who are now enjoying the highest compensation per hour. Another way would be to increase the wage scale of those who are now being paid the lowest compensation per hour. A third way would be to start at the bottom and at the top, increasing the bottom and decreasing the top, in an effort to bring them closer together.

Mr. LEE. If the effect is not to reduce the highest wages paid, then it obviously must increase the lowest wages paid: and if that is done with the same amount of money, would not the effect be to employ fewer people, and therefore turn off some?

Mr. RUSSELL. Not at all, Mr. President, because the hourly rate of pay has nothing whatever to do with the total amount that can be paid within a State. In Pennsylvania, the man who is paid $3.03 an hour is allowed a maximum of $94 a month. He is permitted to work only 31 hours to earn the compensation of $94. In the State of Tennessee the man who is working with a pick and shovel at 18 cents an hour is limited to $26 a month, and he must work 144 hours to earn $26, whereas the man who is working in Pennsylvania has to work only 30 hours to earn $94, out of funds which are being paid out of the common Treasury of the United States.

While I am on that subject, we have heard much said about the 750,000 people who have been certified for the W. P. A. rolls, and who cannot find employment. I think it would be the fairer way, the American way, to say that we are going to divide the work and let each worker work a certain number of hours, and let all of them receive some benefit out of the funds which are raised either through taxation or the use of the national credit.

Mr. LEE. Let me say to the Senator that I am very much in sympathy with the fair distribution of wages, and giving the people in our section of the country the same relative income as those in other sections. I do not want to be a party to any provision the effect of which would be to turn some off, and I appreciate the explanation given by the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. The amendment can be used on a sharethe-work basis by the Works Progress Administration, giving some employment to all the 750,000 of whom we have heard so much in the discussion preceding the vote on the Mc-Kellar amendment.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just a moment for an observation?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from North

Mr. REYNOLDS. In speaking of taxation, I wish to remind the Senator that North Carolina contributes more to the Federal Treasury than any State in the Union with the exception of New York and Pennsylvania. Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I must confess that I have never been impressed by figures which show the exact amount a State contributes to the National Treasury.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The reason I mentioned it is that we down in North Carolina are receiving so little of it back.

Mr. RUSSELL. I consider that the constituents of the Senator from North Carolina have been greatly discriminated against, not only in the hourly rate of pay, but in the total amount per capita expended in the State of North Carolina, using any conceivable standard that fair men might seek to apply. However, I do say that the question of how much a State pays into the National Treasury is often-times inisleading and deceiving. Take the amount which is paid by the State of North Carolina. I use cigarettes, and every time I buy a package of cigarettes I contribute to the internal-revenue collections of the State of North Carolina, because the great cigarette manufacturing plants are located there. We talk about the amount contributed to the National Treasury by the State of New York. Almost every dollar which finds its way into the channels of trade and commerce in the entire United States must at one time or another pass through the city of New York and New York State; and necessarily some little residue is left there which will go into the National Treasury.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCARRAN. Apropos of the Senator's responses to the Senator from Oklahoma in answer to his inquiry, is it not true that the effect of the Senator's suggestion will be to tear down the wage structure of this country by attacking the top wages in the skilled crafts?

Mr. RUSSELL. Not necessarily.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not mean necessarily; but is it not a fact that that would be the effect?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think it should. If such a thing is done, it will be done in violation of the law, which says that not less than the prevailing wage shall be paid. This provision does not repeal the prevailing-wage requirement. If wages are torn down, the Administrator will not be following the existing law, which was passed to guide him in his administration of these funds. The effect will be to wipe out a discrepancy which no one can possibly justify by any known facts, a discrepancy which results in a man in one section being paid 10 times as much per hour for doing exactly the same tasks that another man does in another State in another section.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is it not true that, in wiping out the discrepancy upon which the Senator dwells, there will be a tearing down from the top as well as a raising from the bottom?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Nevada was probably not in the Chamber when I answered a question of similar import, if not in the same terms, asked by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Lee]. The provision could be applied in one of three ways. One would be to tear down the high wage scale, as the Senator from Nevada apprehends. A second way would be to increase the wage scale of those who are now receiving the lowest compensation of any persons on the Works Progress Administration rolls. A third way would be to take some from the top and add it to the bottom, and thereby bring the two extremes closer together. I think the Administrator would have any one of those three options, were it not for the prevailing-wage provision in the act of 1938.

Mr. McCARRAN. I notice that the Senator's analysis carries throughout the thought of taking from the top in order to augment the bottom.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the statement of the Senator from Nevada cannot possibly be justified by any statement which I have made. I will say now, however, for his benefit, that in my opinion it would be nearer the American way to handle this situation, if it had to be done, to take some off the top, than to say we are going to pay one man 10 times as much per hour as we are going to pay another for doing a given job. Of course, the whole question of the Senator from Nevada is predicated upon the idea that wages which are now being paid on all these projects are the prevailing wages. I say that theory cannot be sustained, because these wages were fixed in each county by the county administrator of that county. There are just as many viewpoints as to what the prevailing wage is as there are differences in temperament and manner of thinking among 3,000 county administrators. Perhaps an administrator in one county, when he came to fix the prevailing wage, did not make an exhaustive investigation, and asked only two or three people, whose viewpoint on the wage question was inclined toward lower wages. That county would have a lower wage, whereas in the adjoining county the administrator might march right down to the offices of the labor organizations of that county and take the prevailing wage as given him by the labor organizations, and add 10 percent to it. The law does not provide that the prevailing wage must be paid. The language of the law is that not less than the prevailing wage must be paid.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As I indicated a moment ago, I know from my own association with the Senator that his objective is to do away with discrimination.

Mr. RUSSELL. Exactly, and that shall be my theme as I go into the manner in which these funds have been distributed throughout the country.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I appreciate that, and I am very much impressed by everything the Senator says and by what he said in the committee. But we are confronted with the fact that the gentleman upon whom the responsibility of administering this provision will be placed has already told us what his interpretation is. The Senator will recall that when Colonel Harrington appeared before the subcommittee on this very subject he declared—and his declaration is to be found on page 258 of the Senate hearings—in response to an inquiry by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar]:

To summarize that, to some extent, that amendment as written, in my judgment, repeals the prevailing-wage scale, and also imposes on me an administrative decision as to how I will apply it.

Confronted with that specific statement on the part of Colonel Harrington that he regards this language as a repeal of the prevailing-wage scale, the Senator will realize how difficult it is for those of us who sympathize with his point of view, and who cooperated with him in writing into the basic act the provision that not less than the prevailing wage shall be paid, now to follow him.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming is correct in his statement of Colonel Harrington's position before the committee. Colonel Harrington appeared before the committee in opposition to the amendment, and naturally Colonel Harrington's testimony was framed to place the provision which he was opposing in the most unfavorable light. But Colonel Harrington has no judicial power. Colonel Harrington cannot decide finally as to whether or not a certain section in an act passed by the Congress is repealed. If his construction is in error, the court can set him right.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But the Senator well knows that the relief clients will not be able to go to court to determine the question. We cannot say to the relief clients who are drawing the miserable security wage, "Your remedy against the activity of an administrator is to take your case to court for an interpretation of the language."

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, the Senator from Wyoming knows that the sponsors of projects would be interested in this matter; that there would be large organizations of great financial responsibility and means that would have a very great interest in it and who would make a test case of it. Not only that, but, as I understand, these payments all must be cleared through the Comptroller General's office, and the construction the Comptroller General might put on it might really have more influence than the construction of the Administrator.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would it be proper for me now to address to the Senator an inquiry as to the amendment which I have presented? I do not desire to interrupt his discourse. Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no planned discourse,

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no planned discourse, and I will be very happy to yield to the Senator from Wyoming at this time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to address an inquiry to the Senator. Inasmuch as the provision which he is now defending is in the joint resolution, though it was rejected by the Appropriations Committee, and the Appropriations Committee now recommend that the Senate approve its action and strike out the House provision, would it not be a desirable and an effective procedure for the Senate now to adopt the amendment which I proposed in the committee and which is here pending, so that my amendment, together with the amendment which the Senator is defending would go to the conference committee and there be worked out by the conferees upon the basis of doing away with the differential. The desire of the House was to decrease the amount of the differential. We all sympathize with that. But some of us insist—and I think that is the sentiment of the Senate and also the sentiment of the other House—that the prevailing rate of wages should not be threatened. The amendment which I offer will not affect the hourly rate of pay, but it will equalize the monthly security wage.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Wyoming, of course, knows that we are proceeding in order in the consideration of this amendment as the question has arisen. In the event that the Senate shall sustain the committee, and strike this provision from the House joint resolution, I shall support the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming. I shall support the amendment offered by him in any event, because, while I do not think it will be very effective in assisting those who are now receiving the lowest hourly rate and the lowest monthly rate, it is, at least, a step toward equalization. So I intend to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming. I hope, however, that, merely because the Senator from Wyoming has an amendment that bears upon the question, the Senate will not reject the House provision because the two relate to different subjects.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am just thinking of the parliamentary status. If I should now move my amendment as a substitute for the language eliminated by the committee, the parliamentary status would be such that if the Senate should adopt my amendment as a substitute, the conferees would have both amendments before them.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall have to give some consideration to that question as I proceed with my remarks. I am not entirely clear about it. In that event, the Senate, of course, would have no opportunity whatever to pass upon the language of the House provision.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct; and if the Senator desires to have a direct division of the Senate upon the House provision, of course, that would not be the proper way to proceed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will consider the proposal made by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. God knows, I have no objection, and I am sure the Senator has not, to any adequate wage-hour scale the laborers of this country should receive, but I am sure the Senator agrees that something should be done in an effective way to raise the wage scale of the common laborer in the different sections of the country. There is a discrimination that should not be tolerated by the Congress. It seems to me that the only objection to the amendment the Senator from Georgia is urging, which is the House provision, is the possible effect it might have on the prevailing wage scale throughout the country.

I desire to submit to the Senator from Georgia a suggested amendment to the House provision which might be agreeable to the Senators who are fighting against the Senator's contention. At the end of the provision I propose to insert the following words:

And provided further, That any order issued to eliminate the differentials herein set out shall not have the effect of reducing any hourly wage now prevailing under the W. P. A.

With that suggested amendment the provision could not affect the higher wage paid in other States, and the only thing the Administration could do to bring about the 25-percent differential would be to boost the lower wage paid in the States that are now discriminated against. I ask the Senator what he thinks about such a provision?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the provision suggested by the Senator from Mississippi would be helpful. I think, however, that it should not freeze the rate of the present wages, because there may be cases where the present hourly wage that is paid is above the prevailing rate, and particularly in some instances, such as that of the man who receives $3.03 an hour in the State of Pennsylvania. I do not think that there is such a thing as the prevailing wage for professional and technical workers. However, I should be willing to consider the proposal. I think the Senator, however, would improve his amendment if he should say that the rate of wage should not be reduced below the prevailing wage—not the present wage but the prevailing wage.

Mr. BILBO. That suggestion appeals to me, because the only purpose I have in offering the amendment is to remove any objections some of our friends seem to have that it would interfere with the prevailing wage scale in different sections of the country. But if in some sections the W. P. A. rate is above the prevailing wage rate, then certainly our friends should not object if there was a reduction in the wages being paid by the W. P. A.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if the Senate rejects the committee amendment, of course, the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi will be in order.

Mr. BILBO. I will offer this amendment to the House provision before the Senate votes on that provision, in the hope that it will be adopted and may go to conference, so the matter may be worked out to the satisfaction of everyone.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no authority to accept any such suggestion, because the language which the Senator from Mississippi seeks to amend has been stricken from the joint resolution by the Senate committee, and the first question will have to be on the House provision. If the committee's action shall be rejected, I shall be happy to accept the amendment suggested by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. PEPPER and Mr. CONNALLY addressed the Chair. Mr. RUSSELL. I first yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia knows I am vitally interested in the same objective he is trying to reach. Now I desire to lay before him for consideration in the course of his discussion the amendment that I am going to offer at the appropriate time, as follows:

Provided further, That it being the sense of the Congress that minimum wages paid by the Works Progress Administration should not be less than the minimum wages required to be paid under the Labor Standards Act of 1938, it is hereby provided that the minimum wages to be paid under this appropriation or the emergency relief appropriation of 1938 shall not be less than the minimum wages fixed by the Labor Standards Act of 1938, and no security wage, provision, or limitation on the hours of work shall defeat the purpose of this provision.

I ask the Senator whether that would not have the effect of bringing the prevailing wage in any territory in America up to the same minimum fixed by the National Congress and the National Government in the Labor Standards Act of 1938, and if that would not eliminate the question of reducing from the top, and simply say that the Government is not going to make a man work at a figure less than it requires private industry to pay.

Mr. RUSSELL. If I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, the effect of it would be to increase the wage scales which are now less than 25 cents per hour—there being many of 18, 19, and 20 cents per hour—to a minimum of 25 cents per hour for the year 1939, 30 cents per hour for the year 1940, and 40 cents per hour for the year 1941.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be very happy to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] last year offered an amendment to the relief bill similar to one which I had offered, which attempted to fix the wage scale of the Works Progress Administration projects at at least the minimum wage, the lowest wage under the Wage-Hour or Labor Standards Act. However, the Administrator has found that that amendment did not apply.

Mr. PEPPER. I was going to say that it was the Senator from Georgia who, on page 78 of the hearings before the subcommittee, brought out the very fact that the amendment originally sponsored by the Senator from Georgia, and later by the Senator from South Carolina, was never effectuated.

Mr. RUSSELL. It has never been applied, though it is in the act.

Mr. CONNALLY and Mr. TYDINGS addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Brown in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield first to the Senator from Texas. Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia was discussing a minute ago certain amendments to this section. Since the motion to strike out is the pending question, the text of the House bill would have to be amended before that motion is voted upon, because an amendment to the House text would be a perfecting amendment. I am not interested in the matter, but I thought I would suggest to the Senator that anyone who wants to amend the House text must offer his amendment before the motion to strike out is voted upon. Otherwise, if the motion to strike out should prevail, that would be the end of the matter. I say that for the benefit of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Bilbo] and other Senators.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President-

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Georgia that if the provision which he is seeking to have restored should be restored, I believe it would be advisable to strike out the word "citizen" and insert the word "national," so that no money could be paid to anyone except a national of the United States of America.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland evidently has just entered the Chamber. We are not now discussing the question of aliens. We are discussing the rates of hourly pay.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know; but that is a part of the differential amendment to which the Senator is addressing himself, at the top of page 4. The last three lines provide that none of this money shall be paid except to citizens, and I am not taking issue with the principle involved in that. What I wanted to point out to the Senator was-

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to point out to the Senator from Maryland that the latter part of the committee amendment, commencing with the word "That" on line 8, has already been agreed to, and that language has been stricken from the joint resolution by the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, the existing law prevails? Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. In order to make the record clear, I will state that my only purpose in pointing out this matter was that we have in the United States persons who are not citizens but who are nationals, like the Filipinos in California, Nevada, and through there, and many other places scattered around, who are eligible to receive these funds, but who would not be eligible if we should use the word "citizen"; and with that word stricken out, the old law stands.

Mr. RUSSELL. That entire provision has been stricken from the joint resolution.

Mr. President, the newspapers have carried articles stating that the fight which has been made in the Senate committee and which is being made on the floor of the Senate, to retain the House language, was a fight which had been waged in behalf of the South and those who might be employed upon Works Progress rolls in the South. I never like to make an argument that is based upon local or sectional considerations. I have, however, made a study of the administration of the various relief and recovery agencies which has led me to the conclusion that I could no longer justify the confidence which the people of my State have shown in me by sending me to this body did I not protest against the many very evident discriminations against the South in the administration of these various funds.

I have always considered myself a liberal and progressive Democrat. In times past in my own State I have been charged with being a radical because I have never hesitated to espouse principles and legislation to change the existing order when the general welfare demands it.

During my service here I have fought shoulder to shoulder with the liberal thinkers in the effort to bring about an increase in the income and purchasing power of the underprivileged people of the Nation. I have tried earnestly to bring about the adoption of any plan which would provide a wider distribution of our national income. It should be manifest to all that we cannot cure our economic ills and relieve distress and suffering without a more equitable distribution of the national income. The vast concentration of power and wealth in the hands of a few, permitting them to bear down and oppress the helpless and underprivileged many, is the cause of our difficulties and is the greatest threat to our form of government.

I believe in employing the power of our Government to bring about a fairer distribution of the good things of our modernday civilization by breaking down the enormous concentration of wealth in this country which enables 1 percent of the people of the United States to control 66 percent of all of the wealth of the United States.

This does not mean that I have any faith in some of the plans which have been suggested and the schemes which have been devised to share the wealth of the United States. We will not remedy our economic ills by any such terrific dislocation as would be involved in seeking to apportion at one time all of the wealth of the United States equally among all of the people of the United States. But the power of a democratic government can be properly employed to force the few who have much to share a reasonable part of that much to prevent deprivation and suffering among the many who have nothing.

This position merely involves an acceptance of the timehonored democratic doctrine of taxation in accordance with ability to pay, and recognition of the fact that a democracy cannot let its people starve in the midst of plenty, but has a duty to strive constantly for equal rights to earn a livelihood and equality of opportunity for its citizens.

I have supported every bill which has been brought forward making appropriations for relief in this country. I conceive that at least one purpose of those bills was to employ the power of the National Government in bringing together in the National Treasury funds from those most able to contribute them, and then redistributing them throughout the United States in such a manner as to decrease the disproportion of the income of those who are at the bottom of our economic structure, and also to increase the buying power of those in the United States who have the least buying power. My study of this question has convinced me, if charts and tables prepared by the Works Progress Administration are to be believed, that instead of equalizing the income of the people of the United States, instead of equalizing the purchasing power of the people of the United States, the manner in which these funds have been distributed to date has a tendency to make the rich States richer, and to make the poor States and the poor people of those States poorer.

SOUTHERN WORKER GETS LOWEST PAY

The table to which I have already referred shows that the lowest hourly wage in all of the various classifications of employment on Works Progress projects is paid in the Southern States. In many instances, the hourly pay to a W. P. A. worker in a rich State like New York or Illinois is as much as five times more for pushing a wheelbarrow or swinging a pick than a worker on a project in a Southern State receives for an hour's identical work. Both are paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and both must contribute equally in taxes to replenish the Treasury and repay the national debt.

Almost as great a discrimination or difference is maintained through all of the skilled occupations. In the professional and technical classes, where the hourly rate is often $2.50 to $3.03 per hour in the richer States, the citizen of one of those States receives as much as 8 or 10 times more compensation for an hour's work as his unfortunate fellow American in one of the Southern States.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the table supplied by the Works Progress Administration showing the maximum and minimum hourly wage rates paid in the several States to workers on W. P. A. projects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No objection being heard, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

Exclusive of New York City.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, not only is this rank discrimination against the South practiced in the matter of hourly wages, but a difference almost as great is observed in the monthly earnings of workers employed on projects in the more favored States and workers in the South. The 11 Southern States have been set apart in region No. 3, and in every classification of work the monthly wage in the southern region is far below that which is paid in any other part of the

In addition to the figures shown by the table, it was testified before the committee that an even higher wage scale than the highest figure shown in region 1 was paid to workers on projects in New York City and perhaps other large cities outside of the South. Unskilled or common labor in New York City receives $60.50 per month from W. P. A. funds, and from the same funds workers in many areas in the Southern States are paid $26 per month for doing identically the same work, and are required to work more hours per month to earn the smaller amount.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the schedule of monthly earnings on Works Progress Administration projects as furnished the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the South and the W. P. A. workers in the Southern States have the lowest hourly compensation and the lowest monthly compensation. I believe that a break-down of the relief rolls will show that the Southern States also have the smallest proportion of their population on the rolls of the W. P. A. and receiving their support from the National Treasury.

UNEQUAL DIVISION UNFAIR TO SOUTH

Not only do these tables show an indefensible discrimination against workers employed upon projects, but it operates to the injury of every line of business in the less favored States, and penalizes every class of people of those States. It is discrimination against the merchant in the Southern States, because he cannot sell as much of his products as the merchants in the States where these funds have been poured out with such a lavish hand. It is discrimination against the farmer, who is penalized by discriminatory freight rates when he has to ship his product to the more favored sections, on account of the lower buying power of his neighbor. It is a discrimination against every line of business and against every individual citizen of the States that are thus penalized and imposed upon, because every line of business and every individual citizen of these States has been compelled to pay his fair share of the taxes collected, and assume his equal proportion of the debt incurred to raise these enormous relief funds.

I have here a table which shows the expenditures made by all the relief agencies in the United States since 1933. I should like to invite the attention of the Senate to a comparison of that chart with a chart giving the per capita national income of the people of the United States by States. A study of those tables will reveal that the per capita proportion of the expenditures from these funds in the States having the highest income has been almost in direct proportion to the income of the States having the lowest income. In other words, in a State that has about the average national income-about $432 per year in 1935, the last year for which I have been able to gather statistics—there has been approximately an expenditure of $72.80 per capita from emergency funds, which is the per capita national expenditure out of the almost $10,000,000,000 that have been handled by these emergency agencies.

Mr. President, I am not as much an evangel of this philosophy of government which is in the ascendency at present, which holds that we can spend our way out of a depression, as some of my colleagues appear to be. I do not pose as an economist. I have had no palliative or remedy which I thought would cure some of the economic ills from which we have been suffering, and inasmuch as I have been unable to suggest a better plan, I have been willing to go along and support a spending program, if the funds were to be expended equally and fairly among all the people of the United States. I do not know of any case in point in history where any nation has embarked on a spending program with the idea that through increasing government expenditures it could so increase the national income that the debt incurred would be self-liquidating. But we are today confronted with a condition the like of which has never before made such a program necessary on the part of any people. As a result of the increasing use of machinery in industry, and improved methods of production on the farms, we have an unemployment problem today, a problem of underprivileged people unable to help themselves, with the like of which no other country has been compelled to deal. For that reason I have been willing to support a program which sought a nice balance between national income that was subject to taxation, and the use of the public credit in borrowing funds for expenditures to build up that income and by spending money to increase income to the extent existing tax laws would enable us to liquidate the debt.

Mr. President, there are some facts which must be clear to everyone in relation to such a program. If such a program be tried and all of the financial resources of the Nation are brought together through the use of the taxing power or the borrowing power of the National Government, and if those funds be expended fairly throughout the entire United States to purchase recovery, and then recovery comes, it will be shared equally by all the people of the United States.

My second proposition is that if we pursue such a policy of public expenditure to bring about recovery and our calculations do not come out right and the public credit of the Nation is exhausted and we are plunged into confusion, and have a great catastrophe because of the fact that our plans have gone awry; in that case, if the funds have been equitably expended, every section of the country and every part of the people will pay exactly the same price for the failure or the miscarriage of our plans.

If, however, we follow a spending program to purchase prosperity and distribute the funds unfairly, in the event the plan succeeds, we will have increased the advantage of the section which receives its unfair part of the funds at the expense of the poorer sections of the Nation. If we follow a spending program such as we are now embarked upon, and funds are distributed unfairly, and we fail, then the favored sections of the country will have the benefit of the expenditures in the way of permanent improvements and will pay no larger part of the cost than the unfavored sections which did not receive their just share.

It is therefore important that these funds be expended upon an equal basis. I hear Senators refer to the need of various people for work upon the rolls of the Works Progress Administration as if there were a standard that was applied equally in every section of the United States. As a matter of fact, there are 48 different standards of need, one in every State of the Union. In some States a person who owns any realty whatever is, by virtue of that fact, ineligible for employment on W. P. A. In others the deciding factor is the matter of income. But at least one objective of this program should have been to equalize the opportunities of the people of the United States. It should have been to increase the purchasing power of those who had the lowest purchasing power today and to seek to narrow the margin between those having the highest annual incomes and those who have the lowest annual incomes.

TO HIM WHO HATH IS GIVEN

Mr. President, the chart I hold in my hand, showing the expenditures of the Works Progress Administration in the several States, discloses that in the State of North Carolina, the State with the lowest per capita figure, the Works Progress Administration has expended the sum of $13.60 per capita. The average per capita income in the State of North Carolina for the year 1935, the last year for which figures are available, was $252. In the State of New York the average annual income was $700 per capita, but in the expenditures of the Works Progress Administration $69.40 per capita has been paid out for every person in New York State.

These charts may be studied State by State, and it will be found that it almost always follows that the State having the lowest income has received the lowest per capita expenditure of these funds through which we seek to help the underprivileged, and to equalize buying power, whereas in the States where there is the highest average annual income, and therefore the largest purchasing power, a larger amount per capita has been expended.

In looking over the expenditures of the Works Progress Administration I happened to notice that the State of Vermont had received a much lower per capita expenditure of the funds than had the States around it, and I thought that there must be something wrong, that the rule which I regarded as so true would not work out in the case of Vermont, where the Works Progress Administration has spent $23.50 per capita. But when I turned to the chart which showed the average annual incomes by States, it disclosed that the per capita income in Vermont was $365, as compared with an average of $528 for the New England States, and even in that instance it has followed that the per capita expenditure has been lowest in the State in which the people had the lowest annual incomes.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the Record the two tables which show the total and per capita emergency relief expenditures as of November 30, 1938, broken down to show the amount spent by the Works Progress Administration, the Civil Works Administration, the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, and also the total expenditure of $9,419,000,000 by all of these emergency agencies. I also ask to have printed in the Record the table which shows the per capita income of the people of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?
There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, not only has the per capita expenditure been lowest in the States where the people have the lowest average incomes, but the average earnings per worker per month have been much lower in the States where they have had the lowest average incomes than in the States where the average incomes were higher. I have a table, prepared by the Works Progress Administration, showing that for the months of September, October, and November 1938, the average monthly income of people employed on projects throughout the entire United States was $52.74. When we come to find the lowest rate of pay per month in the entire United States we discover that it was in the State of North Carolina, where it is $32 a month, where the average income is $252, whereas in New York City there is the highest pay, $73.16 per month, where the average income is the highest, or $700 per year. So, Mr. President, the result of the policies which we have been pursuing up till now in the distribution of these funds has been to widen the difference between the poor people in the poorer sections of this country and those in other sections, instead of bringing the underprivileged up nearer to the American standard of living.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Record a table showing the average earnings per worker per month in the several States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

hurricane and flood damage.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, a few months ago, last summer, in fact, the National Economic Council, at the request of the President of the United States, conducted an economic survey of the Southern States. A report was made based upon that survey, and was widely publicized throughout the entire length and breadth of the country. When that survey was issued and publicity was given to it the President of the United States stated that the South was the Nation's No. 1 economic problem. I have read the findings of the National Economic Council and its committees on that survey. At the time it was given publicity it provoked a great deal of discussion. A great many people in the South, and some of my colleagues in this body, took offense at some of the statements which were made

I was not offended by that report. The truth is oftentimes unpleasant, but the truth should never offend. I think some portions of that report were exaggerated, but I know that the Southern States have the lowest per capita income of any section of the country. Where a low-income section of the country is found there will nearly always be found unfavorable conditions as to education, as to health, and as to housing as compared with sections where the general wealth is greater.

SOUTHERN PROGRESS A MIRACLE

Mr. President, the South has nothing to be ashamed of by reason of the things which were stated in that report. The people of the South were compelled to start at the ground and rebuild their economy upon the ruins of an old economy within the lifetime of people who are living today. They have had to do that under a great handicap. The southern people have struggled under a great handicap, borne down by unfair tariff discrimination, confronted with an internal tariff in the form of a freight differential amounting to 39 percent in the case of first-class freight when compared with the more favored sections of the country. When all that is considered it must be admitted that the recovery of the South has been a marvelous one.

We have in some respects accomplished the impossible. We have pulled ourselves up by our boot straps. With these handicaps of freight rates and tariffs and other discriminatory legislation, and action on the part of those in whose hands were concentrated the greater part of the wealth of this Nation, we have made a start at least toward the national average in living standards and in income.

CANNOT STAND ADDITIONAL HANDICAPS

Mr. President, we cannot pull ourselves up, however, if in addition to the handicap of tariffs and freight rates and other discriminatory legislation we are to be further burdened by this unfair discrimination in respect to the expenditure of public funds. The average per capita expenditure by the Works Progress Administration is $43.60. The average for the 11 Southern States is $22.40 per capita. We have not been permitted to share equally in the distribution of these funds. We have an equal share only in the national debt which has been created.

This policy will have the inevitable result of freezing the poor and underprivileged workers of the South at a lower standard of living than American citizens have a right to expect, and than those of other sections enjoy. In all fairness, it is evident that some sections of the country have profited more than others, and these profits accrue at the expense of less favored sections.

If we are to pursue a spending program on any such basis of unfair distribution of funds, it matters not whether we arrive at national bankruptcy or succeed in increasing the national income, the South stands to lose in either event. If national bankruptcy, the South will be compelled to pay its proportionate part, without having an opportunity to enjoy the good effects of the spending. If the national income be increased to 85 billions, it will still be centralized in the wealthier States, and the South's position in our national economy will still be at the bottom of the heap.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] made some reference to the amount of internal revenue that was collected in his State, the inference being that if a certain State collected a greater amount of taxes than another State. the State collecting the greater amount should receive special favors at the hands of the Congress or the National Government.

If the amount of internal revenue collected within a State was an indication of the wealth or per capita income of the people of that State, then to the contrary that would be a reason why that State should not receive special favors from the National Treasury, if our purpose be to aid in the equalization of social standards. But, as I have stated, the fact that a State collects a large amount of taxes through its internal revenue office does not mean that they are paid only by the people of that State. Only about 35 percent to 40 percent of our total national income is derived from income taxes. Income taxes are passed on, and are paid by people who purchase all over the United States, and who do business with those paying the taxes.

Many of our other sources of income are not levied with any regard to ability to pay, and fall directly and in the first instance as heavily on the poor as on the rich.

POOR ARE ALSO TAXED

Let us consider the special taxes which bear equally on all of the people, such as, for example, the 1 cent additional tax provided by increased cost of postage. When some poor devil of a sharecropper or tenant farmer in Texas, with a cash income perhaps of $200 per year, steps up to the postoffice window to buy a postage stamp, they do not tell him, "You can get your postage stamp for 2 cents, because your State's per capita W. P. A. expenditures are only $15.40, a low average when compared to the higher national average." The same man would receive no special consideration in the payment of all the other special taxes—taxes on gasoline, on automobiles, and all of the other special taxes from which the major portion of our revenue is derived.

Mr. President, it could have been fairly thought that when the Works Progress Administration came to make allocation of these funds between the several States that they should have taken into consideration the ability of the people of a State to contribute to the specific projects which were inaugurated in the States. The chart before me discloses that the poorer States—discriminated against as they are in the matter of per capita expenditure, in monthly wage and in hourly wage—are, in addition, required to contribute more from their poverty toward sponsored projects than the wealthier States are. Not only is the per capita expenditure shown to be high where the per capita income is high, but the requirements of sponsors for contributions to projects is lower in the rich States and is higher in the poor States, and has been throughout the administration of this program.

We discussed this question on the floor of the Senate at a time when the national average of sponsors' contributions was about 24 percent. As I recall, the sponsors' contribution in New York City at that time was about 7 percent.

Some of us endeavored to equalize it at 25 percent all over the United States, fixing the same scale for rich States and poor States alike. The Congress saw fit to reject that proposal, as it has heretofore always rejected amendments seeking to equalize these injustices. As a substitute a provision was written in the measure which provided that the Works Progress Administration's expenditures for other than labor costs should not exceed $7 per month per employee. The result of that, Mr. President, has been to bring down somewhat the sponsors' contributions in the poorer States. But it is noteworthy that as of November 30, 1938, New York and Pennsylvania still were making the lowest contributions of sponsors of projects in the entire United States.

For the benefit of those who do not understand the term, sponsors' contributions means the amount of money or material which is required of a city, county, or State before its application for a W. P. A. project will be approved.

REQUIREMENTS OF SPONSORS DOUBLY UNJUST

The policy of requiring a higher percentage of contributions toward these projects from the poorer communities has been doubly unjust. It is not only a discrimination in favor of the wealthier communities, but it has taken funds from the poorer communities that were sadly needed to provide direct relief for unemployables, and which were needed to match Federal contributions for old-age assistance, for health purposes, and for crippled and dependent children.

Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the Record a table showing the total amount of Federal funds and sponsors' funds, and the percentage of funds contributed by the sponsors of projects in the several States, cumulative through the 30th of November, 1938.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. I invite the attention of the Senate to a study of that chart in connection with the other charts, showing that in every administrative policy which has been adopted by the Works Progress Administration favoritism has been shown to States in which the per capita income was the highest, to the detriment of the States in which the per capita income and the purchasing power were the lowest. I say, Mr. President, that if we embark on a spending program in which the funds are distributed on any such basis as that, to buy prosperity, spending $3 in the State of New York for every dollar spent in the State of North Carolina, when New York already has practically three times the average income the State of North Carolina possesses, we will eventually widen the difference to a ratio of 9 to 1 as to purchasing power and as to per capita income, thus aggravating the already appalling maldistribution of our national income and national wealth.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In connection with what the Senator is saying about the system of W. P. A. discrimination, I should like to call his attention to a circumstance which came under my observation a few months ago, in the case of a project which concerned both the State of Missouri and the State of Illinois. The project was a dam across the Mississippi River, one end of the dam being in Illinois and the other end in Missouri. The men were to be engaged in doing precisely the same work, that is, clearing timber on precisely the same project, except that part of them happened to be on the Illinois end of the dam, and the other part on the Missouri end of the dam. A discriminatory ratio was set up of 64 cents an hour on the Illinois side, as against 40 cents an hour on the Missouri side, on the same project, for doing precisely the same work. Does the Senator think there is any justification or any rhyme or reason in such discrimination as that?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, for the past 35 or 40 minutes I have been protesting with all the earnestness of my soul against just such manifest discriminations. There is no way on earth to justify such discriminations as have just been illustrated by the Senator from Missouri in the administration and expenditure of funds from the common Treasury, in which every citizen should have an equal interest. Such discrimination cannot be justified upon any difference in the cost of living.

The Senator from Missouri, who has just recited an instance, knows that there is no such difference in the cost of living that must be borne by those men who reside across the river from one another.

COST OF LIVING NO EXCUSE

The hourly rates in some instances are 10 times as great, as they were in the case of those who received $3.03 an hour in Pennsylvania, as compared to 34 cents an hour for doing the same type of work in other States. The difference in the cost of living in the several sections of the United States does not exceed 10 percent.

I was interested to read some statistics which were prepared by the Labor Bureau on the subject of the cost of living. In case anyone might think that these rank injustices in dividing the funds among the people in the several States can be justified on the basis of the cost of living, I ask unanimous consent to have these tables printed in the RECORD. They are the result of a survey of 31 American cities. They show, for example, that the difference in the cost of living for a four-person manual worker's family as between the city of Atlanta and the city of New York is only $85.94 per annum. The estimated cost of living for such a family in Atlanta is $1,300 per annum. In New York it is $1,385.94 per annum; and yet when it comes to the question of distributing funds from the Treasury for people who are in need, or supposed to be in need, three times as much per capita is paid in New York City as is paid in Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator to have the tables referred to printed in the Record? The Chair hears none, and the tables may be printed in the Record.

The tables are as follows:

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to invite the attention of the Senate to one other comparison. I do not like to make comparisons between States, but I do not know of any other way clearly to illustrate the disproportion and the injustice in the distribution of these funds than by choosing States which are comparable in population and area. For this illustration I have selected the State of Georgia and the State of Wisconsin. I have chosen Wisconsin because it has more nearly the same population and area as Georgia than any other State of the Union which is not a Southern State.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to say that I thoroughly agree with the principle which the Senator announces. The only thing that disturbs me is whether or not the provision suggested would accomplish the object sought; that is to say, whether or not it may have the effect of pulling down wages.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have been very loath to suggest any restrictions or limitations on the power of the Administrator of these funds. I realize that the Administration is dealing with a very unusual problem, one that varies from day to day. However, after seeing the results of expenditures that were made without any restrictions or limitations, I am convinced that the time has come when the Congress should take cognizance of these injustices and should seek to correct them.

LOW INCOME FARMERS DENIED

The situation was brought to my attention very forcibly last December, just before I came to Washington. From time to time I have protested to the Works Progress Administration, at that time presided over by Mr. Hopkins, against the method employed in the distribution of these funds. I have pointed out to him that people who would be considered in need in one State would be considered relatively well off if they happened to live in my State. Their neighbors would think that they had a very good standard of living. Finally, last year Mr. Hopkins announced that he was going to provide employment on Works Progress Administration rolls for tenant farmers, sharecroppers, and farmers whose annual income was less than $300. I hope Senators will bear that figure in mind. These funds have been poured out in a golden stream from the Treasury. These people, whose annual income was less than $300, had never been able to get on the rolls. Mr. Hopkins did not propose to increase their income above $300, but he did propose to put them on the rolls and keep them there until the income of these heads of families amounted to as much as $300 per annum.

Thousands and thousands of sharecroppers and tenant farmers throughout the length and breadth of the South, whose annual income was less than $300 a year-many of them as low as $100 a year in cash-were certified for the relief rolls. I have not investigated the matter, but I suspect that if the 750,000 who are said to be awaiting placement on the relief rolls were looked into, or a break-down by States were made, it would be found that thousands of them are sharecroppers and tenant farmers.

I rejoiced when I heard that Mr. Hopkins was going to help in bringing up the income of several thousand heads of families in my State to the magnificent level of $300 per annum. I was delighted to know that they would be permitted to get on the relief rolls. What happened? Only a very small proportion of them were ever actually employed. After they were actually employed and had worked 4 or 5 weeks practically all of them were laid off. I examined Colonel Harrington when he was before the subcommittee to find out why these people were not permitted to earn this great income of $300 per year, when we were spending $10,000,000,000 on people who were supposed to be in need. The colonel said they had an emergency somewhere else and they had to put these people off the rolls so that they could attend to an emergency in some other section of the country.

I submit, Mr. President, that that is but another illustration of the discrimination against the Southern States, which has appeared in almost every part of this program. A man who has a cash income of only $150 a year, or, in any event, less than $300 a year, is living in an emergency from day to day. Every day is an emergency to him, to keep body and soul together. Talk about an emergency somewhere else, and putting people who are making $150 a year off the rolls to go somewhere else to provide for an emergency! That is what happened in the expenditure of these funds by the Works Progress Administration.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I ask the able and distinguished Senator from Georgia if he has any figures to show the average monthly income over the United States as compared with the highest figures?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have already offered for the RECORD, Mr. President, a table showing the average monthly income from W. P. A., as well as a break-down showing the per capita income within the States.

Mr. CONNALLY. In other words, the figures which the Senator has put in the RECORD will show, for example, the rate of W. P. A. pay in the State of New York?

Mr. RUSSELL. I had been using the States of North Carolina and New York for an illustration, and I had already called attention to the fact that the per capita expenditure in New York was over three times as much as it was in North Carolina, and that the average wage in New York was $73.16, as compared with the average wage in North Carolina of $32.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. I am glad the Senator is putting that in. Hunger in North Carolina is not controlled by the climate or by the location. A man who is hungry in North Carolina requires just as many calories, just as many vitamins, to keep him until the next day as are required by a man in New York. Is not that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. In answer to the question, I just stated that no chart or figure or survey that I have been able to find discloses that there is more than a 10-percent difference in the cost of living between any two sections of the country, however extreme the conditions may be. We may as well be frank. The differential has not been based on any difference in the cost of living. Mr. Hopkins was frank enough before the committee when I raised this issue 2 years ago-and I have been carrying on as best I could to correct it since then-to admit that it was based on a difference in the standard of living. In other words, this money that is borrowed against the future of every person in the United States is being expended so as to maintain, if not increase, the wide discrepancy in the standard of living of people in the United States. That is exactly what the result They are not only freezing conditions at the present level but are, if anything, pulling down those who have the lowest living standard today. In the case of the farmer, the tenant, and the sharecropper, who earns less than $300 a year, they put him off the pay rolls; or they would not let him get on W. P. A. at all after they had agreed to bring him up to $300 a year, because, they said, there was an emergency somewhere else where they had to pay the higher wages. That poor fellow could not have earned over $26 a month if he had got on the rolls, and he would have felt as rich as Cræsus if they had kept him long enough to get his income up to $300 a year.

So the whole basis of my argument is that instead of contributing to the equalization of purchasing power and of living standards and the distribution of the income of all the people of the United States by the expenditure of these funds, they have been so handled that they have made the rich States richer and the poor States poorer. There is no way on earth to escape that conclusion if the facts in relation to these expenditures be examined.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield. Mr. OVERTON. In the practical application of this provision, if it is adopted, is the equalization and uniformity to be attained by raising the wages up to the maximum all over the United States, or is it to be attained by decreasing the wages down to the minimum, or is it to be reached by undertaking to strike a happy average?

Mr. RUSSELL. In all candor, the Administrator stated that he intended to follow the latter course suggested by the Senator, of striking a happy average. He will have, however, three avenues open; one to reach down from the bottom and pull the bottom up toward the top; another to take the top and pull it down toward the bottom; and the other to arrive at some form of average.

Mr. OVERTON. Assuming that there will be continued upon the pay rolls during the months of February and March the same number who are now on the rolls, with a minimum reduction of 5 percent, how much will that increase the amount of pay roll that W. P. A. will have to distribute?

Mr. RUSSELL. Not at all, because the provision relates to hourly compensation and not to monthly compensation. As it is now, the W. P. A. have a different monthly compensation for the four different classes of laborers, and then they have hundreds, literally thousands, of different hourly compensations for laborers within those classes.

Mr. OVERTON. The ordinary laborer in the South gets $26 a month and works 13 days?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is ridiculous to say that a man with a family should get the same as the man who has no such obligations. Generally those in the South have larger families than those in any other section of the United States. That is another discrimination, that the people who are getting the lowest wage scale have the largest families.

Mr. OVERTON. As I understand, in the South the ordinary laborer under W. P. A. is employed for a period of 13 days at $2 per day, thus giving him an income of $26 per month so long as he is on the W. P. A. pay roll. Am I correct in that?

Mr. RUSSELL. It depends on the section in which he

Mr. OVERTON. Suppose under this provision his hourly wage is increased to such an amount that he would get, say, $52 a month, being employed for a period of 13 days he would get $4 a day. What I should like to know of the Senator is, how much money will be required to keep the same number of W. P. A. employees on the rolls?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to explain to the Senator from Louisiana that this provision has absolutely no effect on the monthly compensation. For example, in the Senator's State of Louisiana-

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again at that point?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. OVERTON. Then, is it the Senator's thought that they will be employed fewer hours and get the same monthly

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct. In other words, I am hoping that it will contribute toward a wider distribution of work, that more people will be placed on the rolls, and that the funds will be divided more fairly. We cannot justify saying to 750,000. "You shall not work at all," and to another 3,000,000, "You will be paid anywhere from $98 a month to

Mr. OVERTON. I did not know that the provision inserted in the joint resolution by the other House would be so administered as to carry out that thought unless there was something else added to the language of the provision.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not agree with the Senator. I think that the provision will help a great deal in removing inequalities, and, if it will not, if the Senator will prepare an amendment, with that objective, I can assure him of my wholehearted support.

THE DEADLY PARALLEL

Now, Mr. President, I wish to proceed to give the illustration between the States of Georgia and Wisconsin. As I have stated, those States are very similar in area and in population. Wisconsin stands thirteenth in population, according to the last official census, and Georgia stands fourteenth. They are so nearly of the same size in area that Georgia's 12.9 acres per inhabitant compare with Wisconsin's 12 acres per inhabitant. The percentage of total population of the two States is the same; both Georgia and Wisconsin have approximately 2.4 percent of the total population of the United States. I may say further that Georgia is about on an average with the other 10 States of the South in its security wage as well as its hourly rate of pay.

A study of the income and per capita wealth of the two States would lead one to conclude that there is far greater necessity for the expenditure of Federal funds in the State of Georgia than in the State of Wisconsin. The per capita accountable income received by the people of Georgia for the year 1935, the last year for which figures are available, amounted to the sum of $253 for each person within the State. In the same year the per capita income in the State of Wisconsin was $467, which was slightly above the national average.

In the calendar year 1937 the cash farm income of Wisconsin was $332,013,000, compared to the cash farm income in Georgia for the same year of $154,127,000.

The total estimated wealth of the State of Georgia in the year 1932 was $3,247,000,000 as compared with $7,329,000,000 the total estimated wealth of the State of Wisconsin. Both as to income, estimated wealth, and assessed taxable values the State of Wisconsin has approximately twice the financial resources that the State of Georgia has to support the same number of persons.

Now, let us consider the distribution of these funds. They should be so distributed as to equalize income and purchasing power and relieve need. We find, as I have stated before. that the funds have been distributed in practically the same proportion that the per capita income and the per capita wealth of Wisconsin bear to the per capita wealth and the per capita income of the State of Georgia. That is to say, every time a dollar was spent in Georgia by the emergency agencies, $2 was expended in the State of Wisconsin, with over twice the income and over twice the resources. For every man, woman, and child living in the State of Georgia, the Works Progress Administration up to November 30, 1938, had expended the sum of $21.20 as compared with a national average of $43.60, whereas in the State of Wisconsin, where the average income per capita was slightly above the national average, the expenditure amounted to $49.30, which was slightly above the national average of expenditures by the Works Progress Administration.

When we add all the expenditures of the various relief agencies—the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, the Civil Works Administration, and the Works Progress Administration, these three agencies which have spent $10,000,000,000when we add them all together, and break down the expenditure on a per capita basis, we find that the expenditure in the State of Georgia amounts to $40.70 per person; the national average is $72.80 per person; while the expenditure in the State of Wisconsin, with slightly more than the average of the national per capita income, is $88.80 per capita, slightly above the average per capita expenditure by these emergency agencies.

Mr. President, to complete the picture, the contributions required of the sponsors-commonly called the sponsors' contributions-in the two States are practically the same, despite the difference in their resources and in the Federal expenditures. In Georgia the total sponsors' contribution as of November 30, 1938, was 19 percent of the total funds expended in that State, whereas in Wisconsin it was 17.2 percent. The national average through November 30 was 16 percent. The general rule follows on through. The poorer the State and the smaller the amount that the Federal Government spends there of the emergency funds, the larger the proportion of sponsors' contributions are required.

The average total security wage per worker per month on the W. P. A. program for the quarter ending November 1938 amounted to $34.13 per worker in the State of Georgia as compared with $55.61 in the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. President, the entire pattern of this picture, which deals with the manner in which these funds have been distributed as between the several States, is very disappointing to one who has supported every one of these emergency appropriations, believing that he was contributing to a fairer distribution of our national income and to an increase in the purchasing power of those who had the smallest purchasing power. It is disappointing to find that the funds have been so administered that the greater proportion has been expended in the States where the need, by all reasonable standards, would have been less, and that the tendency is, if followed on through a long period of years in a spending program, to make the poor people poorer until they will be more impoverished and more underprivileged than they are at present, and to stimulate the business and increase the income in the States already possessing the most in wealth and the highest average of income.

I have never until recently been able to see the slightest merit in the contention which is ofttimes advanced that each State should care for its own unemployed; that each State should seek to relieve the needs of those within its borders who are in distress. It seemed to me that distribution of the national income was a national question. I had thought that unemployment was a national problem. I did not see how it would be possible to increase the purchasing power of those who had less of it unless it was dealt with from a national standpoint; but I must regretfully conclude that unless there is some change in the policies which have obtained to this good hour in the distribution of these funds, the poorer States would have been better off if they had gone along with their own poverty-stricken people and endeavored to take care of them, rather than being compelled to contribute to relief through national taxation, to assume a share amounting to $287.50 per person in the national debt, and not to receive their fair proportionate share in the distribution of these funds.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina. Mr. REYNOLDS. Unfortunately for me, I happened to be out of the Chamber on some official matters while the Senator from Georgia was discussing this all-important subject. I should like to inquire whether or not the Senator has arrived at the point in his speech where he deems it advisable to inform the Senate as to the pro rata amount of money inform the Senate as to the pro rata amount of money provided each of the States in the distribution of funds. I will state to the Senator that I am anxious about that, because I recall that somebody told me that my State, North Carolina, received only about $13.60, whereas the State of New York received $69.80. I could not believe it, and I will not believe it unless the Senator tells me that those are the facts; and I should like to hear the figures on that subject.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from North Carolina was called from the floor. It so happens that I used his State as an illustration showing how the expenditures per capita have paralleled the per capita income, being smaller in proportion in the States where the lower income obtains, and higher in the States where the higher income obtains. I can assure the Senator from North Carolina that if—when he gets up in the morning—if he does arise on Sunday morning [laughter]—

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator that I am up every morning at 6:30, including Sundays.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator will get the Record for today, he will find a comparison and analysis of the expenditures, comparing the States of North Carolina and New York. I used them for some of my illustrations.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I know of no way whereby this condition can be remedied save through a more equitable administration of these funds. I have from time to time discussed with the Administrator of the funds the injustices that were resulting. I have offered amendment after amendment on the floor of the Senate, and all of them have been voted down by the representatives of States that were in most instances more favored.

Mr. President, I desire to complete this picture by placing in the Record some statistics and charts relating to the farm income.

There has been expended by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration as of June 30, 1938, the sum of $2,212,000,000. I hope Senators who have proposed that we should reduce farm expenditures before starting a reduction in relief appropriations will notice that only $2,212,000,000 has been expended on the entire farm program, including the sums expended for the purchase of the pigs that we are told were killed, and the plowing up of the cotton that was plowed up. That was the total of all forms of payment to a population of 31,-800,000 who live on the farm and are dependent upon agriculture, who have the lowest per capita income of any class of persons in the United States and undoubtedly the lowest standards of living, because they are farther removed from the great centers of population; whereas we have spent about $10,000,000,000 on various forms of relief, and I do not think the W. P. A. rolls have averaged 2,750,000 persons from the time they were first established.

COTTON FARMERS PENALIZED

I desire to show that the thread of discrimination which I have followed through all the policies and ramifications of the Works Progress Administration will also be found in the expenditures which have been made by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration; that is to say, that the largest expenditures per capita of farm population have been made in the States where the farm income per capita is the highest. Of course, conversely, the lowest per capita payments by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration have been made in the States where the average annual farm income was the lowest. That, of course, means, Mr. President, that the cotton farmer has not received his equal share on a per capita farm basis in the distribution of the $2,212,000,000 which has been expended by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, despite the fact that he produced a commodity which is sold in the world market, a commodity which has been our chief export through all the years, in such amounts that the total favorable trade balance of the entire United States is approximately the same amount as our exports of cotton, which has been produced beneath the broiling sun by the toiling cotton farmers of this country, in competition with the world, and they have the lowest average farm income in the entire United States.

I offer for the Record a table I have been able to obtain which shows the gross cash farm income per farm person in the United States for the prosperous year of 1929, showing that in the State of Georgia the cash farm income per farm person for that prosperous year was $146.28, as compared with the national average of $499.40.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Schwartz in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is the Senator convinced that these figures have been accurately computed? I ask the question because I have been checking over the Senator's table as to the per capita relief expenditures, from which he was reading a moment ago, and, to take an example, I find that this table shows that in the State of Georgia the per capita expenditure for the Works Progress Administration was $21.20, for the Civil Works Administration in Georgia the per capita expenditure was $4.60, and for the Federal Emergency Relief Administration the per capita expenditure was $14.90; but the total per capita is represented as being $40.70.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct. Odd cents were not used.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This is an addition and not an average?

Mr. RUSSELL. The break-down is by various steps of the Works Progress Administration. It was born as the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, and when it grew up it was changed to the Civil Works Administration. Now, it is Works Progress Administration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. These are not averages; these are totals?

Mr. RUSSELL. They are totals, but the table shows per capita expenditures and totals. It has a break-down per capita for each agency.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was reading the totals, but not the averages.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the figures are not correct, it is because the Works Progress Administration has not kept accurate books. The totals appear in the report of the Senate hearings as the figures of the W. P. A. The break-down is the work of the statisticians.

Now, I will advert again to the question of farm income. I have also broken down the expenditures of the funds to farmers by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration by taking the three States which have the largest production of corn, the three States which have the largest production of wheat, and the three States which have the largest production of cotton. It shows in the three States having the largest production of corn, namely, Iowa, Illinois, and Indiana, that the average payment per farm person has been $117.01.

In the three States having the largest production of wheat, namely, Kansas, North Dakota, and Oklahoma, the per capita agricultural population expenditure is $184.49.

In the three States having the largest production of cotton, namely, Texas, Mississippi, and Arkansas, the average is $77.51, and would be much lower but for the fact that Texas produces both wheat and corn, which are included in their receipts in this table.

In the State of Georgia, just by way of illustration, the expenditure per capita of farm population by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration amounts to only $45.82. So not only has the policy been followed by the emergency agencies of making the largest payment per capita in the States with the highest income, but the same rule, though to a less marked extent, will be found followed in the expenditures by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. I offer this table for the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. I have been interested in the analysis the Senator has made of the wealth and population which showed that Wisconsin and Georgia were so nearly equal in those features. I wondered whether the Senator had any way of ascertaining the political aspect in those two States.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I had not intended to touch upon any political aspects of this question.

Mr. SMITH. Why not? The Senator knows that is all there is to it.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is very difficult in examining these figures to avoid wondering whether the fact that the States which have received the lowest percent of these expenditures have voted the Democratic ticket in both fair weather and foul so consistently that in many cases their needs are overlooked.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; yet there is no politics in it.

Mr. RUSSELL. But I do not attribute political motives to anyone. I am presenting these facts for the benefit of the Senate; and while it has been very tedious to make this study, I have been startled by the results, and from henceforth I shall certainly give voice to my feeling about these injustices on every occasion when legislation of the kind we are now considering is pending in the Senate.

Mr. President, I also have here a summary of allotments by the Public Works Administration. I regret that I have not been able, having received this information only a short time before I came on the floor this afternoon, to break down these figures into per capita calculations. I observe, however, by some comparisons that the discriminations I noted in the Works Progress Administration are almost as marked, sometimes more so, in the Public Works Administration.

I used the State of North Carolina in speaking of the Works Progress Administration, and I will take that State for illustration in connection with the Public Works Administration. The total grants to that State by the Public Works Administration—and a grant is what they give a State, not a loan, that is the part the State gets out of the National Treasury without any responsibility for repayment—was $25,459,000. I observe in the figure as to the State of New York, which I also used as an illustration, a State which contains approximately four times the population of North Carolina, I believe, though I have not the figures before me, the grant was $196,800,000, which is, on the dollar basis, approximately eight times what North Carolina received.

I offer for the RECORD a summary of expenditures by the Public Works Administration to which I have just referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I also offer for the RECORD an interesting table, showing the amount of the farm income of the several States, which gives the cash farm income for the calendar years 1937 and 1936, and which also shows the Government payments in all of the States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CASH FARM INCOME IN 1937

Total cash income from the sale of farm products and from Government payments in the calendar year 1937 is estimated by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics at $8,500,000,000 compared with $7,918,000,000 in 1936 and with $4,328,000,000 in 1932, the low point in cash farm income since estimates were first begun in 1924. The peak of farm income during this period was reached in 1929, when it amounted to $10,479,000,000. The estimate of $8,500,000,000 for 1937 displaces the preliminary estimate of $9,000,000,000 made by the Bureau in August.

by the Bureau in August.

The greater portion of the increase in income from 1936 to 1937 was due to the increase in income from crops. Total income from 78 different crops increased from $3,460,000,000 in 1936 to $3,840,000,000 in 1937, an increase of 11 percent. Income from livestock and livestock products increased from $4,171,000,000 in 1936 to $4,280,000,000 in 1937, an increase of less than 3 percent. Governments in 1937 are expected to approximate $380,000,000 ment payments in 1937 are expected to approximate $380,000,000 compared with $287,000,000 in 1936. Comparable estimates of income from the principal crops and from all crops, livestock, and livestock products from 1924 to 1935 and Government payments since 1933 are given in a separate table of this report.

SUBSTITUTE FOR FARM-VALUE FIGURES

For the first time preliminary estimates of cash income from each of the principal crops and from livestock and livestock products as a group are presented with the December crop report. income estimates cover the calendar year to permit coordination with national income estimates which are made on a calendar-year basis. Estimates of cash income from each of the several classes of livestock and livestock products will be issued in February, when the annual January 1 estimate of livestock numbers is released.

Estimates of gross income from crops and livestock by calendar years and estimates of net income from agriculture will be issued as soon as the estimates of expenses of production can be completed.

soon as the estimates of expenses of production can be completed. The estimates of cash income, which are a summation of the monthly estimates of cash income made during the calendar year, include estimates of cash income from marketings and from Government payments. Forecasts of marketings and prices during December 1937 are included to complete the calendar year. The estimates of cash income are designed to eliminate duplications that occur where crops and livestock products are valued separately and no allowance is made for crops used for seed, or fed to livestock, or used for food on farms where produced. These income estimates do not include income from sales of livestock, feed, and seed products by one farmer to another within the same State. by one farmer to another within the same State.

The estimates of cash income from agriculture indicate the amount of money available to farmers for paying taxes and interest and for purchasing commodities and services used in operating their farms and in supporting their families. The value of products produced and consumed on the farm as food or fuel is an addition to the cash income, and the total from these is included in gross income. The analysis of income, however, is not complete until expenses of production are subtracted from gross income to obtain the farmer's pet income. the farmer's net income.

In the past, crop-value estimates have been presented in connection with the December crop report. These estimates were computed from total production, using a forecast of average prices for the marketing season. Cash income estimates, on the other hand, are estimates of marketings month by month at prices prevailing when the marketings were sold.

In the case of some cash crops there is little difference between the crop-value figures and cash income. In the case of cotton, the value of the crop in a marketing season may be the same as the cash income from cotton in that season, provided farm carry-over is practically constant from year to year. But the value of cottonseed production estimated in the same way is not cash income. Some of the cottonseed is used in planting, for fertilizer, and occasionally for feed. Crops that are used largely for feed, such as corn, may show very little cash income for the year in which they are produced, but will eventually appear as income in subsequent years through the sale of livestock and livestock products. Changes in the value of the corn crop therefore are often not an accurate indication of changes in income to farmers from the production of corn. Consequently the changes in the values of some crops are directly related to changes in income, and, in the case of other crops, not so related. In the case of some cash crops there is little difference between

In analyzing the income from or outlook for any particular farm product it may be desirable to construct estimates of income for the marketing season of that product, or to estimate total crop value, but these should be treated as particular problems without reference to the national income estimates from agriculture. Also, it may be desirable to determine the total value of feed crops produced. For such purposes seasonal average prices will be made available for use in converting production or marketings into crop-year estimates of value or income.

BIG INCREASES IN WHEAT, TOBACCO, FRUITS

The greatest increases in cash farm income from 1936 to 1937 were received from the sale of wheat, tobacco, and the more important fruit crops, particularly cherries, peaches, grapes, apples, and strawberries.

Income from the sales of wheat during 1937 amounted to $667,-000,000, compared with $408,000,000 in 1936. The larger tobacco crop this year sold at prices higher than a year ago, and returned $318,000,000 to farmers, compared with $235,000,000 in 1936. In spite of the near-record crop of cherries, prices were higher than a year ago, and income amounted to $13,000,000, compared with $7,000,000 last year. Income from peaches was 40 percent, from grapes 34 percent, from apples 32 percent, and from strawberries 28 percent higher than a year ago. Many other fruit and nut crops recorded large gains for the year, and the total income from all fruits and nuts increased from $481,000,000 in 1936 to $552,000,000 in 1937. in 1937.

There were several important crops for which income was smaller this year than last, partly due to small sales early in the year and partly to materially lower prices in the later months of 1937 than in the same period of 1936. Although the cotton crop is the largest on record, sales of cottonseed and lint during 1937 returned to farmers only $821,000,000, compared with $905,000,000 in 1936. The returns to farmers from potatoes amounted to only $198,000,000 in 1937, compared with $214,000,000 a year previous. Income from sweetpotatoes was also lower in 1937. Other important commodities for which income was smaller in 1937 than in 1936 were corn, barley, buckwheat, peanuts, sugar beets, and some of the legume. barley, buckwheat, peanuts, sugar beets, and some of the legume

TEN STATES HAVE SMALLER INCOME

The States showing the greatest increase in income from 1936 to 1937 are Oklahoma, Florida, Idaho, Kentucky, and Kansas, where crop output was considerably larger than a year ago. Income from sales of farm products in 38 States was as large or larger in 1937 than in 1936.

Of the 10 States recording smaller income in 1937 than a year earlier, the declines of 14 percent in Mississippi and 10 percent in Georgia and South Dakota were most pronounced. All States in the West North Central area, except North Dakota, Kansas, and Missouri, received less cash income in 1937 than a year earlier, despite the increased receipts from the sale of crops; the shortage of feed in this area during most of 1937 greatly restricted the output of livestock and livestock products.

The estimated Government payments, which include actual payments for the first 10 months of the year and estimated payments for November and December, were 32 percent larger than payments a year ago. The larger payments in 1937 contributed to the increase in income in several States, but the increase was not sufficient in the 10 States where income from marketings was below the level of a year ago to bring the 1937 total cash income to farmers in those States up to the level of 1936.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I also offer for the Record a statement which shows the estimated physical wealth of the several States, and all taxable property values in the several States as of the year 1932. I have been unable to secure figures for later years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the provision which I rose to support will not, of course, correct all the injustices which I have exposed and discussed, but it is a step toward equalizing these manifest discriminations as between the several sections of the country and the different people who are employed upon the relief rolls in those sections, as well as in the total distribution of these funds. I hope the Senate will see fit to reject the committee amendment and retain the House provision.

SOUTH DEMANDS EQUALITY

The South does not ask, and has never sought special favors at the hands of our Federal Government. The South does demand fair and equal treatment with any other section of

If southern industry, southern labor, and the South receive fair and equal treatment in such matters as freight rates and in the division of moneys collected into the common treasury from all of the people, we ask no odds of any section. We only ask for common justice, and I for one will never be content until this reasonable request is heard and granted.

Equal rights to all and special privileges to none is a hollow mockery to States which have so long been treated as conquered colonies. The Southern States and their people have done nothing to deserve this unfair treatment. We have contributed our full part and more to the greatness of these United States. We are as loyal, as patriotic, and as devoted to the institutions of our common Government as are the American citizens of any other section.

If our forebears were mistaken in their assertion of the rights of the States to secede in 1860, they paid a terrible price for their mistake, not only in blood, but in the destruction of their property and economy. Their descendants through all of the almost eight decades which have passed have patiently struggled to rebuild the South in the face of obstacles deliberately imposed, and burdened down with economic disadvantages and legislative discriminations which would have destroyed a less courageous people.

While thus handicapped, the South has contributed its share to the national progress, and her sons have given liberally of blood and sacrifice in the wars in which the Republic has been engaged. Longer patience in the face of such injustice cannot be a virtue. It will only contribute to the feeling that the South should be grateful for such crumbs as she may receive, and will inculcate a sense of inferiority in the minds of the southern people, which will mean defeat in the struggle for equality which has been so long waged.

Under our scheme of government any American citizen has a right to demand equality and fair treatment at the hands of his Government without regard to which party be in power at the moment. For many years the injustices against the South were attributed to the fact that the Republican Party was in power, and that the injustices were imposed because the South had been solidly Democratic. In those lean years when the Democratic Party had no other place of refuge it was nourished and kept alive in the Southern States.

Now that the Democratic Party has come into its own, and has taken over the reins of Government, the just demands for equal treatment and equality of opportunity to the South should be heard and granted.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I now renew the inquiry I made of him during the course of the debate, and propound the same inquiry to the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the joint resolution. The inquiry was whether the amendment of which I gave notice several days ago, which deals with the same general subject as the so-called Tarver provision, concerning which the Senator has been speaking, but which has to do with the monthly security wage rather than with the hourly rate of compensation, which is the subject matter of the Tarver provision, may not now be offered, and the two go to conference, there is such a wide discrepancy between

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question as to the parliamentary situation. We are dealing with language that was stricken from the measure, or which was not adopted by the Committee on Appropriations. We are dealing therefore with a committee amendment. Not being sufficiently conversant with the rule, I am wondering if the arrangement suggested by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] can have a parliamentary standing.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, yes, Mr. President, it could, because then, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], I should offer it as a substitute for the language which is in the measure, and which the committee proposes to strike out. It would therefore be in the nature of a perfecting amendment, and would be proper from the parliamentary point of view. I shall make the parliamentary inquiry of the Chair, if that is not so.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I suggest that the only way, as I see it, that the Tarver amendment can go to conference is by sustaining the action of the committee.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is my view of the situation. Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I address a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to ask, if I now offer as a substitute for the committee amendment, which is to strike out certain language, the language contained in the amendment which I previously offered, will that be within the rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHWARTZ in the chair). The Chair will state that that offer would be in order at this

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I thank the Chair for the ruling. Does that satisfy the chairman of the subcommittee? The Chair ruled that it would be in order.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, has the Senator from Wyoming the floor?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes, I was recognized and have the

Mr. McCARRAN. I certainly shall resist to the best of my ability such an arrangement, because I contend that the Senate should pass on the action of the Appropriations Committee, whose action was to reject the Tarver amendment,

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have no desire to provoke a controversy upon that phase of the matter, and I made the suggestion only with the thought that it would expedite the consideration of the measure. I would make the request only upon the basis of unanimous consent, and if the Senator from Nevada feels-

Mr. McCARRAN. I would resist.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I may point out to the Senator that it will make no difference whatsoever whether the committee amendment is adopted directly or by way of the amendment which I offer, because the language of the Tarver amendment will be before the conferees no matter what we do

Mr. McCARRAN. That may be true, but the limitations on a conference committee are entirely different from those which the Senator contemplates in his proposal. I know the Senator has served on conference committees, and I know that he realizes the limitations on a conference committee. I do not wish to take the Senator's time, and I hope the Senator will pardon me if in place of asking a question I make a statement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That will be entirely agreeable, because I want to have the matter cleared up. I think the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Wyoming were agreed to, it would mean that the Senate would not have an opportunity to vote the socalled Tarver amendment up or down.

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope the Senator from Wyoming will be as generous with me as I am with him. I assured the Senator from Wyoming that I intended to support his amendment in any event. There is no conflict between the two amendments, and I do hope that he will vote with me to defeat the committee amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Georgia was good enough to indicate in the course of his speech, when I first proposed this method, that he would consider it. I knew that he had a very nimble mind, and that he would be able to consider it in the process of his discourse. If he has so considered it and feels that he wants to have a direct decision up or down upon the Tarver amendment, why, of course, I withdraw the request.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no conflict in the amendments. The amendment of the Senator from Wyoming relates to the total monthly wage. The Tarver amendment relates to the hourly wage. Those of us who feel there should be a fair distribution of W. P. A. funds would have two bites at the cherry if we voted on both amendments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary in-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Do I understand correctly that if I do not now offer my amendment as a perfecting amendment it will be in order after the committee amendment shall have been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. With the understanding then that my amendment will be in order for presentation later, I shall not pursue my request.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to take the time of the Senate to any great extent in reply to the able, studious, and diligent efforts of the Senator from Georgia. I believe that he is sincere, honest, and determined in his views. But, Mr. President, some 4 years ago we undertook to establish a principle in this country, through the action of the Congress, which would be in line with the principle for which a great battle extending over half a century has been waged by the toilers of America. We proposed to establish that principle in the most essential legislation the Congress has enacted, that which deals with human misery growing out of unemployment. We proposed to write a provision into an appropriation measure so that the Government of the United States would not go into competition with individual toilers in their respective walks of life.

We proposed to go further than that. By legislation that has created the W. P. A. we proposed to recognize the efforts of those of the toiling class who have worked and established prevailing wage scales in the respective sections of this country, and to provide that their efforts shall not be in vain. I wish for a moment to dwell upon that subject.

For half a century-it is that and more-the toilers of this country have given of their effort, their zeal, their diligence, yea, more, their blood, to establish wages in the respective sections of this country in keeping with American standards of living in those sections. And now, if I read the effort aright, it is proposed to tear down the wage structure of one section of the country or another section of the country, because, forsooth, that wage structure has reached a point which other sections cannot reach. It is proposed to tear down the higher wage structure in order to build up the lower wage structure. The building up of the lower wage structures of this country is a Utopian idea. The building up of the wage structure from underneath, building it up to a higher standard, is my ideal all the way through. I would go along with such a plan everywhere, every day, every time. But I do not propose to tear down that which toil has built, that which zeal and effort have constructed, in order to build up from the bottom, and if I read the effort of the able Senator from Georgia correctly, that would be the result of his proposal, regardless of how he may now construe it.

I can find no better construction of what I am trying to say than the answer of the able Acting Administrator of W. P. A. when in the committee he said that the Tarver amendment would abrogate and set aside the prevailing wage rule as it existed in the law today.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was merely going to remind the distinguished Senator from Nevada of the fact that Colonel Harrington did so testify; that if this amendment were adopted he would interpret it as repealing the prevailing rate

Mr. McCARRAN. I thank the Senator from Wyoming for the reminder. I want to go just a little further, if I may, following my idea of statutory construction. If the Senate of the United States, with that expression before it, adopts the motion of the Senator from Georgia now, it will adopt it with the construction which the Acting Administrator placed upon it, and will put its stamp of approval upon the abrogation of the prevailing-wage rule which was made part of the W. P. A. legislation after long and tedious efforts on the part of Members of this body.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. If I correctly understand the position of the Senator, I think I am very sympathetic with it. As I understand, the Senator has no objection to the minimum wage, for example, throughout the South, being raised to a fair level.

Mr. McCARRAN. None whatever.

Mr. PEPPER. As, for example, the level prescribed by the Labor Standards Act of 1938. The Senator merely does not want to destroy any other good wages which may have been provided for labor anywhere else in the country.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator correctly construes my attitude. In order to emphasize it without speaking too much, personally, I will say that for three sessions of Congress I have had pending before this body a bill to establish a minimum wage for the very lowest paid wage earners of this country, and I propose to persist in that effort.

To answer the Senator from Florida a little further, it is my desire to raise the lowest standard of wages in this country so that a living wage may prevail at all times, but in order to do that I do not propose to tear down the higher structure of wages which has been established by the efforts of men and women throughout this country for over half a

The American Government is the greatest employer of labor in all the world. If the greatest employer of labor in the world today sets an example of tearing down its own wage structure, then private industry will be justified in saying, "We have the right to follow the example set by the Government," and we will find a tumbling down of the wage structure throughout American industry. That is why day after day and time after time we have resisted any effort to tear down the wage structure, and thus to tear down the living standards of American labor.

Mr. President, in my judgment the present law is good enough. It may not be perfect, but no law that I have ever seen enacted is perfect. It all depends, after all, on administration. It may be that the objection raised by the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has some degree of cogency in it; it may be that certain administrators go too far one way or the other. However, none of us has ever been able to devise a gage and measure for human conduct. The spirit of the law as written by the Congress of the United States should, nevertheless, prevail. After all, the prevailing wage in the respective communities is the thing that should operate. Why? Because the prevailing rate in the respective communities has been established by those who have had experience in those communities. The prevailing wage in the respective communities has been established by the zeal, diligence, and struggle of the toilers in those communities; and to tear it down now by an act of Congress would, in my judgment, be an unjustifiable and unwarranted act. If we set the example here, then I do not know where it is going to stop. Let us say, for instance, that some administrator in some section of the country has violated the rule. That is not to say that the Congress of the United States or the Senate of the United States should violate the rule. As was suggested by the able Senator from Georgia, where a higher wage scale has been adopted it certainly did no harm. Where a lower wage scale was adopted it could be rectified. In every such instance hearings have been conducted, examinations have been made, and an established wage scale for the community in keeping with the prevailing wage of that community has been adopted by the Works Progress Administration so far as we have been able to determine.

Let us not write into the law the construction of the Acting Administrator of the W. P. A. Let us not say, by adopting the Tarver amendment, that we therefore abrogate and set aside the rule that has been established by this body after a long struggle, after years of study, which is the rule that the prevailing wage in the respective communities shall prevail.

I hope the action of the Appropriations Committee may be approved by this body.

Mr. ADAMS obtained the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have listened attentively to the arguments of the Senator from Georgia. As a member of the Appropriations Committee I have listened to the arguments before that committee. This matter was gone over with much care, and I believe that it would be a serious mistake for the Senate to fail to support the committee in this matter.

The Tarver amendment, which was adopted on the floor of the House of Representatives, provides that there shall not be a differential in excess of 25 percent in the maximum rate as between workers employed in different States or different areas of the same general type.

The Congress in 1936, after debate and consideration, established the prevailing wage as a basis of the hourly wage to be paid by the W. P. A. There has been difficulty in working it out; it is an intricate problem; but it has been worked out fairly well. Studies have been made and the hourly rates of pay throughout the country are fixed on the prevailing wage in the locality and in the craft or trade or occupation in which the W. P. A. worker is employed.

This amendment strikes down that provision. The provision, as all Senators know who were here at that time, was inserted primarily because unless the prevailing wages were established there was danger that the prevailing wage scales in industry, particularly in the skilled crafts, would fall by reason of the influence of the lower scales paid by the W. P. A.

This amendment wipes out, repeals, the prevailing-wage provision, for it says that there cannot be a differential. It establishes an entirely different basis. If it be said that the prevailing wage would be used at one point, then that point becomes a determining factor, regardless of wages elsewhere. If the Administrator decides that the wage paid upon a public project in the marble quarries of Vermont should be accepted, and quarrymen in Vermont are being paid at the rate of perhaps $12 per day, it would mean then that wages in a quarry with a far lower wage scale must be raised up to the Vermont level, or, to state it in reverse, in the mountain areas, where living costs are high, particularly in the mining regions, it means either that those high costs of living and high wage scales must come down to lower levels which exist in other sections of the country or that the wages of the other sections of the country must come up. So obviously the effort made by the Congress to avoid wage controversies would be destroyed.

This change in the method of fixing the hourly rates wage would not affect the pay of a single W. P. A. worker in the United States. The Senator from Georgia has argued somewhat extensively as to the distribution of the wealth of the country being unequal, but this amendment has no relation whatever to that. It is determinative of just one thing: How many hours shall the worker work in order to get his security wage? If the security wage is $50, he works the number of hours at the rate fixed during the month until he is credited with $50. It does not propose to increase the monthly wage of a single worker in the United States, but merely involves a readjustment of the hourly rate. So the only real result would be that one man's hourage might be changed from 130 to 140 and another man's from 140 to 130, or it might vary far more than that.

This particular amendment provides that the appropriations herein made shall not be available until the rates of pay in accordance with it have been established. We are dealing with an emergency measure; the moneys available for relief will be exhausted on the 7th of February; yet we are asked to adopt an amendment which provides that none of this money may be used until there has been worked out an adjustment so that there is no differential of more than 25 percent. It is utterly impossible to do that within the period. I doubt if it could be done within the period before the 1st of July. A tremendously intricate problem is involved. It would be necessary to go into every area and into every occupation. The Administrator would have to establish some base, and then, all throughout the country that base would have to be applied, so that there would be no differential of more than 25 percent. I think it is utterly impossible of administration, even if time were unlimited, but we are dealing with an appropriation which lasts only 43/4 months and certainly it could not be accomplished within that time. The amendment provides that not a dollar of the money may be used until this intricate computation shall have been made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The question of what is the prevailing wage is a question of fact, as I understand, in every separate community; there is no universal prevailing wage in the country, but the prevailing wage is established by conditions which exist in the community. It may be one thing in one town and another thing in a place 25 or 30 miles away. I know that in the determination of what is the prevailing wage in the communities in my State under the W. P. A., and also the P. W. A., which is supposed to pay the prevailing wage, there has been a different wage scale for the same sort of labor in communities within 25 or 30 miles of each other.

It is always difficult, I presume, to work out scientifically what is really the prevailing wage. In the town where I live, for instance—a town of 40,000 people—less was paid to W.P.A. workers than was paid across the river in Illinois in a town of 12,000 people. In the Illinois town the W. P. A. paid 40 cents an hour, while 30 cents an hour was the amount paid in my home town. If Senators do not think it is difficult to explain to my constituents why it is that they got 10 cents an hour less on the south side of the river than those on the north side of the river get, let them go down there and try it. It is almost an impossibility. For months and months an effort was made to adjust the wage scale in the community where I live so at least to make it equal to that in smaller communities across the river which happened to be a different region the standard for which was different. Therefore, when the W. P. A. undertook to work it out, instead of increasing the hourly wage, they simply permitted the men receiving the lower rate to work more hours at the same wage in order to make as much per month as was being made by workers across the river in other communities. It was not, I will say to the Senator, a very satisfactory arrangement. But I realize how difficult it is to adjust all these matters throughout a country so large as this so as to satisfy everybody.

What I am wondering is if the House language is retained in the joint resolution, which language has been stricken out by the committee, and assuming that there would have to be a lowering of the wage at the top or a heightening of the wage at the bottom, or both, whether it would affect materially the number of men who could still continue to work on the W. P. A. program under the appropriation for the remainder of the fiscal year?

I suppose there will be a possibility of scaling down from the top and working up from the bottom to a general average so that there will be no effect on the number of men employed; but suppose in any community the W. P. A. undertook to adjust that—and if they are obeying the law they can do so—by providing the prevailing wage in all these communities, would it not result in paying less than the prevailing wage in some communities and more than the prevailing wage in other communities if they undertook to strike a dead level or within 25 percent of a dead level? What is the situation as to that?

Mr. ADAMS. The wage paid in a certain locality has been fixed as the result of many years of development in that community. The demand for labor, the supply of labor, living conditions, the presence or absence of unionization have all entered into the equation in order to fix the wage in the community. To illustrate, we had before the Banking and Currency Committee, as the Senator will recall when we were discussing the housing bill, the wage rate in Chicago, a highly organized community, and in some of the communities outside Chicago within 40 or 50 miles.

There was being pointed out to us the effect upon the housing program of the variation; but in Chicago a scale which did not exist elsewhere was developed by conditions within the city. If we attempt to say that there is a scale, say, of $14 a day in Chicago for certain work, and $7 a day outside, one of two things must be done; either the $14 scale must come down within 25 percent of the $7 scale, or the $7 scale must go up, or else there must be an adjustment. In any event, one group or the other will be penalized for the wage structure. For instance, if we drop the top scale, we open the way to the disruption of the wage scales in the community for people employed not under W. P. A. If we raise the level outside, we put the W. P. A. worker on a higher scale per hour than those who are not on W. P. A., and have a tendency to induce everybody to get on W. P. A., where he will be getting more than the wage which prevails in the community.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator inform us, if he knows, whether in any communities more than the prevailing wage scale is now being paid? The law provides that the wage paid shall not be less than the prevailing wage scale, but, as a matter of fact, is more than the prevailing wage scale being paid in any community, any city?

Mr. ADAMS. I cannot answer that question. I take it for granted that it is not possible in every community absolutely to fix an exact point and say that that is the prevailing wage. Necessarily, it is a little above here and a little below there, but as the result of a great deal of research and a great deal of investigation the authorities have endeavored to fix the point. It may be said as to certain classes of work that one man in a group may have more skill than another, and there may be a variation of wage as to that. As between two men doing the same work, one more skilled than the other, what is the prevailing wage?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the prevailing wages are not fixed by the W. P. A. They are not fixed by the Federal Government. They are fixed in the communities where they

Mr. ADAMS. They are fixed by the community, and ascertained by the W. P. A.

Mr. BARKLEY. And they are supposed to have some relationship to the cost of living, the expenses, and the standard of living which has been established in the community. So it is not the fault of the Federal Government if in one community the prevailing wage is higher or lower than it is in some other community, even though only a few miles away, or a thousand miles away.

So in providing for the prevailing wage in the law which has been in existence, it was my understanding that Congress desired that the W. P. A. and the P. W. A. and all the other agencies should follow the standards which had been fixed in the communities rather than to set a new standard and compel the communities to abide by it, because there would be no prevailing wage at all unless a standard had been fixed in the community, unless an average were struck of all the wages paid for similar work and that were arbitrarily established as the prevailing scale.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to make it clear that the argument of the Senator from Kentucky depends upon the correctness of his surmise that none of the W. P. A. administrators made any mistakes in fixing the wages.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I am not assuming that. Mr. RUSSELL. Colonel Harrington testifie Mr. RUSSELL. Colonel Harrington testified that the wages were determined by the local W. P. A. officials in each subdivision of government of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; they had to be. Mr. RUSSELL. They were determined in 3,000 counties by 3,000 different men ascertaining what was the prevailing wage in the community, and the Congress accepting all of that, showing the disparities and differences I have pointed out and those that were pointed out by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] and others. The Congress must rely absolutely upon that; and I say the Congress believes that there should not be a discrimination of more than 25 per-

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course somebody has to act in a way that may be regarded as arbitrary, because Congress itself cannot make these surveys. It cannot determine what the prevailing wage is anywhere. I do not know, and I suppose nobody here knows, what the prevailing wage for carpenters or bricklayers or ditch diggers or plumbers or road hands is in any county in the country, unless he happens to live in it and has made some investigation. I would not know. offhand, what the prevailing wage is in my own county for road hands. I understand that the State highway department paid 35 cents an hour for road hands on the Statehighway program, and the W. P. A. tried to follow suit and established a similar wage scale, because nobody except the State was building highways: and, they having fixed a wage for ordinary day labor on the roads, there was no other standard by which the W. P. A. could fix their own rate.

I realize how difficult it is to strike an average of all the wages paid in a community. The law does not say whether it shall be a union scale or a nonunion scale. In many communities where there are labor organizations the scale of wages paid to their members is higher than the nonunion scale; yet I suppose technically any administrator might have the right to strike an average between the two figures and say that is the prevailing wage, although I imagine Congress had more in its mind adopting the higher rate as the standard of living to be paid to organized workers than the rate paid to those who are more or less unorganized. The law itself, however, does not make any discrimination between them.

I realize that it is possible that there may be injustices. Arbitrary action may have been taken; but if there is more than a 25 percent difference between the wage scales in any two communities, it is not because of any act of Congress. It is not because of the W. P. A. It is because the wage scale in a given community presumably has been established over a long period of time as a result of the community's own efforts to standardize wages and base them upon the conditions, the environment, the standards of life, and the cost of living. I do not know how we can establish a 25 percent arbitrary rule that may not even make it necessary to pay W. P. A. workers more than the prevailing wage somewhere, and less than the prevailing wage elsewhere.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not think we can wash our hands of the matter that easily, just by saying that the Congress did not do it, but that the persons whom Congress appropriated funds to pay are doing it. As I pointed out, we have a condition under which in one instance a man in the State of Pennsylvania has been paid $3.03 an hour for technical and professional work. I should like to have the ideas of the Senator from Kentucky as to how we are going to arrive at the prevailing wage for professional and technical work when we give a good many lawyers employment on the program, as has been done in some instances. I should like to have the Senator from Kentucky give me some idea as to that. I have not been able to think of any way in which we could arrive at a prevailing wage for technical employees and for lawyers.

When there is a labor organization in a town, it is a relatively easy matter to ascertain what we call the prevailing wage. Of course, usually it is a little higher than the wage which is actually paid, but we should quite properly accept it as the prevailing wage when the labor organization and the skilled crafts have set it. But at both ends of the line-for unskilled labor at the bottom, and for professional and technical employees at the top—we have the greatest discriminations, and naturally we would have the most unreliable method of arriving at the prevailing wage. For unskilled labor the discrimination is greatest between various sections in the same State, just as it is for professional and technical employees. The wages of skilled laborers and those in the intermediate grades are reasonably well fixed by labor unions.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know what the facts are about the Pennsylvania case, where somebody got three dollars and something per hour.

Mr. ADAMS. There was just one man-one man.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know whether that was the prevailing wage for that kind of work or not. I do not know whether any other kind of work was being done in that community. It would be a little astonishing to me to discover that lawyers were rendering professional or technical services under the W. P. A. for $3 an hour, or for any other hourly wage.

They are not paid by the week, the month, or according to the amount of work they do; or, in private practice, frequently upon the basis of a contingent fee, which the Irishman described as being a basis whereby if you lost your case your lawyer got nothing, and if you won your case you got nothing. [Laughter.] But I do not know of any situation anywhere in the country in which there would be a standard of $3 an hour for technical employees of the W. P. A. in any very large numbers.

I do not know what the situation was in the case to which reference has been made. The Senator from Colorado says only one man was employed at that particular place at that rate. If that was the only man employed in that community at that rate, I suppose that fixed the prevailing wage if nobody else was working in the same line or getting anything, I do not know what the facts are about that. We can hardly judge of the situation throughout the entire country by what one man got in an isolated case in Pennsylvania.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I might state to the Senator that there were any number of cases of men engaged in special and technical work where the compensation amounted to $2.50 an hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. Through the W. P. A.?

Mr. RUSSELL. Through the W. P. A., to those on the relief roll.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are they on the relief roll or are they a part of the 5 percent?

Mr. RUSSELL. They are not a part of the 5 percent. They are those who are spoken of as being certified as in need of relief, and their compensation is $2.50 an hour.

Mr. BARKLEY. I supposed that was a special kind of work, which only a limited number of men were qualified to do.

Mr. RUSSELL. Colonel Harrington intimated before the committee that there were a number, and, as a matter of fact, the wage-scale figures show it, because there are a number of instances of the wage scale running from $2.50 to lower amounts for professional and technical work.

Mr. BARKLEY. If for similar work in private industry that was the wage scale, the W. P. A. would have to pay it. They could not pay less.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to conclude what little I have to say with what Colonel Harrington stated before the committee with reference to the amendment. He said:

I have construed the provision as now worded as to all intents and purposes abolishing the prevailing rate clause in the main act because it would be practically impossible to readjust hourly rates of pay on the basis of the highest rates which obtain. We are now required by law to pay the prevailing wage rate as nearly as we can ascertain it. Therefore, I feel that this provision as now worded does in effect repeal the prevailing-rate clause in the act. I am opposed to this provision for the reason that it disregards the general wage structure now obtaining in this country both in public and private employment.

That sentiment was repeated in two or three places in the hearing.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope the Senator will permit me to express my astonishment that he now gives Colonel Harrington's statement as a reason why this provision should be stricken out.

Mr. ADAMS. I rather apprehended that comment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me express my approbation of the Senator from Colorado in now approving Colonel Harrington's views.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, Colonel Harrington is like the Senator from Tennessee; he has one weakness. The Senator from Tennessee says he knows nothing about percentages. He is a master of all other branches of mathematics, politics, philosophy, sociology, and all other things, but he is weak on percentages. Colonel Harrington was weak in the ascertainment of facts from Government records. No one has raised any question—I raised no question—as to his efficiency on his capacity or his knowledge in the administration of the

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator, he thinks that Colonel Harrington is better informed about prevailing wages than about the duties of his own office and the amount of funds it takes to look after the unemployed in this country.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I think I stated my view as to that.

The provision under discussion presents some difficulties. It is said it is difficult to determine the prevailing wage, and it is. What is the Administrator required to do to determine it? He is required to locate workers of the same general type in order to fix it, and there is a difficulty there. Then he has to provide a definition as between different areas of the same general type. Anyone who goes about the United States and endeavors to map accurately different areas of the same general type has his work cut out for him, if he seeks to do it before the 7th of February or the 1st of July, and then to apply in those different areas the wages of men in the same general class, comparing one area with another.

There may be in the woods of the Northwest highly organized working conditions. In another section of the country, where men are doing similar work in the woods, there may be an oversupply of labor, no organization, and living conditions may be easier. We cannot in fairness bring the wage scales within 25 percent without disrupting the conditions either in one or both of those areas.

It seems to me that after we have gone ahead for 3 years upon the prevailing wage basis, to seek at the last third of a fiscal year to set up a new scale, and provide that no money appropriated shall be used until new computations have been made which must take in the whole country—that is, it is necessary to compare the wage scale in Florida with that in the State of Washington if there is any similarity in employment and in area—is a task utterly beyond the capacity of the present organization of the W. P. A. I do not know how many additional people would be required to do the work; and it must be remembered that for every additional man put on the W. P. A. staff two or three men have to be taken off the relief rolls.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I wish to make a personal statement before submitting any observations on the pending joint resolution.

In the Washington Herald this morning there appeared an article by Mr. John O'Donnell and Doris Fleeson purporting to give a news account of the action of the Senate on the question of the amount of money to be appropriated, and the activities of some Senators and others referred to in the article.

There is one statement about me to which I wish to make reference. Near the conclusion of the article it is stated:

No one could say why REYNOLDS and BANKHEAD had switched.

Speaking for myself, I am at a loss to understand the basis for that statement. I assume, of course, that the newspaper writers have acted in good faith, and it is not made clear whether the reference is to my vote as switching from an administration supporter to the other side, or whether it has reference to switching my position on the question of the amount of money involved in the appropriation.

Permit me to say that in neither instance is there any sort of justification for the statement. It is well known that in the main, and wherever it has been possible for me to do so consistently with my mature judgment, I have been a supporter of the present Democratic administration and of President Roosevelt. A few times upon fundamental questions I have been unable to go along with the Democratic leader, and in those cases my position has been made known by my votes in this body; but, generally speaking, I am a Democrat. I am a believer in responsible party government; I believe in following authorized party leadership whenever it can be done consistently with one's judgment and conscience. I have no explanation and no excuse for that position, which has been held by me all of my mature life.

I am a friend of President Roosevelt. I admire him. I think history will record him as one of the few great Presidents of the United States.

It seems to me an absurd position for any intelligent person or for any newspaper to assume that how a Senator votes upon the question of the amount of money that shall be appropriated in this measure is a test of loyalty to the administration and to the President.

Mr. President, I have not switched my general loyalty to the Democratic Party, nor to its leadership, nor to our President. I shall vote, when I can, with him. When I cannot, in accordance with my best judgment, of course I will do as I have done heretofore—I will not vote with him. That, however, does not carry with it any unkind feeling upon my part.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, as a member of the Appropriations Committee who served with the Senator from Alabama, I wonder if it would not be proper at this time for those of us who are on the Appropriations Committee to testify that in his vote in the Appropriations Committee the Senator did not switch from his position.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true, of course.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. It so happens that I was sitting with the Senator from Alabama in the Committee on Appropriations when this question was under discussion. The Senator from Alabama stated to me at that time that he had a very important engagement, but that he wished to remain in the committee meeting and to cast his vote in favor of the position of the majority of the committee.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The position taken by the House?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; to vote for the House figure. There was no switch in his position by the Senator from Alabama. When, on account of the protracted discussion in the committee, the Senator from Alabama finally was compelled to leave, he asked me to cast his vote for him in favor of upholding the House figure, and in the vote that was taken in the committee the Senator from Alabama was recorded as voting to support the figure carried in the House bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the statement in the newspaper article that the Senator from Alabama did not stand by his associates, but switched his position, carries with it the imputation that that Senator cannot be depended upon in his attitude. I have been disturbed by that statement. I am not a political fence jumper. I pride myself, and have done so all my life, upon the fact that when I am voluntarily hitched I stay hitched. My friends in this body with whom I have associated for some years, members of the committee with whom I have worked, understand that instead of being a switcher, I am rather determined when I take a position.

Regardless of all that, Mr. President, from the day the House took action on this measure I was in favor of the reduced amount. I shall not at this time undertake a discussion of my reason for taking that position. I considered, among other facts, the fact that Mr. Hopkins, who had been dealing with this problem for years, had not given consideration to the subject of the amount asked to be appropriated. We know that for some weeks, possibly months, his line of thought had been in other directions. We knew that Mr. Aubrey Williams, who had been most closely associated with him in the administration of this program, had been removed from the W. P. A. picture and a military officer brought in to make the recommendation as to the amount of money required.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives, fresh from the people, its Members having gone among the people in every district of the United States familiarizing themselves with the needs and requirements of the people of this country on the subject of relief, voted upon the question of the amount, and with their recent contact with needs and conditions and, forsooth, sentiment in their districts, they voted for the amount contained in the measure now before us.

My beloved friend, my old schoolmate, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar], who offered the amendment to increase the appropriation, knew my position upon this question before the vote was taken in the Senate Committee on Appropriations. Other Members of the Senate who had interest enough to inquire knew it. As stated here by two of my colleagues on the committee, my position was known there. My vote was recorded. For the information of the newspaper correspondent who wrote the story, the action of the committee was published in his own newspaper on Sunday morning, the morning after the vote on Saturday, and my name was included in the list of 17 members of the Committee on Appropriations who voted for the reduced amount. So I say it is rather difficult to understand why this imputation has been made.

I have no regret over my vote. I shall not go into a statement of the reason for it. I took into consideration the improvement in business. I have confidence in business improving. I took into consideration that we were approaching the spring and summer months, when there would be less need for relief money. I took into consideration that many who are now upon the relief rolls would doubtless go back to farm work as the new crops were being planted. I took into consideration a fact which was given very little consideration in the debate of the question, and that was that under the authority of the Congress, the Public Works Administration is dispensing this year throughout the United States more than a billion dollars, in addition to the relief money carried in the work relief appropriation. That billion dollars was in addition to the amount appropriated to the W. P. A. The expenditure of that $1,000,000,000 is just beginning. I took that into account and considered it. It was perfectly clear to me that, notwithstanding improvement in business conditions, notwithstanding the season of the year we are approaching, there is available for work purposes much more money during the 5 months ahead of us in this year than was available during the same 5 months last year.

So I submit there is no principle involved in the amount of money to be appropriated. It is merely a matter of policy based upon opinion as to the amount of money that may be needed for the next 5 months.

I am at a loss to understand why some of the newspapers assert that there was an issue here upon this question between the President and the Vice President. It may be true, but I have seen no evidence of it. I have been here all the time. I have not heard the Vice President at any time express his opinion upon this subject. In circulating around the cloakrooms and on the floor and in the lobbies, he certainly has not in any way, when I have been present, made any open effort to line up or to induce or to persuade any Member of this body to vote any particular number of dollars into the relief measure. I cannot conceive that the President of the United States regards this question as an issue of principle, or as a line of demarcation between supporters of his administration and those who feel unkindly to him.

I refer those who may be interested in my trend of thought back to the time when the last relief measure was pending before the Senate. I was 1 of about 20 Members who voted to strike from that bill the entire authority for the P. W. A. to spend a billion dollars. That indicated my view then. I do not believe in spending merely for spending's sake. I have always been willing, and shall continue to be willing adequately to appropriate to relieve distress and provide for the needs of our people. But I have stated the trend of my thought. That accounts for my vote in the Appropriations Committee and on the floor.

We know, of course, that pay day is coming. We know also that of necessity the levying of additional taxes is ahead of us. So it has been my judgment that we should properly trim our sails, and, where we could do so, without grave injury, injustice, and hardship, reduce the amount of money that some day must be collected from the people through taxation. It has been my judgment that it is the part of wisdom to take that course not only for the benefit of the country at large but for the people who are now needy. I felt that we should not be extravagant, and not appropriate merely to have the money spent, but should proceed along careful, conservative lines, along frugal lines, doing what is necessary to avoid suffering, holding back when we could consistently and properly do so, even though we must at a later date appropriate more money for the needy.

Mr. President, I shall not now undertake to enter upon a discussion of the subject which has occupied the Senate for some time. The subject is too complicated to try to deal with it in any adequate way at this time of the day and of the week.

In the debate not only today and yesterday, but at previous times, I think too much importance has been given to the subject of the prevailing wage scale. That means the amount of pay per hour. It does not mean nor does not include any consideration of the number of hours a week which may be worked, or the number of hours a month which may be worked, but merely how much shall be paid per hour for the time that is worked.

I do not criticize those who wish to maintain the prevailing wage scale or rate of pay per hour. It has been built up in the manner so eloquently explained by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran]. I am not in conflict with his views. However, I think that in a relief program—not primarily a building or construction program but a relief program—we ought to give more attention and more consideration to the subject of how much money a family on relief will be paid in a given week or a given month, rather than how much will be paid per hour. We should consider both aspects, Mr. President; but very little consideration has been given to the subject of how much will be paid during a week or a month. Great inequalities have crept into the program. I should be glad to see the committee amendment defeated, and the House provision brought before the Senate, and to have the Senate adjourn until next Monday, so that we may go into this subject in a full, adequate, and just way. We have nothing else pressing on the calendar. We must consider the question sooner or later. We might put it off until the regular relief bill comes in, but we shall then be in a hurry. We shall be pressed at that time with other important legislation.

However, we must deal with the problem sooner or later. Everyone who has heard the masterly address by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] knows that the situation is inequitable. It is unjust, not only to sections and communities, but most of all, to individuals and to families. The situation must be rectified. An unfair, unjust condition of that sort cannot continue indefinitely. If it does, it will break down of its own weight.

I shall not go into details. I wish to commend the junior Senator from Georgia for the great research he has made. I have been cooperating with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] and the junior Senator from Georgia. We three, as members of the Appropriations Committee, have been working in accord on this subject for the past 3 years. Whenever the oportunity presented itself in connection with relief bills we have been trying to persuade the Congress to adopt some formula which would be more fair, more just, and more equitable than merely the declaration as to paying the prevailing wage rate per hour.

That declaration is all we have. We have no formula for the allocation or allotment of the money to different States based upon needs. We have no formula for the allocation based upon the number who need relief.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. In the light of one of the last expressions by the Senator from Alabama, I am wondering if that is why, for the past 4 years, I have been confronted with such an able opposition on the part of the triumvirate of Georgia, Alabama, and South Carolina. I take it it is because of that allied and cooperative force, which has always been against me.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We have informed ourselves upon the great system of inequality, injustice, and oppression to so many poor people. The Senator knows that we have been hammering to get this matter straightened out. All the members of the committee know that we three especially concentrated our efforts upon trying to work out something. The junior Senator from Georgia sponsored the amendment year before last. Last year the junior Senator from South Carolina sponsored the amendment. Finally the amendment went into the law. I wish to read it to the Senator and see whether it has been observed. This is the amendment which has in it the prevailing wage scale. I read section 9 of the Relief Act of 1938:

The rates of pay for persons engaged upon projects under the appropriations in this title shall be not less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality-

That does not mean wages, or the amount of money, but the rate per hour-not less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Works Progress Administration.

Now, listen to the Byrnes amendment. It has been referred to, but it has not been read. It is in the law. I read:

Provided, That if minimum rates of pay for persons employed by private employers in any occupation are established by or pursuant to the authority conferred by any Labor Standards Act enacted at the third session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, not less than the minimum rates of pay so established shall be paid to persons in similar occupations in the same locality employed on projects under the appropriation in subsection 1 of section 1 of this title.

In other words, there is a positive mandate by the Congress to the Administrator of the Public Works Administration that wherever the minimum rate and minimum hours had been set up by law, or in the administration of the wage and hour law, that same rate should apply to these poor distressed workers under the W. P. A.

What has been done about the matter? Today I asked the Senator from South Carolina, the author of the amendment, if he had heard of any wages of W. P. A. workers in his State being put upon a level with the minimum fixed by Congress at the instance of Senators who said that wages in the South were too low. Those wages were fixed and are being paid. The law says that W. P. A. workers should be paid at the same rate. It has not been done, Senators, in the State of Alabama. The junior Senator from South Carolina-and I am sure the senior Senator will confirm itstated that it is not being done in South Carolina. That is the situation.

So I say we must review the whole thing and try to do right about it, and be just. I have just read the Byrnes amendment, and have stated that the Senator from South Carolina has told me that the law is not being observed in South Carolina. It is not being observed in Alabama.

Mr. McCARRAN and Mr. PEPPER addressed the Chair. The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Alabama whether the amendment to which he has just referred was in recognition of the principle that it was not fair for the Government to pay a less wage for the same kind of work than it required private industry to pay?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Absolutely. Who can dispute that statement? Are we to pay the prevailing wage scale simply because the labor unions have established it, and ignore the prevailing wage scale because the representatives of the people in Congress assembled have established it? That is the question.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. In all fairness, would the Senator from Alabama think it would be at all possible between now and the 7th of February to establish the proper differential?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say frankly to the Senator that I do not think it can be adequately done.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not think so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the question should be studied and that we should go as far as we can before we enter upon the full program.

Mr. McCARRAN. I think that is correct. May I ask one more question? I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no prepared speech. Mr. McCARRAN. I think the Senator believes that we are both sincere and candid in this matter.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no doubt about that. I know the Senator's sincerity.

Mr. McCARRAN. And I know the Senator is sincere. I wish the Senator to know that at all times I desire to raise the lower scales of wages in every line, but I do not wish to tear down the upper scales.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not trying to tear them down. I do not think any Member of the Senate is trying to tear them down.

Mr. McCARRAN. With that thought in mind, I respectfully suggest that, inasmuch as this is only a deficiency appropriation—

Mr. BANKHEAD. However, it is for nearly half a year.

Mr. McCARRAN. The whole question should be submitted to the proper committee for consideration in connection with the regular appropriation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not concede that we ought to put off for 5 months some effort to regulate a situation which is as unfair, inequitable, and unjust as the present one. If the Senator had sat here and heard the facts presented by the junior Senator from Georgia, he would be shocked to learn the condition which now prevails.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that I have had even more intimate conversation with the Senator from Georgia, because sometimes he gives me the best of his views when we are alone.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know that at the proper time the Senator will be ready to remedy in the proper way this horribly inequitable situation once he understands it. If the Senate is not willing to grapple with the question, that is one thing; but if it is, I think the only thing to do at this time is to vote down the committee amendment and let stand the House provision on this subject. The House provision would then be subject, as an independent part of the bill, to any amendments that might be offered—curative, correctional, additional, or otherwise.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am wondering whether it would be possible at this junction to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to limit debate. We had all hoped to finish the joint resolution today. I understand there is not going to be any demand for a yea-and-nay vote on the committee amendment on which we have taken up considerable time today. I understand that there are probably three or four amendments to be offered, but I do not know how lengthy the discussion will be. I had in mind to suggest that during the remainder of the consideration of the pending measure no Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes on any amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we have had some recent experience with regard to agreements limiting the time for debate. There was such an instance yesterday,

Mr. BARKLEY. That was an agreement fixing a time when a vote was to be taken, not a limitation on debate. Probably we would have been better off if we had had it the other way.

Mr. BORAH. I have an amendment to offer which, if it is not agreeable to those in charge of the joint resolution, will take some time for debate. I do not wish to be limited in time and will have to object to a limitation of time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Then if we cannot enter into any agreement about the limitation of time, it is obvious that we cannot complete consideration of the joint resolution today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does not the Senator desire to dispose of the pending amendment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will inquire if we can vote on the pending amendment and get it out of the way. Is there to be any further discussion on the pending amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 25, after the word "hereunder", it is proposed to strike out the following proviso:

Provided further, That the appropriations herein made shall not be available unless and until rates of pay of employees of the Works Progress Administration are so fixed by appropriate administrative order as to eliminate differentials in rates of pay of workers of the same general class exceeding 25 percent of the maximum rates as between workers employed in different States or different areas of the same general type in the several States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it. Mr. McCARRAN. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I ask leave to present an amendment and request that it lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho that he be permitted to offer an amendment and have it printed in the RECORD and lie on the table?

There being no objection, the amendment was received, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 2, line 10, after the colon, to insert the following: "Provided, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Works Progress Administrator is authorized, from time to time, out of the funds appropriated in this joint resolution, to use such amount or amounts not to exceed in the aggregate $15,000,000 as may be determined by the Administrator to be necessary, for the purpose of providing direct relief for needy persons."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I now offer the amendment which lies on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 15, after the date 1939, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That not later than 30 days following the approval of this joint resolution, the Works Progress Administration shall determine and fix the number of hours per month of workers employed upon Works Progress projects that the monthly security wage for workers shall not be lower in any area than that paid to workers in that same occupation in areas of the same general type within the same security wage region regardless of variation in county population.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in line 4 of the printed amendment there is a typographical error, the word "so" having been left out. I desire that correction to be made, so as to read, "shall so determine and fix the number of hours," and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified as suggested by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, let me very briefly explain the proposed amendment. The provision in the House joint resolution which we have just been discussing, and which has now been disposed of by rejection, was an attempt to do away with certain discriminations throughout the United States by providing for a narrowing of the differential of 25 percent in the hourly rate of pay. The difficulty about that provision, altogether apart from the question of the prevailing rate of wages, which is measured in the hourly rate, is that there is no uniformity throughout the United States with respect to wages. That discriminations have taken place no one can doubt. Such discriminations have taken place even within the regions which have been created by administrative order of the Works Progress Administration. When that Administration was set up several years ago there were four different wage regions in the United States. The number of States within those regions has been changed from time to time. Today there are three separate wage regions. Region No. 3 includes the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee, and a part of Texas. Region No. 2 includes the States of Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maryland, and Delaware, with a part of Texas, that part which is in the Panhandle. The remainder of the States of the Union are in region No. 1.

Now, Mr. President, let me speak briefly about the schedules of the security wage. The security wage is the monthly compensation which is received by the workers. It has nothing whatever to do with the prevailing rate of wage. So, for example, in region No. 1 the unskilled worker receives from $40 to $55 per month. Whether he receives $40 or $45 or $55 per month depends upon conditions within the region which are altogether independent of the prevailing rate of wage or any other wage, and are dependent solely upon the population.

These schedules are based upon the population of the counties, and nothing else in the world. An altogether arbitrary standard has been established. If the county has a population of 5,000 or less, the monthly amount to be paid is a certain amount. If the population is between 5,000 and 20,000, or some such figure, a different monthly wage is paid. If it is between 25,000 and 50,000, there is a different schedule, and the schedules run up until 100,000 is reached, and in counties having a population of over 100,000 the highest schedule is paid.

The facts are that the cost of living in a county with a population of 5,000 may be, and frequently is, as great as the cost of living in a county with a population of 100,000 or more; and there is no sense or reason in an aribtrary division of that kind. The amendment which I propose simply does away with the population measure, and says that in determining and fixing the monthly wage to be received by workers upon works-progress projects the wage in any area shall not be lower than that paid to workers in the same occupation in areas of the same general type within the same security-wage region, regardless of variations in county population.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
Mr. O'MAHONEY. I gladly yield to the Senator from

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to call attention to a specific instance of just what the Senator says.

For instance, the coal miners in Red Lodge, Mont., receive a lower rate of monthly wage than the coal miners in Belt, Mont., because Belt is in a county having, say, 30,000 or 40,000 population, whereas the coal miners in Red Lodge are in a small county; but they are all engaged in identically the same work, and the cost of living is fully as high in Red Lodge, Mont., as it is in Belt, Mont. The town of Belt is a much smaller town than the town of Red Lodge; but the security wage received by the miners in one is considerably higher, or vice versa, than in the other, which is absolutely unfair. The miners, for instance, in Red Lodge and the miners in Roundup cannot understand why they receive a lower monthly rate than that received by the miners in the other community.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not only can they not understand it, but nobody can understand it, because there is no reason for it.

Mr. WHEELER. There is absolutely no rhyme or reason for it, unless we say that, of course, in the larger counties there are more votes.

Mr. SMITH. Now the Senator has said something.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But I know instances in which it can be pointed out that the higher monthly wage is paid in communities with the lower cost of living.

I hope the chairman of the subcommittee, without further talk on my part, will be good enough to indicate that he will accept the amendment and take it to conference.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if it is the uniform practice that in the sparsely populated communities the monthly wage is lower, and, as the population increases, the monthly wage rises.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is the rule. That is the way it is done.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator said there was no rhyme or reason in it. The Senator knows there are more votes in the more congested population.

What is the use of our standing here as sensible men and absolutely catering to that sort of thing? The other evening I heard a Senator here actually apologize for using his brain. Yes, I did. Have we come to the point in the United States Senate that a man must absolutely prostitute his intellectual processes in discharging his obligations as a Senator for fear he may run counter to the will of some other man? I honor the Senator from Alabama for exercising his judgment.

I shall have more to say about that subject, Mr. President, when I have a little more time and the conditions are more auspicious than they now are. I desire to call the attention of the Senate and the public to the fact that our efficiency and our ability as Senators are measured by the manner in which we truckle to somebody else.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am always interested in the contributions of the very distinguished Senator from South Carolina, but I wish briefly to finish the description of my amendment, and I hope I may have the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee.

I desire to add just another word, and drop it softly into the ear of my distinguished friend from Colorado [Mr. Adams]. Let me take one example, which is the schedule of monthly wages paid to unskilled workers in region No. 1.

This schedule runs from $40 to $55 a month. That is the total sum paid in a month to those who are employed upon works-progress projects. It is the security wage in Region No. 1 for unskilled workers. This region having been described by the Works Progress Administration as a single unit in which the occupations and the work are practically identical, there is no explanation whatever for such a differentiation in the monthly pay to be given to workers in different parts of the region.

If it be said—and I suspect this is what would concern the Senator from Colorado—that the effect of adopting this amendment would be to increase the expenditure, that does not at all follow, because the total wage which is paid depends upon the number of hours that are worked; and I think it would be very simple for the Works Progress Administration so to administer this amendment as to do away with the discrimination, for which, in my opinion, there can be no justification.

I hope the Senator from Colorado will take the amendment to conference.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield for a question by way of clarification?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand the principle and object and spirit of the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming to be that it will not affect the higher scale of wages

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is not intended to affect the higher scale of wages, and does not affect it.

Mr. McCARRAN. But it may affect the lower scale, to raise it toward a higher point?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct. The amendment provides that the monthly security wage shall not be lower for persons in the same occupation in one part of the wage region than that paid in another part.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, for several days we have had a discussion on the floor of the Senate in an effort to see what could be done for those in distress. We have argued as to how many could be cared for. If this amendment is adopted, it means there will be less persons on the relief rolls than if it is not adopted, because it affects the monthly wage payment—not the hourly rate, but the monthly wage payment. It provides that in every area every monthly pay shall be raised up to the highest. That is, it provides for an increase of every monthly pay up to the highest point within that area. Inevitably, it will involve the Government in very great increase in expense in the way of increased wages to those now on the pay rolls, with a consequent inevitable reduction in the number of those who may be put and kept upon the relief rolls.

I think it would be a great misfortune to adopt the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes appear to have it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I call for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 4, line 15, after the word "children", it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That it being the sense of the Congress that the minimum wages paid by the Works Progress Administration should not be less than the minimum wages required by the Labor Standards Act of 1938, it is hereby provided that the minimum wages to be paid under this appropriation or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 shall not be less than the wages fixed by the Labor Standards Act of 1938, and no security wage provision or limitation of hours of work shall defeat the purpose of this provision.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] a little while ago very clearly pointed out to the Senate that he and the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from South Carolina had been laboring for some time in an effort to fix the same minimum wage to be paid for work of a given kind by the W. P. A. at what was required by the Labor Standards Act of 1938 to be paid for that kind of work in private industry.

My amendment does not propose to tear down any higher wage scale, to which procedure the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] was a little while ago properly objecting. It merely proposes to put a floor under the wages paid by the Works Progress Administration, which is the same floor that Congress put under wages paid in private industry.

Colonel Harrington in his testimony before the Senate committee stated that there were two reasons why the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina, adopted last year, was not effectuated. One of them was that the Wage and Hour Act applies only to wages in commerce, and the W. P. A. was not engaged in commerce; furthermore, that the W. P. A. had a security wage which limited the number of dollars per week and month the workers could receive, and therefore, even if they did pay them a fairly high hourly rate, it limited them in hours of work, so that they did not get actually the number of dollars it was contemplated by the Byrnes amendment last year they should get. I therefore urge this amendment.

It will be noted that at the end of it I provide that the minimum wage to be paid by the Works Progress Administration shall be the minimum wage provided by the Labor Standards Act of 1938, and no security-wage provision for a limitation of hours shall operate to defeat the declared purpose of the Congress in 1938, as reiterated by the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does that mean that the wages of those who are working now under a limitation of hours or days per month, so that they draw a certain amount per month, under those limitations, would have to be increased so that their monthly allowance would be as great as that of anyone in any other occupation of the same kind under the Wage and Hour Act?

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct?

Mr. BARKLEY. What effect would that have on the number of those who could be employed? If in any community they are working only half time now, we will say 14 days in some communities, at a certain wage per hour or day, of course, in 14 days, at the minimum wages provided in the Wage and Hour Act, no man could make as much money as another one in private industry or other occupation working a full month. So that if by compulsion the W. P. A. have to increase the employment to full time instead of 14 days, or whatever it is they are now allowed to work per month, would that not automatically reduce the number who could be on the roll by that amount, and if all of them had to have their time doubled it would mean that only half as many men might work as are now working. That is what I am worried about.

Mr. PEPPER. In the first place, Mr. President, I think Congress made it clear in 1938 by the Byrnes amendment that we expected the Government to pay even a monthly rate that was as much as we required private industry to pay, and that we did not anticipate the defeat of that objective by the fixing of the number of hours people could work so as to prevent it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I doubt very much whether Congress intended that, although that would be a very desirable thing. But the work is staggered so many days per month in order to allow a larger number of men to work during the month. If we insert in the pending measure a provision which practically requires the W. P. A. to put them on at full time, with the number of projects and the amount of money available, we will have a very much larger decrease in the pay roll than we otherwise would have.

Mr. PEPPER. I am getting at the same problem about which the Senator from Alabama spoke, and which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] clearly set forth. In the northern section of the country the security wage is something like $50 or $60 a month, whereas in the South, in my State, for instance, it is only $26 a month. I desire to fix the minimum security wage everywhere in the United States at not less than $44 a month instead of $26 a month, as it is fixed in the South at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to see that done, but if we are going to do it, we might as well do it with our eyes open.
Mr. PEPPER. That is exactly what I am saying.

Mr. BARKLEY. If we should increase the wage from $26 to $44 a month, with the same number of employees, we would be almost doubling the amount paid in wages, and with a limitation by Congress on the amount, we cannot do that. Therefore, we would have to reduce the number in order that the increased wage per month for all these employees could come within the appropriation provided by Congress.

The wage and hour law provides, of course, a minimum hourly wage and a minimum wage based upon full-time occupation and not upon part-time occupation, such as now prevails in the W. P. A., and if we should increase the security wage, desirable as that is, I am afraid we would automatically decrease the number who would draw any wages at all.

Mr. PEPPER. That matter would be adjusted in terms of dollars and cents, of course, when and if the President should find it necessary to make a further request for an appropriation from Congress.

I am glad the Senator from Kentucky presented the issue clearly to the Senate. I do not desire to conceal it; but I wish to ask whether it is fair for the security wage to be fixed in the Southern States at $26 a month and in other States of the Union at $40 or $50 a month? I protest against that provision, and so in order to fix a floor under the bottom of wages, and not to pull down the wages of anybody from the top, I have offered this amendment providing that the minimum wage to be paid shall be the same as that fixed by the Wage and Hour Act.

Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. McCARRAN addressed the Chair. The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield first to the Senator from Georgia; then I will yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should like to point out to the Senator from Florida and to the Senate that, as I recall, the average monthly wage of all persons employed upon the Works Progress Administration projects is $52.90; it is something over $52. The average wage, with the exception of the Southern States, is infinitely higher than that. I do not see how, with any appearance of fairness whatever, it can be said we are going to keep these wages in the South at $26 a month in the face of a national average of $52.90 a month and an average outside of the South, which, I imagine, will approximate $70 a month.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President-

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, when the Senator from Georgia shall have concluded, I wish to interrupt the Senator from Florida.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator from Florida said that he would yield to the Senator from Nevada after the Senator from Georgia had concluded. I wondered whether the Senator from Georgia had concluded.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will conclude in my own good time, when I have completed my statement, or when the Senator from Florida asks me to infringe on his time no longer.

Mr. President, I do not see how any person could take the position that Congress should pass a law which fixed a minimum wage for people employed in industry in this country at a certain rate and then say that a much lower rate should obtain in a specific section of the country when it comes to the distribution of works progress funds. I had not intended either to disconcert or annoy the Senator from Nevada by making a statement, and I appreciate the Senator from Florida yielding, but I certainly think what I have said casts some light on this very amendment, when we consider that the average monthly wage throughout the United States is fifty-two dollars and some cents a month, as compared with the minimum wage in the South of $26 a month.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Georgia immensely for his valuable contribution.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'Mahoney in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. PEPPER. Gladly.

Mr. McCARRAN. First of all I wish to express my appreciation to the Senator from Georgia for his rather personal remark. I thought I had always been courteous to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Georgia did not intend to be discourteous to the Senator from Nevada. Nothing was further from his mind.

Mr. McCARRAN. I did not think the Senator would be, but the Senator from Florida said he would yield to me after the Senator from Georgia had concluded, and the Senator from Alabama started to speak.

What I desired to refer to concerning the remark of the Senator from Florida was that, regardless of how we may look upon this matter, does the Senator from Florida believe that this intricate problem, which has now engaged the attention of Federal administrators for the past 4 years, and, indeed, engaged the attention of the Senate for the past 4 years, could be solved between now and the 7th of February, at which time the whole deficiency appropriation must go into effect?

Let me bring to the attention of the Senator from Florida a thought which he may consider in answering my question.

This is a deficiency appropriation and not a regular appropriation, and we are attempting to legislate into a deficiency appropriation a provision which must go into effect between now and the 7th day of February. Assuming that there is cogency in his argument and in the amendment which he has offered, does the Senator believe that the thing could be worked out with any degree of equity between now and the time the measure must go into effect? I may say now that I do not believe it possible. I think the whole proposition is out of the question in a deficiency appropriation. I think it belongs to a regular appropriation.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am glad to answer the pertinent inquiry of the Senator from Nevada. The amendment I have offered does not have the stringency about it that the House provision contains. All my amendment requires is that the W. P. A. immediately establish a minimum wage scale for the lowest class of its work, of the same number of dollars per week, and month, and hour as required by the Labor Standards Act of 1938. It does not require any adjustment, except the prescription of a higher wage than they have heretofore been paying to the lowest class of their workers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let us assume there is a project in Florida, or in Georgia, or in Kentucky, on which a hundred men are being employed. By limiting the number of days per month during which they may work, those 100 men are allowed employment, let us say, at $26 a month. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida is agreed to, the W. P. A. must provide whole-time work for as many of them as are needed on the project at a minimum of, we will say, $44 a month. Let us say that 60 of the 100 who are now working on the $26 rate would be needed if they are working on a whole-time basis. The other 40 must go off the rolls. What happens to them? We will say there are no other projects in the community on which they could be employed.

Mr. PEPPER. I answer the Senator's query by putting a counterquestion in this general way: Is it fair for the lower-paid workers on the W. P. A. in the South to bear the brunt of it all; that the whole burden should fall upon them by reason of the tragic limitation on the funds which have been appropriated by the Congress?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand that the limitation of hours is applicable exclusively to any section of the country. I understand it is applicable all over the country.

Mr. PEPPER. No; I mean that the security wage in the South is only $26 a month, while the security wage in the North is at least $50 a month, and I am endeavoring to bring the security wage in the South up to at least $44 a month. It would still be considerably below the security wage paid in other sections of the country.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am as anxious to raise the security wage in the South as the Senator from Florida is, and to raise it elsewhere also. I have always voted for legislation along that line. But I think we are bound to admit that it cannot be done without more money. It cannot be done with the amount of money which will be available under this appropriation between now and the 1st day of July, and it cannot be done at all, it seems to me, without throwing out of employment a great number of those now on the rolls. I am wondering whether we are really fair in attempting to raise the wages of 60 percent, I will say, of those now on the rolls, and discharge altogether the other 40 percent.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in reply to that suggestion I will ask this question: Is it fair for a minimum wage of $50 a month to prevail in other parts of the country and let them get their proportion of the available funds, and then say, "We are sorry for you $26-a-month workers down there in the South. We should be very glad to help you, but we have no money available." Is that fair? Is it fair for the worker in the North to get $50 or $60 a month as a security wage and for the worker in the South to get only $26 a month as a security wage, and to say, "We are sorry, but we have to give the money to the worker in the North in order to pay him his security wage"?

Between now and March 1 all of us anticipate that the President, by the invitation contained in the committee amendment, will have to lay the problem again before the Congress and be obliged to ask for more money. If it does require more money to make a fair distribution of funds among the relief workers of America, the money should be provided. It is not fair to continue the discrimination that now exists. I know that the Congress, with knowledge of that fact, wants to correct that situation as soon as possible, and not have the abuse continued. Now is the time to begin correcting it, and when the President comes before us, between now and the 1st of March, he can lay before us the experience that has been had.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the President comes back on the 1st of March, he will not come back asking for $150,000,000. He will come back asking for a considerably increased amount, for if we cannot keep employed even the number of men now employed, or who are available for employment under an appropriation of $725,000,000 or of $875,000,000, we shall have to make a larger appropriation based upon full-time employment for all of them, or we shall have to reduce the rolls much more than they will be reduced even in the measure as it now stands before the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not believe that any Senator would want to say to the workers of his State, "I am going to give you only a half day's work so that the men and the women who are needy in the rest of the country may have a whole day's work." There certainly is some fair ratio by which they would all have their proper share.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Georgia, and then I shall yield the floor.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish to express an opinion, not directly on what the Senator from Florida has discussed, but, in my judgment, we should either appropriate sufficient money to equalize the expenditure in some sort of proper ratio among the several States, or else we should abolish it altogether and let all the suffering that would ensue be ratably distributed throughout the United States. I think up until now it has been shown that most of the money has gone to the richest States. As I understand the proposal of the Senator from Florida, the only effect of his amendment would be to increase the hourly compensation for this year to 25 cents per hour, in addition to the other effect it would have on the number of hours of work in Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. There are only 12 States in the Union where minimum wage for any class of labor is less than 25 cents an hour. That embraces the 11 Southern States and the State of Delaware, where it is 24 cents an hour. So, on the hourly basis strictly it should not involve a tremendous amount of money, because I think it is shown that those States have fewer persons on the rolls in proportion to their population than have the other States, where the wages are higher. So, as I have said, it should not involve an enormous amount of money.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I went home and made the wage and hour bill the issue in the campaign. I would not have had any opposition in my State if I had not believed in my heart in that legislation and fought for it. As the result of my position on that legislation I had a strenuous campaign. How can I look my people in the face and say to them that I supported in the National Congress a law which provided that private industry must pay a minimum wage of 25 cents an hour, and must authorize, where possible, a 44-hour week, and then admit that the Works Progress Administration, distributing money of the Federal Government, pays the relief worker doing a given kind of work $26 a month, whereas in the State of New York it pays a worker doing the same kind of work $50 or $60 a month? How can I justify to my constituency that kind of governmental discrimination?

We have tried to lift the wage scale in the South by the wage and hour method, and now we are merely asking the cooperation of the Congress in another sphere, so that we may have the influence of W. P. A. in our effort to accomplish the laudable objective of increasing that wage scale and increasing the purchasing power in the way we tried to do in the Labor Standards Act of 1938.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am wondering if those who are discussing the wage and hour bill in connection with the pending measure realize the fact that throughout the length and breadth of this country today there is a decided discord, and a decided dissatisfaction with the wage and hour bill? I am wondering if those who are using the wage and hour bill as an example of legislation in this country realize the fact that labor throughout the entire extent of America today is dissatisfied with the wage and hour bill for the very reason that I have set forth here today, against the tearing down of the wage structure of America? Why do I make that expression? I am going to use some very homely illustrations, and those who come from the great sections of the West, if they have been out in the West during the campaign that has just passed, will be in entire accord with my views.

Perhaps we should not deal with sectionalism, although I am sorry to say that sectionalism grows out of the very kindly and emphatic expressions of the Senator from Florida. I am sorry it has grown into this joint resolution, because it does not belong in the joint resolution.

The wage and hour law in America has created a sectionalism which will destroy the wage and hour law unless the law is modified. It will destroy the law in no uncertain terms. Why? Because the pay check of the fellow who delves 5,000 feet below the surface of the earth in my section of the country has been reduced under the wage and hour law. Today he is up in arms, and during the campaign he challenged me because I supported the wage and hour bill. He said to me, "Because you supported the wage and hour bill, I am going to vote against you, because to me it meant $30 off my pay check last month." Some who have not gone through the campaign may think about the question for the next campaign.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator from Nevada has said that the source of objection to the wage and hour law was the limitation of the maximum number of hours, and therefore of earnings, which that law imposed. The objection did not arise from the minimum wage which was prescribed by the wage and hour law, did it?

Mr. McCARRAN. If I correctly understand the Senator's question—and I mean to understand it correctly; I do not mean to be captious—

Mr. PEPPER. I am sure of that.

Mr. McCARRAN. If I correctly understand the question, the objection to the wage and hour law is that it tears down the monthly earnings of the higher-paid skilled and semi-skilled workers of the country.

Mr. PEPPER. In what way, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. McCARRAN. It tears it down, because it limits the hours and limits the wage to be paid per hour.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will observe my amendment he will see that there is no element of that kind in my amendment. Let me refresh the Senator's recollection by reading part of my amendment:

It being the sense of the Congress that the minimum wages paid by the Works Progress Administration should not be less than the minimum wages required by the Labor Standards Act of 1938, it is hereby provided that the minimum wages to be paid under this appropriation or the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 shall not be less than the wages fixed by the Labor Standards Act of 1938.

In no way does my amendment tear down any wage scale.

It builds it up.

Mr. McCarran. May I reply to the Senator from Florida that the same argument was used in connection with the wage and hour bill? I voted for the wage and hour bill, and I voted to send the wage and hour bill back to the committee so that those very objections might be corrected. However, they were not corrected. The bill was sent to the House. It was then sent back from the floor of the House to the committee. It was brought out of the committee of the House and passed. The very things the Senator has in mind are the things with which those who run for office in 1940 will be confronted.

Mr. President, I voted for the wage and hour bill, and I would again vote for the wage and hour bill. We should not tear down the wage structure of the country by the wage and hour law. The administration of the wage and hour law has torn down the wage structure of America. Unless we modify or amend the wage and hour law, we shall destroy the living structure and the wage structure of the country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am seeking information. Does the Senator mean that the wage and hour law has reduced the rate of pay per hour, the wage scale, or the total amount of money earned during the month?

Mr. McCARRAN. I will answer the last part of the Senator's question first. It has reduced the total amount earned per month.

Mr. BANKHEAD. By a limitation of hours.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is one element that enters into the question. However, there is another element.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator kindly permit me to finish my answer to the question addressed to me by the Senator from Alabama, and then direct his question to me? I wish now to answer the last part of the question of the Senator from Alabama, if I may, while I have it in mind.

During the consideration of the wage and hour bill, I urged consideration of the matter to which I have referred. In other words, when we fix the minimum of wages, the minimum may, and in all probability will, become the maximum. The minimum has become the maximum, and is becoming the maximum throughout the country through the operation of Administration.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. McCARRAN. I promised to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was attracted by what the Senator said a moment ago about the miners in his State. There having been no reduction in wages per hour or per day under the wage and hour law, in instances in which there has been any change it has been an increase, so as to bring those below the 25-cents-an-hour minimum up to 25 cents. The loss in monthly compensation is due to the fact that at the same wage per hour or per day the men are not permitted to work as many hours as they were prior to the enactment of the law. Is not that true?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct in part. I want to be fair with the Senator. However, it is also true from another angle. The minimum has been utilized as an avenue or a lever to enable the employer to say: "This is the minimum and we are going to resort to the minimum."

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, under the law, wherever industries were already paying above the minimum of 25 cents, I do not understand there has been any reduction, because the law made no change in their status. The only change in wages with which I am familiar is in those cases in which less than 25 cents was paid, and the wage had to be brought up to the minimum.

There would not be any inducement for a man who is paying more than 25 cents to come down to 25, because he voluntarily pays more than 25 cents. He would not come down to 25 cents because he is compelled to pay at least 25 cents. So, I think it is very largely true that whenever there has been a loss in the total monthly compensation it has resulted in cases in which men worked more than 44 hours per week, and had their working week reduced to 44 hours. So they have been denied the additional compensation which they would have received if they had been permitted to work 50 hours instead of 44.

Mr. McCARRAN. Of course, the Senator's views do not fit exactly the conditions I have in mind. Let me say that the minimum pay in the metalliferous mines of the country is approximately 50 cents an hour. It runs higher than that in some sections. The employers in certain localities have taken advantage of the provisions of the wage and hour law to reduce the pay checks of the miners.

Mr. BARKLEY. What was formerly the number of hours per day?

Mr. McCARRAN. Eight hours always. Mr. BARKLEY. So that a 6-day week would mean that the men were working 48 hours a week.

Mr. McCARRAN. Forty-eight hours if they worked a 6-day week.

Mr. BARKLEY. They now work only 44 hours.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. So they have been reduced 4 hours per week. At 50 cents an hour that makes $2 a week, or about $8 a month. The amount of the reduction would depend on the hourly wage they received.

Mr. McCARRAN. That would be correct under certain conditions. However, I do not think the Senator grasps the whole situation. We have miners who work 6 days a week 8 hours a day. Suppose those miners are working 100 miles from some center. They do not want to have their hours limited, but their hours are limited by force of law. They do not want those hours limited, because they have nothing to do with the hours of idleness. They cannot go anywhere. They cannot do anything. They are simply idle. What is more than that, our metalliferous mines work three shifts of 8 hours, which means continuous operation throughout the entire 24 hours of the day. We have destroyed that whole program and we have reduced the pay check of the miner.

Mr. BARKLEY. The mining communities referred to are not as active and attractive as they used to be, according to my understanding, if at the present time the miners cannot find anywhere to go or anything to do during the idle hours.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is very true.

Mr. BARKLEY. It may be that life has simmered down to a dull affair, so that there is nothing to attract them.

Mr. McCARRAN. There is nothing to attract them except $20 gold pieces.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. McCARRAN. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know that I have anything to say. However, I think the Senator from Nevada is correct. The same complaint has been made to me by miners and smelter men in my State. The wage and hour law has upset the whole standard by which they were employed, and there has been much confusion. I am told that in some instances the loss has amounted to as much as $25 or $30 a month.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Now, Mr. President, to continue with this matter-

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. PEPPER. The principle that the minimum brings down the maximum has not worked out in the W. P. A., has it? The minimum in the South is $26 a month, and the maximum in other parts of the country is immensely higher.

Mr. McCARRAN. Of course, Mr. President, if I may say so to the Senator from Florida, if we are going to deal with sectionalism in this relief measure, we are simply lost.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, does not the Senator think the relief measure does that very thing, judging from what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell] developed here today? We are trying to get away from it, not trying to get into it. We are trying to get out of it.

Mr. McCARRAN. I realize that, but I think we are dealing with a legislative principle if it is legislation at all. As a matter of fact, without meaning to be captious in this expression-I hope I shall not be construed as being captious-I think you are dealing with your whole history now and that you are working out of it.

Mr. President, if this amendment is to come to a vote this afternoon, it not having been printed, I shall hope to hold the Senate for a discussion of the matter at length. As I understand—and I hope the Senator from Florida will correct me if I am wrong—the amendment has not been printed. Am I wrong in that?

Mr. PEPPER. It has not been printed.

SEVERAL SENATORS. It will be voted down.

Mr. McCARRAN. If it is to be voted down, very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER ].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to have settled the point which the Senator from Nevada has raised. Is it necessary for an amendment to be printed before it may be voted on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not necessary.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I never heard that statement made before, but I wanted to be satisfied about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is unnecessary.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I submit the following unanimous-consent request:

I ask unanimous consent that with the exception of the amendment which is to be offered by the able Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], from now—5 o'clock—until midnight no Senator shall speak more than five times or more than 1 hour on any amendment or any subject, and that all speeches from now until midnight shall have some relation to the subject matter of the joint resolution. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on the precedent of the record made by the Senator from West Virginia, I object.

[Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. Pepper.] [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. PEPPER. I call for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I inquire the status of amendments, with a view to trying to decide whether we shall continue with the session tonight or go over until Monday?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I have a brief amendment which I should like to offer.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Arizona has one, and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has one which I understand will be accepted by the committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I have one.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have an amendment which, I am informed, will be accepted by the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwellenbach] has one, and so has the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark]. If all these amendments are to be offered, and will involve as much discussion as the others, the Senate might as well go over until Monday.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. I understood that the Senator in charge of the bill had no objection to the amendment I desire to offer. I doubt if there will be any objection to it. Therefore, I should like to offer it at this time. If it leads to debate, of course I shall not push it tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield for that purpose?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield; yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 10, after the colon, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Works Progress Administrator is authorized from time to time, out of the funds appropriated in this joint resolution, to use such amount or amounts, not to exceed in the aggregate $15,000,000, as may be determined by the Administrator to be necessary for the purpose of providing direct relief for needy persons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BYRNES. I hope the Senator from Colorado will accept the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, as one member of the committee, I think the amendment is entirely acceptable.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho whether this money is to be allocated in accordance with the number of persons on relief in each State or at the discretion of the Administrator?

Mr. BORAH. At the discretion of the Administrator, to take care of needy persons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho is agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if we can finish the consideration of the joint resolution tonight the Senate can recess or adjourn until next Wednesday. Otherwise we shall have to come back here on Monday. There is nothing on the calendar. Are Senators willing to stay here, if possible, an hour or so and finish the joint resolution, or would they rather have it go over until Monday?

Mr. NEELY (and other Senators). Let us finish it.

Mr. BARKLEY. The consensus seems to be that we should finish the consideration of the measure tonight.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 17, after the figures "1939", it is proposed to insert the following:

But this provise shall not apply to administrative positions the compensation of which is payable from the allocations made under section 3 of said Emergency Relief Act in those instances where the incumbents of such positions subsequent to February 28, 1939, will not be compensated from emergency relief funds.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, if I may explain this rather unimportant amendment for just a minute, it involves only about 100 persons employed by the Public Health Service.

Last year the Public Health Service started a national health survey. They employed, as a W. P. A. project, several thousand persons. Last year they realized that they were going to finish the general work of survey, and that in February of this year they could start the definite work of tabulating the results of their investigations throughout the country.

The Public Health Service prepared and submitted to the President an Executive order blanketing these 100 persons into the civil service. They were the ones who had been chosen from the corps of several thousand throughout the country as being the most efficient. Instead of issuing that Executive order the President issued the general Executive order which is eliminated by the provisions of the joint resolution.

Now, we find that the Public Health Service, which wants to go ahead with its own funds appropriated by the Congress last year for this work as a regular part of the work of the Service, is in such a position that on the 1st of February these persons must be put off, because they are through with their W. P. A. project. They will not be employed as W. P. A. employees at all. They will be employed as regular employees of the Public Health Service; and they cannot be employed, because they are not under civil service. The answer may be made that they could take examinations, and so forth; but that would mean a delay, and it would also mean the possibility that the persons who have been chosen because of the fact that they have shown particular ability on the W. P. A. project—100 out of several thousand—would be deprived of their work.

The amendment does not involve the expenditure of any money. It merely involves the question of whether or not this work shall be finished by the Public Health Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have another amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let us vote on this one first.

Mr. McCARRAN. I may offer my amendment as an amendment to that offered by the Senator from Washington. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask that my amendment be read and inserted in the proper place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada to the amendment of the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 6, it is proposed to strike out "$83,000,000" and to substitute therefor the following:

$86,000,000 of which $3,000,000 shall be allocated for the purpose of operating projects for the employment of unemployed workers with suitable railroad and express company clerical experience (actual need to be considered established by the fact of unemployment) for the transcription and compilation of records of railroad employment and compensation prior to January 1, 1937.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will state it.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Is it possible for the Senator from Nevada to offer that as an amendment to my amendment? My amendment is on page 3, line 17, on an entirely different subject. Now the Senator from Nevada offers an amendment to line 6 on the same page and seeks to attach it to my amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I address myself to that subject? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized, although the Chair will state that so far as the Chair is advised at this time it does not appear that the amendment of the Senator from Nevada is a proper amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, addressing myself to the general subject, the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington is, to use the common parlance, an earmarking amendment. In other words, it proposes to earmark certain moneys to be applied along certain lines by the W. P. A. Administrator.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. McCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I assure the Senator it does not involve earmarking funds. It involves funds appropriated in the regular appropriation bill last year for the Public Health Service. It is not a question of earmarking funds at all.

Service. It is not a question of earmarking funds at all. Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct, and my amendment applies in the same direction. In other words, $60,000,000 was appropriated last year for the identical line of work, that appropriation was considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and the Senator from Arizona offered an amendment along the lines of my amendment which was voted down in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, I now address myself to the proposed amendment to the amendment. There are today in this country some 25,000 who are out of employment who were formerly employed in the railroad service of the United States. In other words, they were in clerical positions in the rail service of this country. All we want to do is to see to it that they may, perchance, under this appropriation be given an opportunity of working, because they are skilled in certain lines.

If I may designate, they were clerks, they were station agents, they were telegraphers. They were engaged in a classified service in which they had put in their entire time up to the date when the rail service of this country was cut down. Today they cannot find employment in America because the best years of their lives have been devoted to their particular vocation.

In view of the fact that the Railway Retirement Board finds it necessary to employ a skilled class along that very line, but have not money with which to employ this class, this amendment would provide that the Railway Retirement Board might employ so many of that particular class as was necessary to bring together the statistics required by the Railway Retirement Board so that it might determine who was entitled to be kept on the retirement list. That is all the amendment provides.

It is an earmarking amendment, I am willing to admit, but if we are going to earmark at all, let us earmark along the lines where men have no chance at all to get occupation or employment because they have put in their whole lives at this vocation, and have not a chance to go into the harvest fields or into clerical positions, save and except those clerical positions to which they have devoted their entire lives. There are 25,000 or more of this class in this country. Let us employ them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Mc-Carran] cannot be attached to the amendment of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwellenbach]. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Washington a question. This amendment has nothing on earth to do with relief work, has it?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No; but-

Mr. CONNALLY. Why does he offer it at this time?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Because of the fact that conditions require this action by Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why should we pick out this group and prefer them above all others in a measure with which the amendment has nothing on earth to do?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. This joint resolution is the measure which makes it impossible for this work to be continued. This is the natural and logical place to make this provision.

Mr. CONNALLY. They can continue the work.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. They cannot continue the work after the 1st of February because of the fact that, in order for the Treasury Department to pay them, they must have the status of civil-service employees.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that there are thousands on the civil-service list capable of doing this work? What the Senator wants to do is to legislate this particular group into the civil service.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator can call it legislating this particular group into the civil service if he cares to, but that is not correct. The fact is that a hundred of these people were chosen out of a group of several thousand because of their ability and diligence. The Public Health Service wanted to keep them. A special Executive order was prepared, but because of the fact that last June the President issued a general Executive order he did not sign the special order, and they have been proceeding under that condition until this measure came in.

Congress will wipe out the general Executive order, and as a result these people will not be able to continue in that work. It is not merely a matter of these individuals; it is a matter of the work of the Public Health Service being discontinued for a month or two until the examinations could be prepared. It is the pending measure which makes it necessary, in order to have the people brought in under civil service at this particular time. There is no intention to single out anybody except as conditions have made it necessary.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not know anything about these individuals, and I am not hostile to the Senator's intention, but this is palpably an effort to pick out a hundred people who have already had the benefit of W. P. A. It is not a W. P. A. matter at all; it has nothing on earth to do with it. I might as well offer an amendment to cover into the civil service a block of fellows under the War Department. These persons have not a civil-service status. We are asked to legislate them in ahead of everybody else who has gone through the regular routine and has waited perhaps for 6 months or a year to get a job. We are asked to pick these people out and say, "You are to be preferred ahead of everybody else. We are going to put you into the civil service." It is not right.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. But these people would have been under civil service last June if the special Executive order had been signed.

Mr. CONNALLY. All that is necessary is for the President to sign that little Executive order. He could sign that just as easily as he can sign this joint resolution. I think the Senator ought not at this late hour, when we are trying to adjourn, bring in a matter which has no relation on earth to relief or W. P. A., seeking to put these people in a preferred status. I am opposed to the amendment for that reason, and for that reason alone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwellenbach].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 3, line 6, to strike out "$83,000,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$93,000,000."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I can very briefly explain the proposed amendment. It is merely to correct a clerical mistake made in the House of Representatives.

Last year we appropriated $1,350,000,000, of which we provided that $60,000,000 might be used on Federal projects. In submitting the Budget estimate for $875,000,000, the Budget recommended that $40,000,000 be likewise set aside.

In making the reduction the House committee reduced the $875,000,000 by 17 percent. Instead of cutting 17 percent off of $40,000,000, as estimated by the Budget, they cut 17 percent off a hundred million. That is how we get the figure $83,000,000 in the bill. It was by taking 17 percent off a hundred million dollars.

I want this reduction made proportionate to the reduction in other Budget estimates. The Budget estimate for the whole appropriation was $875,000,000. The Budget estimate for this purpose was $40,000,000, and so the figure should be $93,000,000, and I therefore offer this amendment.

I shall not go into the merits of the use of this money. I think the Senate understands thoroughly that it is used in the employment of W. P. A. laborers in various Federal projects.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I now offer my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 6, where it is proposed to strike out "$83,000,000" and to insert "$93,000,000", it is proposed to add the following:

Of which $3,000,000 shall be allocated for the purpose of operating projects for the employment of unemployed workers with suitable railroad and express company clerical experience (actual need to be considered established by the fact of unemployment) for the transcription and compilation of records of railroad employment and compensation prior to January 1, 1937.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I am sorry I cannot agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada. To my mind it is not germane. It is an independent matter. The Senator from Nevada desires to earmark $3,000,000 of the money that may be allocated to Federal projects, and to use it to employ persons elsewhere, and not in general W. P. A. work. If the Senator wishes to take $3,000,000 from the general W. P. A. fund and employ certain persons on W. P. A. projects, that would be legitimate. Why does the Senator wish to take the money away from Federal projects? It is quite clear to me that his amendment should not be attached to the provision to which the Senator wishes to attach it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona not agree that the project to which the Senator from Nevada is addressing himself is a Federal project? Of course, it is a Federal project. It cannot be anything else. I am seeking to allocate $3,000,000 for the purposes set forth in the amendment.

Mr. HAYDEN. Then there is the general objection of earmarking, in addition to what I have said.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator is earmarking.

Mr. HAYDEN. No; I am not. I merely propose to continue a project that has heretofore been carried on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I wish to be heard. I do not want unduly to take up the time of the Senate, but I say that the amendment I have offered is germane to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona. The amendment simply proposes to allocate $3,000,000 of the $93,000,000, which the Senator from Arizona earmarks in his amendment, to the employment of a certain class of labor.

The amendment of the Senator from Arizona provides for employment of a certain class of Federal labor under a Federal project. It has been going on during the entire time that W. P. A. has been going on. What I seek by my amendment is to have the Railway Retirement Board employ certain persons whom they desire to employ, and who are entirely qualified to carry on the work; a certain number of persons who have been forced out of employment by reason of being discharged from the railway service. That is all there is to it.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, under the amendment I have offered not one man would be employed to work for any department of the Government in a clerical capacity such as the Senator from Nevada suggests. My amendment simply provides for the employment of common labor which otherwise would be employed by a county or city or town doing ordinary laboring work on a Government project. It provides for the employment of common labor available in some community on a nearby Federal project.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, why does not the Senator from Nevada offer his amendment as a separate, individual amendment?

Mr. McCARRAN. I shall do that later.

Mr. BARKLEY. It certainly is not germane to the pending

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada withdraw his amendment to the amendment?

Mr. McCARRAN. I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], on page 3, line 6, to strike out "$83,000,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$93,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS rose.

Mr. McCARRAN. Now, Mr. President, I offer my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada has offered an amendment which has been pending for an hour. Two or three times it has been sidetracked in order that we might vote on some other amendment. I am friendly to my friend upon the other side of the aisle [Mr. Davis], but I submit that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada is entitled to a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Chair has been trying to recognize the Senators as their names appear on the list which is before the Chair.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania does not intend to discuss his amendment. He simply desire a vote upon it. I hope the Chair will recognize the Senator from Nevada when action has been had upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the joint resolution it is proposed to insert the following new section:

SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated to the Works Progress Administration, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in addition to any other sum appropriated in this joint resolution, the sum of $150,000,000, but such sum of $150,-000,000 shall not be paid out of the Treasury unless and until there is filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, by the special committee hereinafter provided for, a certificate certifying that in the opinion of the committee (1) a full and complete investigation has been made, under the supervision of such committee, of the abuses which have occurred at any time in the administration of the Works Progress Administration; (2) there have been removed from the rolls of the Works Progress Administration the names of all persons who are not eligible for, and entitled to, employment by the Works Progress Administration; and (3) the expenditure of such additional sum is necessary in order to provide adequate work relief and relief: sum is necessary in order to provide adequate work rener and rener: Provided further, That such investigation shall include, but shall not be limited to, an investigation of any alleged instances of (1) pernicious political activity by any person whose compensation, or any part thereof, has been paid from funds appropriated or allocated to the Works Progress Administration; (2) granting employment with such funds to persons who were not eligible for and entitled thereto; (3) refusal, because of any partisan political or any personal reasons, to grant employment with such funds to persons who were eligible for and entitled thereto; and (4) padding of the relief rolls with the names of relatives, personal friends, or political allies of any employee of the Works Progress Administration or any other person: Provided further, That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, with the advice and consent of the Senate, five persons (not more than three of whom shall be members of the same political party), who shall compose the membership of the special committee heretofore referred to and who shall serve without compensation, other than reimbursement for necessary traveling expenses incurred by them in the perform-ance of their duties as members of such committee: Provided further, That for the purpose of conducting such investigation the special committee is authorized to expend not in excess of $250,000 of the sum of $725,000,000 appropriated by this joint resolution, and for the purpose of conducting such investigation may employ and fix the compensation of such persons as it may deem neces-sary, and may accept, from States and political subdivisions thereof sary, and may accept, from States and political subdivisions thereof and from private individuals, contributions of funds and uncompensated services: Provided further, That the investigation in each State shall be carried on under the supervision of a board to be composed of five nonpartisan residents of such State, and the investigation to be carried on in any political subdivision of such State which the committee may designate as a unit for the purposes of such investigation shall be carried on under the supervision of a board to be composed of five nonpartisan residents of such political subdivision: Provided further, That the members of any such board for any State or political subdivision thereof shall be appointed by the committee from two lists of 10 eligible persons, one of which shall be submitted to such committee by each of the one of which shall be submitted to such committee by each of the members of the Senate from such State, but not more than 3 persons shall be selected from the list submitted by any such Senator: Provided further, That no officer or employee of the United States, a State, or a political subdivision of a State shall be appointed to, or serve on, any such board: Provided further, That the members of such boards shall receive no compensation for their services other than reimbursement for traveling expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties as members of such boards: Provided further, That the special committee shall make a report to Congress not later than January 1, 1940, with respect to the investigation herein provided for."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, there are three essential parts of the plan I have suggested for the improvement of work relief administration. I wish briefly to explain these three factors as shown in my amendment.

In the first place, provision is made for an additional $150,-000,000 for work relief to accord with the amount asked in the Budget. There has been much discussion as to how much may be required, and great difference of opinion has developed on this point. In view of the fact that this is relatively a small amount compared to the vast sums which have already been expended, I hold that the further appropriation of $150,000,000 is not in itself the major consideration at the present time. I should be willing to vote for this additional appropriation, although some question still persists with respect to it, if by my vote I could make sure we have started down the road of the nonpartisan administration of work relief, with the savings we have a right to expect from nonpartisan administration.

I should not wish to give anyone occasion to say that the reorganization of work relief on a thoroughly nonpartisan basis had been handicapped or made impossible simply because of the lack of a sufficient appropriation. Surely $150 .-000,000 is not a large sum to spend in the light of the many billion dollars already spent in a partisan way. We who desire and have long desired the nonpartisan administration of work relief and all forms of public spending should not now suffer defeat simply for lack of $150,000,000 asked for in the Budget. With proper provision made for this sum, in addition to that already voted by the House and confirmed by the Senate, would there be anyone who could justifiably say that the orderly reorganization of work relief on a nonpartisan basis is not then the first order of business among us?

My amendment provides that the $150,000,000 asked to conform with the Budget shall be made available upon the completion of a nonpartisan investigation of past and present abuses in W. P. A. If Congress should take prompt action in this matter, I see no reason why this investigation cannot be completed within 3 months. There is no real reason for delay. I am willing to do my part. I am confident that tens of thousands of public-spirited citizens throughout the Nation stand willing to do their part. The chief responsibility for action now rests with the President. I want to make it clear beyond all question that if the President shall continue to take no positive action looking to the removal of waste resulting from the administration of work relief through selfish partisan politics, as shown in Pennsylvania, he should be held responsible for the pitiful plight of the unemployed worker driven off W. P. A. rolls. If every State in the Union, in proportion to the number of its unemployed, is subject to as much partisanship and needless waste in work-relief administration as is Pennsylvania, I am confident we should have no difficulty in soon saving $150,000,000 through the use of nonpartisan boards to replace the unfair and expensive partisan administration which now prevails.

Mr. President, I do not favor and I have never favored the appointment of political partisans for the administration of relief or work relief. It is a well-known fact that in Pennsylvania we have had a partisan administration of relief and work relief which is thoroughly disgusting to any fairminded citizen. Petty partisans have been placed in fat political jobs, who did not need them, and never would have had them except for their partisan connections. At the same time, business executives who have been accustomed in ordinary times to earn $10,000 and more through their own abilities have been reduced to penury. These very men, with sound administrative ability, are now available for the administration of work relief on a nonpartisan basis. They are available in every locality. They could be found for this service in any number required, and their services could be secured without paying them the princely sums now being extracted by highly paid partisans. My amendment looks to the purging of the rolls of those who are not entitled to relief and to the savings of administrative cost. Competent administrative personnel can now be found from relief rolls in a large percentage of cases. The waste and the partisanship which now prevail have produced an intolerable condition. Until this condition is improved and until partisanship is removed from the administraton of work relief, the primary responsibility for the break-down of W. P. A. will rest, in my judgment, on the President.

Mr. President, during the last election campaign I made the partisan political administration of work relief one of the major issues in my campaign for reelection in Pennsylvania. The Republican candidate for Governor and I asked for the restoration of the antimacing law which the Earle administration had wiped out. The first bill to be drawn by the attorney general of the present State administration in Pennsylvania for assembly enactment is an antimacing bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer of today entitled the "Antimacing Bill Must Be Passed."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer of January 25, 1939] ANTIMACING BILL MUST BE PASSED

The antimacing bill introduced in the legislature with the sponsorship of the James administration is intended to eradicate an evil practice that has disgraced this State: The political exploitation of those forced by poverty to accept public aid.

It would outlaw the solicitation of contributions by any party organization from relief recipients, a method of enriching campaign chests that actually means the bludgeoning of money from these pitifully needy persons, under direct or implied threat of withdrawn relief.

It is difficult to see how anyone would dare stand in the way of a measure of this kind. Governor James made antimacing legislation one of his principal preelection pledges to the people of Pennsylvania. It is to his credit that he has made this bill the first to be drawn by his attorney general for assembly enactment.

The measure replaces spikes in State election laws that were extracted 2 years ago on orders from the Democratic State organization. The amended election code then passed by the legislature excluded without any fanfare provisions previously in force pro-tion. The amended election code then passed by the legislature excluded, without any fanfare, provisions previously in force prohibiting the levying of political assessments upon those in the employ of the State government or any of its subdivisions.

The effect of this politically revised statute was to leave the door wide open for campaign exactions on a scale never before possible. What was much worse it paved the way for forced contributions to the dominant party organization from those on relief, both direct relief and work relief.

For political jobholders, given places on public pay rolls as rewards for political services, to contribute to the support of the party organizations which made their jobs possible has been taken more or less for granted. Such payment of campaign funds, however, is presumed to be voluntary. The clubbing of jobholders into line to fork over their contributions to party war chests has not, one may safely assume, been necessary in most

But forcing relief recipients to hand over to political overlords their tribute in the form of dollars they desperately need for the sustenance of their families is vicious and unjustifiable. An ordinary political jobholder may regard it as the accepted thing to share in some way in the campaign expenses of his party. But there is no reason to believe that those depending upon the dole, or earning their daily bread by working for the W. P. A., would contribute to any party campaign except under duress.

These unfortunates are receiving public assistance because they imperatively need it, because they are unable to find employment. The money for their relief comes from all the taxpayers, regardless of political affiliation. No party organization is putting up the funds for the W. P. A. or the State dole. Certainly no relief recipient should have to pay tribute to any partisan organization through the medium of forced contributions.

But it is a sad fact that they have had to do precisely that. We have seen W. P. A. workers welded into a political machine. We have seen political leaders treating relief workers as just so many potential votes, to be lined up at election time. We have seen needy reliefers subjected to wholesale political maching, with pressure applied not only to register and vote a certain way, but to yield some portion of their meager allowance to assist and sustain a partisan cause. But forcing relief recipients to hand over to political overlords partisan cause.

Flagrantly as this abuse has existed in the last year or two, of more importance is the danger of its further expansion. Unless curbed, the practice of political extortion directed at the poor could become an accepted technique of election campaigning, with the party organization that has the power of life and death over relief disbursements forcing the unemployed to come across with votes and money—or else.

The bill now before the house at Harrisburg, if enacted, would The bill now before the house at harrisburg, it enacted, would effectively bar relief macing. It provides a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for 1 year, or both, for any political committee or any person demanding money for political purposes from anyone receiving relief; from any State, county, or city employee; or from any person or corporation having a contract, license, or permit from the State or its subdivisions.

To become effective of course, such a law must be rigidly en-

To become effective, of course, such a law must be rigidly enforced. Governor James' well-known attitude on the macing question is a guaranty that the present State administration will do its utmost to make the antimacing measure mean what it says. It should be promptly approved.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, during the heat of the last campaign and election the press of the Nation carried an extended account of the President's belief in the use of local nonpartisan supervisory boards in the administration of relief and work relief. Since the election is over we have heard nothing more about it. Nothing has been done to remove the highly paid political appointees from W. P. A. rolls. We still have them in Pennsylvania. It is obvious beyond all contradiction that the American people do not desire any needy person to go without adequate relief. The American people believe that relief should be provided for those who need it and are entitled to it, and jobs should be provided for those who want them. The American people want the unemployed to have a fair deal, but they are now in rebellion against highly paid partisans who profit at the expense of the hungry.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the article by Dr. George Gallup on Politics in Relief published in the Pittsburg Press for January 21, 1939.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Press of January 22, 1939]

AMERICA SPEAKS—VOTERS HIT POLITICS IN RELIEF—SHEPPARD COM-MITTEE REPORT WINS PRAISE FROM BOTH PARTIES—RANK AND FILE DEMOCRATS AND REPUBLICANS JOIN IN FIGHT ON CAPITOL HILL— SEVERAL PLANS ARE FAVORED BY PUBLIC IN SURVEYS

(By Dr. George Gallup, Director, American Institute of Public Opinion)

New York, January 21.—The determined drive in Congress to take politics out of relief—a drive which began the very first day of the session—is overwhelmingly approved by the Nation's voters, the majority of whom have never been wholly satisfied with the administration of relief under the New Deal.

Those facts are revealed in a series of more than 15 public-opinion surveys on the relief question conducted in recent months by the American Institute of Public Opinion. The latest soundings, as well as earlier surveys, indicate a widespread desire for changes in the technique of relief administration, a belief in strong laws and policies to stamp politics out of relief, and a conviction that relief must be looked upon as a permanent Government problem. The campaign in Congress for reform of the relief administration finds the public

in a most receptive mood.

The testimony of Harry Hopkins, the reports of the Sheppard and Byrnes committees on relief abuses, and the revival of the Hatch amendment have all focused attention on the relief issue in recent weeks. Actually, however, public dissatisfaction with relief methods dates back for many months. Almost a year ago an Institute survey found that a large majority of voters—about 8 in every 10—had become convinced that politics colored the handling of relief in their communities. There was a virtually unanimous vote that such abuses should be eliminated.

In the course of testing opinion on the relief issue, the Institute collected the public's views on many specific plans for eliminating collected the public's views on many specific plans for eliminating politics from the W. P. A. Its latest study, just completed, measured sentiment on a number of the proposals made by the Shepard committee which investigated abuses in the last election. Other surveys have covered the principle of the Hatch amendment reintroduced at this session, as well as other aspects of the problem.

problem.

From all these studies a composite picture of public sentiment can be drawn about as follows:

1. A large majority of voters believe that all relief officials should be put under civil service as a means of eliminating politics and favoritism in appointments. This vote is a reflection of widespread public faith, often noted in institute surveys, in the civil-service system as conceed to the spoils system.

public faith, often noted in institute surveys, in the civil-service system as opposed to the spoils system.

2. Nearly 9 in every 10 voters favor a drastic law against allowing anybody to influence the vote of persons on relief, either through coercion or promise of reward. The Hatch amendment, which failed to pass in the last session, sought to accomplish this reform.

3. By a vote of more than 7 to 3 the public believes that neither persons on relief nor relief officials should be allowed to contribute more at a publical campaign—two of the recommendations of persons on relief nor relief officials should be allowed to contribute money to a political campaign—two of the recommendations of the Sheppard committee. The voters also support 6 to 4 the committee's proposal that all Federal employees be prohibited from contributing money to campaigns.

4. A large majority of voters—73 percent—feel that relief would be better administered by a bipartisan board than by a single administrator, as at present. This plan, sponsored by Senator Balley, of North Carolina, is favored by voters chiefly because they think that control by a bipartisan board will help to eliminate graft and political preference. Even Democratic voters approve the plan.

One fact emphasized by the survey results in that attitudes on the relief question cut across party lines. The pattern is not one where the rank and file of Democrats think one way and the Republicans another. Instead the surveys find that both camps are equally anxious to see politics and graft purged from relief.

For example, large majorities of both Democrats and Republicans think it should be considered a crime for a relief official to try to influence the vote of persons on relief. Bringing relief officials under civil service is favored by more than 70 percent of both Republicans and Democrats, who also agree that reliefers should not contribute money to political campaigns and that relief funds should be administered by a bipartisan board.

Thus there is every indication that New Deal Senators and Congressmen who advocate reforms in relief are carrying out the wishes of their own party members, in addition to forestalling criticism from their Republican foes.

In the early days of the New Deal there was much debate as to from their Republican foes.

In the early days of the New Deal there was much debate as to whether it was the Government's responsibility to take care of needy persons out of work. Recent Institute studies show that this principle is now a definite part of the social philosophy of our times. Approximately 70 percent of voters declare that the Government should take responsibility for the jobless. About the same number think that the relief problem is no temporary phenomenon, but that relief appropriations will have to continue permanently.

The majority also feel, however, that the Government is doing enough for the unemployed. When the institute asked voters recently, "Do you think that people on relief in your community are getting as much as they should?" a majority of 71 percent said "Yes." And other surveys indicate that the dominant pull of public opinion at the moment is more in the direction of reducing relief appropriations than in the direction of raising them.

A little, 31 percent. Quite a bit, 53 percent.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, Pennsylvania is a great industrial State. Our industrial leaders have been criticized from time to time, and some have said they are hard-boiled in regard to relief. But I wish to make clear that I know of no industrial leader who wants to cut off work-relief funds now so as to deprive low-paid workers of their jobs and their daily bread. Many industrial leaders have informed me they have no quarrel with the low-paid worker, and many of them know that he is frequently underpaid. But like all fairminded citizens, they justly resent the expenditure of large sums of money for the partisan political administration of W. P. A.

My amendment looks to the creation at the hands of the Vice President of a national nonpartisan work relief board of five members for the purpose of coordinating the findings of similar State and local boards throughout the Nation. The national board, assisted by State and local boards, will conduct the investigation which is suggested in my amendment. All members will serve without pay, other than reimbursement for necessary traveling expenses which they may incur in the performance of their duties. It will be for them a patriotic duty. It is expected that their appointment will be nonpartisan and that all of their activities will be carried on in that spirit and for the public welfare.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I am urging the adoption of this amendment in behalf of the worthy unemployed, hoping to end partisan administration of relief, and to help effect substantial savings for the taxpayers of the Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIST.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I now offer my amendment. I think perhaps the language will have to be changed, and I ask that it be changed appropriately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 6, after the figures "$93,000,000", it is proposed to add the following language:

Of which $3,000,000 shall be allocated for the purpose of operating or which $3,000,000 shall be allocated for the purpose of operating projects for the employment of unemployed workers with suitable railroad and express company clerical experience (actual need to be considered established by the fact of unemployment) for the transcription and compilation of records of railroad employment and compensation prior to January 1, 1937.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate further. I shall submit the amendment on the statements I have heretofore made.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada if the language of his amendment would not change the requirement as to the expenditure of all other funds. Is it his intention that the money should be used for the carrying on of work on a project just as all other projects are, with persons certified from the relief rolls?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the language of the amendment is different, and it would write a new principle into the relief measure. The language says "unemployed," and not only in need, as the measure provides.

Mr. McCARRAN. We have in this country today some 25,000 or 30,000 persons who have given their entire lives and careers to railroad work, in clerical positions. There is not a place in W. P. A. where they fit in. They are not pick-and-shovel fellows and they are not of the higher class. They simply are those who could fit into a place that is now available by reason of the necessity that is attendant upon the work of the Railroad Retirement Board. The Railway Retirement Board finds that they need a large group of clerical assistants to determine who is entitled to retirement. Those who have been dismissed or discharged from clerical positions in the railway service are available, and they are skilled and classified along that line. The Railway Retirement Board wishes to employ them under this appropriation and with this money, and that is all that my amendment provides for. I hope I have sufficiently answered the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have great sympathy with the objective of the Senator from Nevada, but I think the Senate should know that while allocations to departments have been made in other measures, and are made in the pending measure, that money can be used only for the purpose of giving employment to persons who are entitled to employment by reason of their certification on the relief rolls. Many of the other departments received allocations of money. and they used W. P. A. employees. However, this amendment proposes to use relief money for an entirely different purpose, for the employment of persons who are not certified from the relief rolls. I should much prefer to vote for whatever amount of money is needed for the Railroad Retirement Board to carry on this work, and to see included in any bill whatever amount is necessary rather than to establish the principle of using this money for the employment of persons in an entirely different classification.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand the situation. However, the Senator realizes that the Railroad Retirement Board works in accordance with the general law requiring that those whom they employ come in under the relief certification and under unemployment certification.

The Senator says he would be glad to vote for this appropriation under a different caption. I have heard that statement made time and time again, and yet when we get to that caption the Senator finds another excuse.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that I have never heard of this proposal before, and therefore the Senator has not heard me oppose it.

Mr. McCARRAN. No; I have not heard the Senator from South Carolina opposing it.

Let me again clarify the situation, if I may. Today we have unemployed and on relief, or in need of relief, those who have been employed in clerical positions in the rail service of America throughout the entire length and breadth of the country, but who can find no employment elsewhere. other words, they do not fit in.

Mr. BYRNES. Would the Senator have any objection to having the same rule apply that applies to all other departments employing persons and paying them out of these funds?

Mr. McCARRAN. The same rule now applies, because today we have $60,000,000 appropriated under the existing law.

Mr. BYRNES. What I am saying to the Senator is that I should urge the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], as chairman of the subcommittee, to accept the amendment if it were framed in the same language that applies to the other Federal Departments.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is all I want. That is the reason why I tried to tie my amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator from Arizona understands what I am referring to. The language of the amendment makes it an entirely different classification.

Mr. HAYDEN. It does indeed.

Mr. BYRNES. If the Senator from Nevada has no objection to putting such employees on the same footing with all others, I think we can get together.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. With that understanding, let the amendment be accepted by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that it might be well to accept the amendment and change it in conference, if necessary. We know what the Senator from Nevada has in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. NEELY. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 17, after the words "January 10, 1939", it is proposed to insert a comma and the following:

Provided further, That this proviso shall not apply to positions the compensation of which is payable from the appropriation made in subsection (3) of section 1 of said Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938, unless such proviso is made applicable to positions the compensation of which is payable from the appropriations made in subsections (5), (6), (7), and (8) of such section 1.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, that amendment is intended to put employees under subsection (3) on the same basis as those under subsections (5), (6), (7), and (8). I have conferred with the Senator from Colorado. He realizes the situation, and I understand that he agrees to let the amendment go to conference.

Mr. ADAMS. That is the understanding. The amendment puts the group referred to in exactly the same situation as the groups under subsections (5), (6), (7), and (8). We have stricken out those groups, and unless they are reinstated this group also will go out.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct. It is so provided in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the end of the bill it is pro-

SEC. 8. None of the funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or by this joint resolution shall be used for the manufacture, purchase, or construction of any naval vessel, any armament, munitions, or implement of war, or for the construction of quarters for military or naval forces; and no funds herein appropriated or authorized shall be diverted or allocated to any other department or bureau for such purpose.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to require that the funds appropriated by this measure shall be devoted to the purposes of relief and reemployment, and shall not be diverted for purposes of armament, appropriations for which purposes should be contained in other appropriation bills, namely, the Army appropriation bill and the Navy appropriation bill.

At first blush it might seem that such an amendment as this would not be necessary. However, I call to the attention of the Senate the fact that the first P. W. A. Act was passed in 1933 containing an appropriation of $3,300,000,000, which, I think, was the largest appropriation which up to that time had ever been made by any country in the history of the world, either in wartime or in peacetime.

That appropriation was made on the theory that we were appropriating for the purpose of reemployment so large a sum that we would hit unemployment a staggering blow. Before that money was even turned over to the P. W. A. Administrator for the purposes set forth in the act—namely, unemployment—nearly $300,000,000 was diverted for naval construction. Two years later, so far from having contributed anything to the handling of the unemployment situation, out of all the money appropriated and allocated in such a way not one keel had been laid, not one rivet had been tapped, and I am sure it is almost correct to say that not one man had been employed.

Mr. President, from time to time throughout all the P. W. A. appropriations and all the W. P. A. appropriations funds have been used from those appropriations for projects which should be contained in the Army appropriation bill or the Navy appropriation bill.

Since 1933 we have gone on year after year at an increasing ratio of expenditures for the Army and Navy. Last year we appropriated, on the surface of the matter, over $1,200,000,000 for the support of the Army and Navy; and in devious ways, from W. P. A. appropriations and in other ways, expenditures to the extent of many, many million dollars more were made. Yet we are told, at the end of all those expenditures, that the country is completely unprepared, and that there has been a shameful lack of appropriations.

Mr. President, I think Congress ought to determine what the needs of the Army and Navy are, and that those needs ought to be met by proper appropriation bills, so that we may all look at them and see how much has been spent and is being spent on the national-defense program. If funds are appropriated for relief and for the unemployment situation, they should not be diverted to any other purpose.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the Senator is quite correct in that very substantial sums were allocated from the first relief appropriations for naval construction and for other purposes. My recollection is that afterward a number of those allocations were drawn down and actually used for relief purposes; but the sum involved was very large, as the Senator has said. For that reason the Committee on Appropriations put in the joint resolution a limitation as to the amount of money which should be expended on Federal projects, so that neither $300,000,000 nor any like sum could be used out of this appropriation for other purposes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I understand that, and I think that is a meritorious provision. I am entirely in sympathy with the position of the committee on that subject; but my proposition is that none of the funds appropriated in this act should be used for national-defense purposes or for the Army or Navy, and that such appropriations ought to be contained in the two appropriation bills having to do with the subject, so that we may see what we are spending.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question about the text of the amendment. I see no harm in prohibiting the manufacture, purchase, or construction of any naval vessel, any armament, munitions, or implement of war; but when the Senator says "for the construction of quarters," I desire to ask him a practical question.

If there is an Army post adjacent to a great city, and the buildings are old—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have one in my town.

Mr. HAYDEN. And it is known that they need repairs, is there any possible reason why we should not employ some men on the W. P. A. to dig the foundations, or do some common labor at the post?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The possible reason is that the expenditures for the Army and Navy ought to be set out in the Army and Navy appropriation bills, so that we may see what we are spending on the Army and Navy. I should have no great objection to modifying my amendment by removing the reference to quarters.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I was about to suggest that the Senator strike out the words "or for the construction of quarters for military or naval forces." If he will do that, I shall have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will modify my amendment accordingly.

Mr. ADAMS. Then I shall be very glad, so far as I can, to agree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is modified as suggested. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, as modified.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, may the amendment, as modified, be read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as modified, will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The amendment has been modified, on line 5, by striking out "or for the construction of quarters", so as to read:

SEC. 8. None of the funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or by this joint resolution shall be used for the manufacture, purchase, or construction of any naval vessel, any armament, munitions, or implement of war for military or naval forces; and no funds herein appropriated or authorized shall be diverted or allocated to any other department or bureau for

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment, and I shall make only about a minute's comment on it. I offer the following amendment:

No person shall be held ineligible for work under this appropriation because such person receives a loan from any Federal agency, or because such person receives payments by way of assistance under any State or Federal program, provided such assistance pay-ments are not in excess of the minimum wages provided for those employed under this appropriation or the Appropriation Act of 1938.

The amendment simply means this: In many of the States the social-security wage is only $6 or $7 a month; and persons receiving that wage, no matter how severe their need may be, are not eligible for a single hour of W. P. A. work under the existing rules of the W. P. A. If they are found otherwise eligible, I do not think they should be denied enough work on the W. P. A. to bring their total income to the minimum W. P. A. wages.

The other part of the amendment means this: If a farmer borrows $30 to replace a dead mule, no matter what his need may become, the fact that he made a loan of even that pittance from any Federal agency disqualifies him, under the existing law, from an hour of W. P. A. work. I do not think that is fair, and I offer the amendment to correct those evils.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, does the Senator say positively that that cannot be done under the law, or is it a matter of regulation?

Mr. PEPPER. I mean under the rules of the W. P. A. Mr. ADAMS. Not law.

Mr. PEPPER. It is true under the rules of the W. P. A.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, it depends upon the laws of the States. All persons are certified as eligible for employment under the Works Progress Administration by the State authorities; and I think what the Senator complains of is some provision in the State statutes. I have a case of this kind in my own State, where, if a person owns any property, he cannot be certified as eligible for relief. I know persons who own vacant lots somewhere; and, although they have not paid any taxes on the lots for years, they cannot be certified for relief under the State statute.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the rule I am talking about is a rule promulgated by the W. P. A. If persons have made any borrowings from the Commodity Credit Corporation or other agencies, they are ineligible for W. P. A. relief.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator is correct with reference to that matter, for the simple reason that I happen to know some cases where persons have borrowed money from the Farm Credit Administration and other farm agencies, and they are on the W. P. A. I am quite sure the Senator from Florida is wrong in stating that there is any such rule of the W. P. A.; but there are State statutes on the subject.

Mr. PEPPER. My authority is the W. P. A. Administrator. When I propounded the question, the Works Progress Administration gave me the figures of the number that were barred from W. P. A. relief on that account; and I know that I have had an experience of that kind in my own State. At least, if there is such a prohibition under the rules it should not exist, and that is what the amendment provides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER 1.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed. Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Adams, Mr. Glass, Mr. McKellar, Mr. Hayden, Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Hale, and Mr. Townsend conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that perhaps there will be an adjournment until Wednesday, I ask that the joint resolution may be printed with the Senate amendments numbered, so that it may be available for conference purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO FILE REPORTS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I ask unanimous consent that all committees of the Senate may be permitted, during the adjournment of the Senate, to file reports on bills or nominations.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have no objection to that. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Kentucky is agreed to.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session today it stand in adjournment until Wednesday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, January 30, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who art one God, Maker and Ruler of all and Father of all mercy, we come before Thy presence with thanksgiving; we worship and bow down before the Lord our God. Let Thy spirit be upon us, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, of counsel and might. We praise Thee for life. It is a divine gift and to be used for noble ends, to increase in value as the years go by and to grow richer as it nears the skies. Father in Heaven, teach us the great art of working together in peace and in harmony in all the affairs of state. Oh, blessed is everyone that feareth the Lord, that walketh in His ways. As watchers of our land, let Thy hand be upon us. More and more stir in us the supreme realities of the soul. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 26, 1939, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

House Joint Resolution 83

Joint resolution making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing joint resolution, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Adams, Mr. Glass, Mr. McKellar, Mr. Hayden, Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Hale, and Mr. Townsend to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WORK RELIEF AND RELIEF

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House Joint Resolution 83, making an additional appropriation for work relief and relief for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Woodrum]?

There was no objection, and the Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. Taylor of Colorado, Mr. Woodrum of Virginia, Mr. Cannon of Missouri, Mr. Ludlow, Mr. Thomas S. McMillan, Mr. Snyder, Mr. O'Neal, Mr. Johnson of West Virginia, Mr. Taber, Mr. Wigglesworth, Mr. Lambertson, and Mr. Ditter.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein two brief tables just issued by the Department of Commerce relative to our exports and imports for the year 1938.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran]?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include an address I delivered before the Conservation Flood Congress at Huntington, W. Va., on Friday, January 27.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Whittington]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an address delivered by Hon. Francis B. Sayre, Assistant Secretary of State, before the Agricultural Society of South Carolina on January 26 last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMillan]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and at the conclusion of the legislative business in order for the day, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. May, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Pace]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE WITHDRAWN

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the permission heretofore granted me to address the House today may be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Pace]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, some time ago the House authorized the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, of which I am chairman, to make a survey of the veterans' hospitals throughout the country and allotted $5,000 for expenses. We have completed this survey, having visited practically all the veterans' hospitals in the United States, and I am pleased to be able to report a return to the Treasury out of that $5,000 an unexpended sum of $2,812.69. [Applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record at this point and to insert this report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SURVEY AND INSPECTION OF SOLDIERS' HOSPITALS AND OTHER VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION FACILITIES. INCLUDING HOSPITALS WITH WHICH THE GOVERNMENT HAS A CONTRACT FOR EX-SERVICE MEN OF ANY WAR, IN WHICH THE UNITED STATES WAS ENGAGED

Mr. Rankin, chairman, Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, submitted the following report (pursuant to H. Res. 325 and H. Res. 408); In accordance with House Resolutions 325 and 408, Seventy-fifth Congress, first and second sessions, the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation has completed a survey of United States Vet-Administration hospitals and facilities.

I have the honor to report that $5,000 was appropriated for this survey which consisted of the survey of 81 Veterans' Administration hospitals and facilities, which extended from coast to coast and that 72 surveys have been made by individual members of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and after the completion of this survey $2,812.69 is being returned to the Federal

I wish to congratulate the committee on its honest and diligent efforts in accomplishing such an exhaustive survey with so little expense to the Federal Government.

The survey generally consisted of a one-man committee. However, service organizations in several States cooperated with the member of the Veterans' Committee, and their efforts and assistance are greatly appreciated.

The committee reports that the Veterans' Administration is maintaining a high standard in care and treatment of beneficiaries and are continually studying new diagnostic and treatment methods which may benefit the disabled American veteran.

In all hospitals that were surveyed careful inspection was made

In all hospitals that were surveyed careful inspection was made of the wards and the operating rooms, and wherever practicable the veterans themselves were given an opportunity to express their opinion as to the treatment accorded them. The kitchens and meals were thoroughly inspected, and in practically every inspection at least one meal was eaten at the hospital, the same as furnished the patients, and the menus covering a certain period were requested, and are now on file by the committee.

Of the 50,670 veterans under treatment at the end of last year, 47,285 were in facilities controlled by the Veterans' Administration; 2,512 in other Government hospitals; and 873 in State or civil institutions. Over 63 percent of these veterans in all hospitals are receiving treatment in the facilities in the State of their reported home addresses. Since March 3, 1919, when the aquisition of the Government hospitals was first authorized for the treatment of veterans of the World War, there have been 1,863,289 admissions of veterans of the United States to hospitals, of which 152,966 were veterans of the World War, there have been 1,863,289 admissions of veterans of the United States to hospitals, of which 152,966 were made during last year. This load has been increasing since 1919.

Certain recommendations made by members of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation in their reports have been referred to the Federal Board of Hospitalization for consideration, and recommendations, insofar as practicable, have been complied with. Recommendations regarding personnel problems are also being studied by officials of the Veterans' Administration.

The chairman takes this opportunity on behalf of the members of this committee to thank the officials of the Veterans' Administration for their cooperation and assistance in conducting their surveys.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, on January 20 I asked and received unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an inaugural address of Governor Olsen, of California. I have been informed by letter from the Printing Office that the address will take three pages of the RECORD, and I therefore ask unanimous consent to include this address, notwithstanding the estimate of the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VoorHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein senate joint memorial No. 1, a resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of legislation prohibiting the importation of foreign manufactured United States flags and other national insignia sufficient to protect their manufacture in the United States, passed by the Senate of Montana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include in the RECORD at this point a memorial to the Congress of the United States of America protesting the reduction of the $875,000,000 asked by President Franklin D. Roosevelt for Works Progress Administration purposes to $725,000,000. This memorial was passed by the house of representatives in the State of Montana.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, did I correctly understand the gentleman to request that the memorial be inserted at this point in the RECORD?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It will be all right if it is placed in the Appendix.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection to its being placed in the Appendix, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana modifies his request so as to incorporate the remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including in the RECORD a letter from a leading citizen of Puerto Rico regarding trade statistics. The letter is not very long.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask for its immediate adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 74

Resolved, That J. Francis Harter, of New York, be, and he is hereby, elected to the Committee on Education of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was agreed to

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, February 2, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, and following the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, I simply take this opportunity to find out if the majority leader has any further knowledge of the program for the week?

Mr. RAYBURN. I believe there will be some reports this week from the Committee on Rules, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Smith] is going to ask unanimous consent this morning to bring up a report which has to do with the Robertson Committee on Wildlife Conservation.

No appropriation bill will be ready for consideration this week. It is hoped by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] and those who are working with him, that the conference report on the relief bill may be in for consideration on Wednesday, certainly not later than Thursday. As I said last week, the Committee on Ways and Means is hopingand whether that hope will be justified I do not know-to bring in proposed legislation in response to the President's message with reference to prohibiting the retroactive taxing of State salaries.

I believe that is about all that may come up this week. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Bryson and Mr. Hinshaw asked and were given permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by the Honorable Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, delivered at Pierre, S. Dak., on January 12.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein two telegrams recently received by me from Belleglade, Fla.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, and following the clearance of the legislative calendar and any prior special orders, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of title 34, section 1081, United States Code, the Chair appoints as members of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy the following Members of the House: Mr. Fernandez, of Louisiana; Mr. Secrest, of Ohio; Mr. Darden, of Virginia; Mr. Maas, of Minnesota; and Mr. Allen of Illinois.

WASHINGTON-LINCOLN MEMORIAL-GETTYSBURG BOULEVARD

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 19, Seventy-fourth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the United States Commission for the construction of a Washington-Lincoln Memorial-Gettysburg Boulevard the following Members of the House: Mr. Cole of Maryland, and Mr. Flannery, of Pennsylvania.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES DEVISE

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the provisions of Public Resolution 124, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the special committee on the Oliver Wendell Holmes Devise the following Members of the House: Mr. Keller, of Illinois; Mr. McCormack, of Massachusetts; and Mr. Wigglesworth, of Massachusetts.

ADDITIONAL COPIES OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, from the Committee on Printing I report favorably without amendment a privileged resolution authorizing the printing of additional copies of House Report No. 2, on the investigation of un-American activities and propaganda, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr.

Speaker-

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is not this a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state in reply to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Mississippi that all reports from the Committee on Printing under the rules are privileged reports if they provide for the printing of documents for the use of the two Houses. This matter is governed by clause 45 of rule XI:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Rules, on rules, joint rules, and order of business; the Committee on Elections, on the right of a Member to his seat, etc.; * * * the Committee on Printing, on all matters referred to them of printing for the use of the House or two Houses.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, under this resolution this Dies committee report will be distributed through the document room rather than the folding room.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan suspend for a moment in order that the resolution may be read for the information of the Members?

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 5

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed 25,000 additional copies of House Report No. 2, current Congress, entitled "Investigation of Un-American Activities and Propaganda," of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 22,000 copies shall be for the use of the House document room. Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. This means, does it not, Mr. Speaker, that this report will be distributed through the document room and that each Member will not be entitled to an equal quota?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will request the chairman of the committee to answer that inquiry of fact.

Mr. JARMAN. I will say to the gentleman there will be no general distribution, as the gentleman will observe from the reading of the resolution.

Mr. MICHENER. That is sufficient answer. If there is to be no general distribution, it means that all of these copies go to the document room, and the first fellows there get them, and the rest of the Members will not get them. There is a great demand for these copies all over the country by those in favor of the Dies committee and those opposed to the Dies committee. If the Congress is going to print these copies, it seems to me each Member of Congress should be given his proportionate share. Our constituents have like interests. If they are distributed as the gentleman has asked in his resolution, I shall not be able to get any unless I get there quick. The gentleman will not be able to get any unless he gets there quick, because the man in charge of the document room has no discretion as long as the books are there and they are asked for by Members, because the Members are entitled to have them. This type of distribution is embarrassing to the document room. The very efficient Mr. Lewis has a hard enough job at best.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; to the members of the Printing Committee.

Mr. RICH. I may say to my colleague from Michigan that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Jarman] and I discussed this matter quite thoroughly, with the idea of trying to have the Members of the House who want these documents receive them. We find that in the folding room, when we make the distribution in that way, there are many Members of the House who do not take their quota. They are left in the document room, and eventually they go to the bonfire.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will permit right here

Mr. RICH. Let me interject this remark.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not yield further. I did not yield for a speech.

Mr. RICH. I am trying to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MICHENER. I can answer the question very readily, and the gentleman knows the answer if he stops to think a minute. There is quite a difference whether you are publishing or printing a document which is desired by all Members of the House or whether you are printing some technical report of some commission on the price of cabbage in Boston, in which no one is interested except a few Members from Boston. Here is a report in which the entire country is interested. Every Member is being asked for copies. seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that an opportunity at least should be given to the House to vote on whether or not these reports are to be distributed through the document room, which means that you as a Member of Congress are not entitled to a single copy unless you get there before they are all gone or whether they are to be distributed through the folding room, where all Members will get an equal number. I realize that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is on the Printing Committee, will have no trouble about getting all the copies he wants, regardless of how the distribution is made, but we are not all on the Printing Committee.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further? Mr. MICHENER. Yes.

Mr. RICH. I will say to my colleague that it was only the desire of the Committee on Printing to try to make a distribution in a fair way and an economical way, not with the idea that anyone was going to get all he wanted to the dissatisfaction of some Members who would get none. That was not our point. Our only object was to try to save the Government money by permitting those who did want them to have them, and it is not the idea that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to get more than his share. If it were a costly document, I should want it distributed through the folding room. I want each Member to secure all he wants consistent with wise distribution.

Mr. MICHENER. This resolution can be made to assure the use of all of these reports and at the same time protect those Members by an amendment that these reports be distributed through the folding room, and providing further that any Member's allotment not drawn out within 60 days shall revert to the account of the document room for general distribution. Then there will be no waste. If this resolution passes, the reports are going to be printed, anyway. The method of distribution has nothing to do with the cost.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JARMAN. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich], who is a member of this committee, a question. As I understand, the gentleman's committee has reported out a resolution to print 25,000 copies of the Dies report.

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Where is the gentleman going to get the money?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama vield?

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, if we were to print the number of reports that some of the membership of the House want, some of them asking for 1,000 copies, we would, we felt, be printing entirely too many. It is the desire of the committee to try to print 25,000 copies, the minimum we felt we could get away with, and then permit them to go to the document room, and we would instruct those in charge there not to give any Member more than 200 copies at the most. In that way we felt we would utilize all of these copies we are printing, and if it was necessary in the future to print additional copies, we could reprint them, but our whole thought was with the idea of economy, and endeavoring to make distribution so that the membership of the House would get what they wanted, and then they would not be carried in the folding room with the result that in 2 or 3 years from now we would have had to destroy them or dispose of them for junk paper. If we are wrong, we would be glad to be corrected, but we think that is the wise way to handle this distribution so that they will be used for the ultimate advantage of the membership of the House, and with a view to justice to the Members and economy to the Government.

Mr. DOWELL. And where does the gentleman get his authority to limit this to 100 or 200 copies to each Member?

Mr. RICH. We were going to do that by requesting each Member not to take too many. We are not trying to drive anybody to do it, but we want to do it in an orderly procedure, for the best advantage of the membership.

Mr. DOWELL. But the gentleman has already stated that some of the Members want even 1,000 copies, and that would not make even distribution throughout the membership of the House. I think the gentleman ought to agree to an amendment

Mr. RICH. Oh, nobody will get a thousand copies.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thoroughly agree with the statement of my colleague on the committee, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich]. It is not the disposition of the Committee on Printing to deny any Member of this House the printing that he needs and desires, and, further, if the House will follow the Committee on Printing, we will try to see to it that each Member finally gets as many of these reports as he wishes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. JARMAN. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman concedes the justice of my inquiry, but he says "leave it to the committee and we will try to see that you get as many as you want." The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] indicates that his committee might allow us 200 copies each. Let us make this thing definite; let us do that which the House wants to do. Will the chairman of the committee yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment striking out the words "document room" and inserting the words "folding room"?

Mr. JARMAN. No.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman will not yield for an amendment, then there is just one recourse open to the House, and that is to vote down the previous question when it comes up. If the previous question is voted down, then the House will have an opportunity to amend the resolution. I do not want to do that, but sometimes one has to invoke parliamentary tactics in order to get justice—to get what a majority of the House wants. Why should the House be denied the right to amend this resolution?

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am not yielding for a further speech. I do not agree with the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Michener] that the House should authorize the printing of great volumes of documents to lie down in the folding room and perhaps not be called for by the Members to whom they are assigned.

Mr. MICHENER. Oh, they will be called for.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Printing has gone into this matter very carefully, with two ideas—with the idea of seeing that each Member of the House has as many of these documents as he needs and with the further idea of economy. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Jarman) there were—ayes 83, noes 100.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects to the vote upon the ground that there is no quorum present and makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The question is on ordering the previous question, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 184, nays 169, answered "present" 2, not voting 77, as follows:

SELECT COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE RESOURCES

Mr. SMITH of Virginia, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report on the resolution (H. Res. 65) for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 65

Resolved, That the special committee to investigate all matters pertaining to the replacement and conservation of wildlife is authorized to continue the investigation begun under authority of House Resolution 237 of the Seventy-third Congress, continued under authority of House Resolution 44, of the Seventy-fourth Congress, and House Resolution 11, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power and authority as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 237, of the Seventy-third Congress, and shall report to the House as soon as practicable, but not later than January 3, 1941, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, for necessary legislation. for necessary legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 65)

The Clerk read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to objectand I do not intend to object—but last week the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], chairman of the Committee on Conservation of Wildlife, asked unanimous consent to have the Committee on Rules discharged from further consideration of this resolution and for its immediate consideration on the floor. I reserved the right to object to his request at that time, and later the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Accounts [Mr. WARREN], because, as I understand, of a provision in it which invaded the jurisdiction of the Committee on Accounts, objected to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

As far as I know, every Member of the House is in favor of the work that the distinguished chairman of this Committee on the Conservation of Wildlife and the committee have been doing. I think they have done a very commendable and worth-while piece of work, and I favor the continuation of the committee. I reserved the right to object to his request last week because, in the first place, I felt it was irregular to discharge the Committee on Rules from the consideration of the resolution; and, secondly, because I desired to call attention generally to some features of the resolution for the continuance of the work of different special committees of the last Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I have some questions about the form of the resolution, which I raised in the Committee on Rules; but because of the rather unanimous support of the work of this Committee on Wildlife Conservation, I waive that question at this time.

There are, however, several special committees of the last Congress, the work of which I understand is to be continued. There are some questions in regard to them to which I desire to call the attention of the House in the consideration of this resolution, although I shall not press them at this time.

One question is the question of membership. Of course, there are several more Members on the Republican side of the House in this Congress than there were in the last Congress, and it seems as though the membership of the Republicans on some of the special committees should be increased. The Committee on Rules intends tomorrow, for example, to hold hearings on a resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] to continue the Select Committee on Government Reorganization. In the last Congress the membership of that committee consisted of seven Democrats and two Republicans. It seems as though that proportion ought to be changed in this Congress. Later other resolutions will be considered for the purpose of continuing the work of other select committees of the last Congress.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. I do not recall just now, but did the original Cochran resolution, passed 2 years ago, contain anything as to the division between the parties or not?

Mr. MAPES. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I do not have a copy of the resolution before me and cannot answer his question.

Mr. WARREN. I just do not recall.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will yield, it did not. The set-up was fixed by the Speaker when the appointments were made.

Mr. WARREN. That was my impression. Therefore what the gentleman is now saying is a matter to be determined solely by the Speaker of the House.

Mr. MAPES. I understand that unless the House itself sees fit to fix the proportion in the passage of a resolution continuing the work of any committee.

As far as this particular committee is concerned, the resolution did specify the membership between the two parties. It provided for the appointment of a special committee of 15, to be composed of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture; the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries; the 2 House members of the Migratory Bird Conservation Commission; 7 Members of the House of Representatives from the majority political party; and 4 Members of the House of Representatives from the minority political party. The membership was determined by the resolution, as far as this particular committee is concerned.

I am raising the question now so as to call it to the attention of the Speaker and the House, with a view to having the matter adjusted in some equitable and fair way. Of course, we all have perfect confidence in the Speaker and realize that whatever he does will be fair and just, but it seems as though some of these committees ought to have a larger representation of Republicans on them in this Congress than they had in the last one.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAPES. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. May I ask, in the interest of fairness, is the gentleman from Michigan questioning the fairness of the representation, 7 to 4, as being unfair to the minority?

I understood the gentleman to say that it provides for seven Members of the majority party and four Members of the minority party, in addition to certain specified individuals, such as the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and the chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Mr. MAPES. I am afraid my friend did not follow me closely. I am raising no question as to the membership of this committee, although it does consist of 10 Democrats and 5 Republicans.

Mr. DINGELL. I think that is about right.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman from Michigan if it is not a fact that this particular Committee on the Conservation of Wildlife Resources is probably the least political of any committee that has been appointed by Congress, and that all its reports have been unanimous? In other words, partisanship does not enter into it.

Mr. MAPES. There is no question about that. I repeat what I said at the beginning—as far as I know, every Member of the House is in favor of a continuance of the work of this committee. I think it has done a wonderful work.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCK. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The committee being nonpartisan in character, is not this the greater reason why we should have our proportionate share in the membership?

Mr. BUCK. I am not talking about proportion, so far as that is concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record at this point to give a bird's-eye view of the picture of wildlife conservation in the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

A NEW DAY FOR WILDLIFE

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the Bible tells us that the children of Israel wandered for 40 years in the desert before being permitted to view the Promised Land. Some 10,000,000 sportsmen and at least that many others definitely interested in the conservation of our natural resources have wandered almost as long in the unplanned and undirected wilderness of wildlife conservation, apparently unable to stop or even check the wasteful dissipation of our valuable wildlife and renewable natural resources. The fisherman has seen his favorite stream either turned into an open sewer or filled with mud and silt from erosion. The big game hunter has seen our best timber areas laid waste by fire and ax. The migratory bird hunter has seen our supply of ducks reduced from hundreds of millions to a bare 15,000,000. The upland game hunter has seen at least 100,000,000 acres of previously fertile farm land eroded to the point where it furnishes neither food nor cover for game. He has seen the remaining privately owned farms, comprising about 1,000,000,000 acres, or over one-half of the land area of the continent, so depleted of upland game that there is scarcely any good shooting left except on a limited number of private preserves. Nineteen hundred and thirtythree found us in even more of a wilderness than the children of Israel, because they at least had plenty of Egyptian quail.

Then was commenced the greatest organized effort for the conservation and restoration of these natural resources our country has ever witnessed. That program has spread from a limited number of enthusiastic sportsmen and nature lovers to the rank and file of the people of the Nation with such rapidity that a recent Gallup poll showed that next to oldage pensions conservation is now the leading interest of the American people.

Time will prevent me from enumerating the splendid achievements of the past 5 years of the regular conservation agencies of the Federal Government, including the work of the Bureau of Biological Survey, the Bureau of Fisheries, the United States Forest Service, and the National Park Service. Those interested in the programs of those regular agencies can find the complete story told in the 1938 hearings of the House Committee on Wildlife Conservation. I desire to tell you at this time something of the conservation activities of our emergency agencies in order that you may have a better conception of the vast scale upon which this conservation work is being done and the splendid results that are being accomplished.

The Works Progress Administration, from April 8, 1935, to March 31, 1938, expended for conservation purposes a total of $227,888,687. Among the conservation accomplishments of W. P. A. have been the construction of 134 fish hatcheries, with a fingerling capacity of 308,154,800 fish; the building of 3,330 storage dams and 15,855 flood and erosion dams; the construction of 328 sewage treatment plants; the development of 825 bird and game sanctuaries; the construction of 1,196 miles of firebreaks to protect forest areas; and the planting of 9,789,184 trees on 21,131 acres.

The emergency agency closest to my heart and the one, I believe, that holds the warmest place in the affection of all is the C. C. C. camps. Thirty-two of those camps with 6,000 men have been operating exclusively under the Biological Survey in the development of migratory bird breeding and feeding refuges. The C. C. C. camps have built for the Bureau of Fisheries a brook-trout hatchery in the White Mountain National Forest with a capacity of 20,000,000 brook-trout eggs, enough to supply all of the brook-trout hatcheries of the Government east of the Mississippi. The C. C. C. camps have constructed 4,087 fish rearing ponds; have engaged in food and cover planting and seeding for wildlife on 54,251 acres; have devoted 518,770,542 man-days to lake and pond development—that is a lot of man-days, considering that there have been only some 700,000 days since the birth of Christ-have planted 462,770,542 fish in streams and ponds; have improved fishing conditions in 6,135.2 miles of fishing waters; have reforested 1,300,000 acres; have devoted 4,043,000 man-days to fighting forest fires, 64,332 man-days to feeding wildlife, 2,176 man-days to building shelters for wildlife, and 595,647 man-days to other wildlife activities. There is not a section of the United States that has not felt the influence of that conservation activity, and naturally I take a pride in it because the first C. C. C. camp in the United States was built in the Seventh Congressional District; the first lake with C. C. C. labor was built in that district; and the general movement to stop the C. C. C. boys from cutting trees and shrubs valuable to wildlife and directing their energies into a national conservation program, in addition to improving the timber stand in State and National forests, was initiated by the House Conservation Committee, of which I have the honor to be the chairman.

Another emergency agency making a splendid contribution to wildlife conservation is the Farm Security Administration, previously called the Resettlement Administration. The Farm Security Administration has acquired 9,200,000 acres of submarginal farming land, at an average price of $4.50 per acre, for what is termed multiple use-the three factors of the multiple use being forests, grazing, and wildlife. Of that total acreage, 724,000 acres have been set aside entirely for wildlife, 350,000 acres have been turned over to the Biological Survey for exclusive wildlife purposes, and 259,000 acres to the Biological Survey for custodial service and administration. Other areas will shortly be turned over to the United States Forest Service, which will include the 21,600-acre tract in Appomattox and Buckingham Counties, which contains two fine fishing lakes; a 5,800-acre tract in Prince Edward County, which contains one lake; and 14,500 acres in Cumberland County, to be developed primarily for forestry purposes. There is no State in the Union that does not contain one or more of these projects, on which there has so far been spent between forty and fifty million dollars for land acquisition and about $47,000,000 in its development.

The Soil Conservation Service is another emergency agency, which has operated 526 demonstration projects in 45 States, with 57,003 farm owners cooperating. These farm owners have agreed to carry out a 5-year plan, involving the retirement from soil-depleting crops of 683,497 acres, and to engage in strip cropping on 1,084,812 acres and hillside terracing to the extent of 74,249 miles. In addition, these cooperating farmers will do contour farming on 2,264,696 acres and increase winter cover crops on 335,065 acres. The Soil Conservation Service has built, largely through the use of C. C. C. camps, 3,707 dams, impounded 80,000 acre-feet of water, built 221,648 permanent gully-control dams, and 2,577,232 temporary check dams. In its further efforts to check soil erosion and reclaim the habitat for upland game, the Soil Conservation Service has planted 2,374,245 trees and shrubs.

These Federal activities go to the root of our problem, which is the necessity for the improvement of food, cover, and water conditions. Until that problem has been successfully solved, no other conservation activity will bring substantial results.

Testifying before our committee last spring, Hon. Jay N. Darling, former Chief of the Biological Survey, said:

Not less than 3,000,000 people of the present unemployed population could exist and find sustaining employment on those portions of our natural resources which have been wantonly wasted and destroyed during the last two generations.

Florida is now engaged in the expenditure of $500,000 in planting seed oysters between Pensacola and Fort Myers, an area once better planted by nature. Our Chesapeake Bay oyster area has frequently been referred to as a $100,000,000 industry, but capitalized at 6 percent it would be a $1,000,000,000 industry. The employment of thousands of men in that area is definitely threatened by the present Chesapeake Bay pollution. The fisheries of the Great Lakes once furnished employment for thousands. It is a thing of the past. Go to Bacova in Bath County, Va., or to Bastian if you want to shed tears over a ghost lumber town. They can be duplicated in thousands of once rich timber areas of the Nation. Go to Pennsylvania, or any other industrial State, if you want to see rivers once beautiful that have been turned into open sewers.

A witness before our committee last spring testified that the bottoms of most of our rivers and lakes, once productive of fish food, now compare very favorably with the soil conditions in the Dust Bowl. And I do not have to enlarge upon those conditions so bad in the summer of 1936 that the soil from the Dust Bowl reached our Capital City and to such an extent that one could not see the Washington Monument from Capitol Hill.

But when I think of the accomplishments of the regular and emergency agencies of the Federal Government during the past 5 years, supplemented by a similar quickening of activity of all of the State conservation agencies, I feel that we are at least on top of Mt. Nebo if we have not yet actually possessed the Promised Land.

The whole world has been passing through troublesome times—an international headache, if you please—from the killing of 10,000,000 men, the wounding of 20,000,000 more, the direct destruction of $400,000,000,000 worth of property, and the indirect destruction of many more billions, through a senseless and useless conflict known as the World War. Since we suffered less, both in the loss of men and in the loss of property, than the other participating nations, the headache was later reaching us than in Europe, but by the summer of 1932 we had our full share of it. Ever since we have been busily engaged in the business of recovering from that headache. A part of our recovery plans has been to put men back to work. I have indicated what the loss of certain natural resources has meant in unemployment and how their restoration can contribute to employment. A part of our recovery plans has been an increased and better distributed national income. The development of our timber resources, the development of better hunting and fishing, and the development of out-of-doors recreational opportunities in general will certainly help to distribute the national income, and I likewise believe will definitely increase it. And while some of the people of this Nation may be desperately poor, the majority of them are not poor but just unhappy. Therefore, at this stage in our recovery plans I deem it advisable to be giving some consideration to the ways and means of finding peace, happiness, and contentment. A business executive who thinks everything is going wrong may be just suffering from a case of nerves and indigestion. Let him whip a trout stream all day, let him follow the elusive grouse in our mountain ranges all day, and I will guarantee he will sleep well that night, and that he will view the world the next day through clearer eyes.

A man inclined to be a Communist will not long be a Communist in this country if you give him good hunting and fishing. Russia is a land of vast natural resources. It could have been a land of peace and plenty, but a limited few held more than they could use and enjoy, while the serfs and peasants had practically nothing and the kulacks, or small farmers, were limited to their meager acres. And so we find in 1918 a bloodly uprising in which millions were killed and other millions sent into exile in the frozen wastes of Siberia, where "the only softness under their feet was that of snow." Of them it has been said that "only in future years when their sins have taught them charity and their despair has taught them hope, and their loneliness has led them to faith, they shall listen again to the sound of bells coming across the field and comprehend and reverence the symbolism of the cross." Twenty years later a certain European dictator threatens to involve the world in another great war. I frankly feel that if he could be induced to spend a few quiet days on a trout stream where he could commune with nature and with nature's God he would realize that man's prosperity and happiness cannot be achieved through war. "He leadeth us beside still waters" will always be symbolic

That brings me to the observation that wildlife conservation, like all Gaul, is divided into three parts-economic, involving utilization for commercial purposes; scientific, involving a knowledge of nature and of nature's children, on which must be based scientific management; and the esthetic, which, of course, involves our love and appreciation of nature and the enjoyment we can get from it. As the poet says, "To him who in the love of Nature holds communion with her visible form, she speaks a varied language." She can "glide into his darker musings with a mild and healing sympathy that steals away their sharpness ere he is

A man does not have to kill game or fish to enjoy the out-of-doors and to get inspiration from it. I love nothing better than to tramp through a boundary of virgin timber, such as I visited last June in the Pisgah National Forest. It is an inspiration to me to stand beneath an oak or a hemlock that is three or four hundred years old and to realize that it has withstood the vicissitudes of the centuries. From such an uncrowned monarch of the forest man can learn how to clasp with tougher roots the inspiring earth.

To me, any phase of conservation is worth while-the economic, the scientific, or the esthetic-but of the three I feel the esthetic could be made the most valuable. As I look forward to the coming years, I am not worried nearly so much about the economic and scientific future of our country as I am about the possibility that through nervous disorders and a growing spirit of unrest and of unhappiness some group may turn the sword on another group and thus destroy civilization in a land more richly endowed in natural resources than any other, and better suited than any other I know for brethren to dwell in peace and unity.

We can undoubtedly learn to make the inventions of a machine age our servants rather than our masters; we can undoubtedly solve the problems of unemployment and find means to properly distribute the abundance of good things with which we are endowed; we undoubtedly have the form of government under which there can be the greatest security of life and the maximum of personal liberty. But Jefferson correctly enumerated the pursuit of happiness as one of the innate longings of the Anglo-Saxon disposition. I am personally convinced that the people of this Nation have become satiated with the type of happiness to be derived from the possession of mechanical devices. There is a need in our lives that automobiles, radios, picture shows, and other mechanical devices for happiness are not filling. Our pioneering forefathers were happy without one-tenth of our wealth or our material advantages. But they lived close to nature and that will be our way back to a land of plenty over which peace hath spread her white wings and contentment hath found a home in every heart.

I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the House fully appreciates the importance of this work and has unanimously voted to continue this Conservation Committee.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday night the National Press Club, which is by all odds the largest and most influential organization of newspapermen in the world, held its annual inauguration ceremonies. Mr. Arthur Hachten was inducted as president. Strickland Gillilan, garbed in the robe and wig of a chief justice, administered an ironbound, copper-riveted oath of office to the new president of the club. It was a very happy and successful inauguration.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article of my own, descriptive of the occasion, with the privilege of also including some brief extracts from two speeches that were delivered on that occasion.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I could not hear the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend in the Appendix of the RECORD an article by himself with reference to the meeting of the National Press Club on Saturday in the city of Washington. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on a bill which I have introduced

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorow, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and such other special orders as may have been entered, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record and include therein an article written by my colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. Voornis].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Montana [Mr. Thorkelson] is recognized for 30 minutes.

CONSTITUTIONAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I intimated in my previous discourse that Congress had been imposed upon and stampeded into acquiescence. It occurs in the following manner. A proposition is delivered to the House, similar to the one on socialized medicine, for the House to consider and pass upon. Congress may not be receptive to such proposal, but it embodies gifts to the people-in this case at the expense of the medical profession—and in a subtle manner is used as a club to force Congress to consent to the proposal. I call this a tearful, sympathetic appeal to the people to hammer Congress into submission and to relinquish its constitutional power.

Mr. Speaker, I want to warn Congress of the danger that lies in such appeals. It is not the will of the majority of the people, as someone may want Congress to believe. Congress will find that Representatives who adhere strictly to the Constitution and the rights of the people will survive when those who have ignored such rights will be forgotten.

My work has to a great extent been predicated upon certain well-recognized principles: In navigation, upon triangulation, calculated from known points for position, which becomes the premise or point of departure; in medicine, upon recognized postulates, which must be proved by proper procedure; and, in business, upon certain recognized principles of earnings and the use of such earnings for expansion.

Our wealth, soundness, and security are derived from successful operation of business. Business to remain sound must earn money and be able to operate so it can meet competition. When our business people fail to meet competition, markets are lost, sales decrease, and idleness begins. The Federal Government blames business for the present chaotic condition, and business, having lost courage, remains mute.

Our people realize that we cannot go on as we have in the past 6 years without disaster. The question is, Who is to blame? Spokesmen for the Government would have the people believe that business is on a strike, which, of course, is not true. Idle factories and idle business return no income and are, therefore, undesirable to business people. Business wants to operate, earn money, and employ people. But its hands are tied by too much interference from those who have no money invested in such business and who do not understand it.

A golden opportunity presents itself to any Federal bureaucrat who can finance himself with private capital and who believes he can operate private industry so as to steadily employ any number of our idle people. Such person is needed in private business to aid in restoring prosperity. However, those who are satisfied to remain on the Federal or taxpayers' pay roll should keep quiet. We need workers with sound minds instead of prophets with queer ideas.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss the constitutional rights of industry, commerce, business, labor, agriculture, and all earning groups to operate unmolested and free from high-jacking by incompetent Federal advisers. The purpose of the Constitution is to protect the people's rights from exploitation by their own Government and political parties. It delegates certain powers to Congress, to the President, and to the Supreme Court, but the people reserve the greater power to themselves.

To remind Congress of the people's power, I quote the tenth amendment:

The powers not delegated to the United States in the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

The builders of this wonderful instrument realized, because of their experience, that at some time political parties or enemies of the people might attempt to misconstrue the meaning of the Constitution, so, in order to further protect themselves from invasion of and loss of rights, they said, in amendment IX:

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

It is therefore clear that it is not within the right of Congress, or the Executive, or the Supreme Court to interpret lightly or interpose their own views in regard to the meaning of certain words used in the Constitution. If there is any question, the benefit of the doubt must be given to the people, its owners.

The people are composed of those employed in industry, commerce, business, labor, agriculture, and all earning groups; and this group, which from now on I shall call "business," reserves the right to itself to conduct and operate all business within the United States of America and its possessions. It follows, therefore, that if the Federal or State Governments are now operating in competition with private business in any sense whatsoever it is in clear violation of the tenth amendment of the Constitution, and it is not "for the general welfare of the United States," but is instead destructive.

To promote general welfare as spoken of in the preamble of the Constitution and as again mentioned in article I, section 8, of the Constitution means exactly what it says—the general welfare of the United States, not the welfare of any particular group, business or political organization, but for the benefit of all the States and Territories, and for all the people within such States and Territories.

For a number of years appeals have been made to the people for their support in a program which is bent upon socializing business and centralizing power. The mode of operation is subtle—a painless procedure to deprive the people of their constitutional rights with their consent. It is a flendish plan to build centralized power on the ruins of public liberty.

It is not good form, nor is it my desire, to discuss the President of the United States; and it serves no purpose, because without "the advice and consent of the Senate" his power is limited to "grant reprieves and pardons." "He shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed," and the most important law is the Constitution of the United States.

But when he fails to play the game, no alternative is left for me, under my oath of obligation to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States," but to take issue with him.

In order to expose the methods used to undermine the people's rights I shall cite the President's message to Congress, January 23, 1939. The article is a well-camouflaged attempt to obtain public approval for Federal supervision of the most efficient and beneficial organization in the United States. I quote:

The health of the people is a public concern; ill health is a major cause of suffering, economic loss, and dependency; good health is essential to the security and progress of the Nation.

This is a bid for approval and support of a plan to place medical care under Federal supervision by public demand. It is not only unconstitutional but it will in the end destroy the medical profession and the ambitions of men who have unselfishly given everything within them to aid suffering humankind.

If the health of the people is a public concern and not their own, the Federal Government should bear in mind that the now popular attempt to destroy private business makes people ill. As a matter of fact, more illness, suicides, and murders are committed from unsound Federal administrative orgies than from actual illness itself. So I say, before the President takes the shaving out of his brother's eye, let him remove the plank from the eyes of his administration.

The Federal Government is responsible for the stagnant industries, commerce, and business and for the idle people who are walking our streets today, and this deplorable condition is responsible for more illness and suffering than disease itself, and it is a condition the doctors cannot eradicate as they have other ills. It can only be eradicated by the people by voting unfit officials out of office and restoring constitutional government within the United States.

The doctors of medicine in the past 125 years have increased the span of life from an average of 20 to between 50 and 60 years. This has been accomplished without Federal aid or advice, and the doctors, having become more familiar with the present problems, need no Federal advice now from bureaucratic experts. Over half of the earnings of medical men are given to those in need free of charge in uncollectible bills and no charge accounts. Few doctors of medicine have ever denied medical care to anyone, and particularly to those in need, for they usually get the first consideration because of their dependent position. Medical work has been directed toward the elimination of illness in preventive medicine and immunization, which is an entirely different attitude from that of other professions-let us say the legal profession.

The legal profession is constantly enacting new legislation, and old laws are rarely repealed. In this procedure the legal profession creates more work and need for its advice. The medical profession constantly works to eliminate illness by prophylaxis, prevention, and immunization, so that people will not become sick, and in such manner decreases illness and the need for its services.

I am not willing as a doctor to have medicine socialized, but if it is I want the legal profession socialized, too, for misery loves company. When this unconstitutional act is consummated, it is only a short span to socialization of other business, with the final and unhappy ending that labor will be included. That is something for all of us to think about. But the handwriting is on the wall. In other words, I want labor to know that when business is socialized and run by the Federal Government, labor will also be socialized and subject to Federal regulation. That, of course, will terminate the right of organized labor for self-regulation.

We must not be misled by mischievous propaganda, but must, instead, endeavor to understand the fundamental theories of our Government.

There seems to be some movement on foot to dismember the highly organized industrial bodies whose services are a public necessity. Medicine is one of them and utilities another. Free or cheap service from these two highly organized groups is offered to the people as compensation for aid in the destruction of them. The final outcome, if the New Deal is successful, will be in Federal control of both. After having acquired such control, other business not so well organized becomes an easy prey to the same force. This is socialism or communism in its true aspect, and it is operating in the United States now.

In this transition remember Russia and the wholesale destruction of life of the so-called intelligentsia. The Communists will reap a harvest here, for we have a larger number of intelligent people. Will it happen? Yes; if we do not stop it now. After business is destroyed the Federal Government must assume its place and earn its own living. That is something the Federal Government has never been able to do before. Labor will be conscripted, chained to its work, and guarded by what? By militia, of course. There will be no collective bargaining. It will, instead, be machine-gun coercion. Will they like it? No. Will we realize our loss? Yes; but it will be too late. Then history will repeat itself, and so upon the ruins of public liberties and suffering will arise a purified people who will believe in constitutional government.

We must not be deceived, because any plan which destroys highly organized and efficient industries and business is not only un-American, it is also a direct attack upon the liberties and rights of the people. If these crying prophets and soothsayers in reality feel so badly for those who are ill-clothed, ill-housed, ill-fed, and who lack adequate medical care, the gates to charity are held open by hope, and if they have faith with them and are sincere, they may donate their private fortunes to those they are crying for. I have not been informed of or seen any evidence of such private donations to those in need from any one of them. Instead, it is charged to the taxpayers of the United States.

The taxpayers of the United States are charged with salaries of $20,000 a year and $20,000 a year pension to the judges on the Supreme Court and $10,000 salaries and pensions to other Federal judges and proportionate pensions to other Federal employees. Yet these poor taxpayers who pay these pensions are unable and helpless to provide pensions and reasonable comforts for themselves. The taxpayers of the United States also pay for fishing trips, special trains, special service, that may cost millions of dollars. Why not save some of these expenses for those who are in need? I am speaking for the low-earning group, the American worker.

I have given my life and work to aid those who suffer and are ill. I do not believe anyone understands the needs of the people better than I. My advice to my people is to safeguard their constitutional rights, so that their children may live in freedom instead of in slavery.

It should be perfectly obvious that it is not for the general welfare of the United States to dismember and destroy the medical profession, a profession that has not asked for Federal aid. It is not for the general welfare of the United States to destroy utilities. It is not for the general welfare of the United States to import farm products and leave our own farmers sitting on the plowed-up furrows of their crops waiting for help. And it is not for the general welfare of the United States to import cattle, meat products, wool, butter, fruit, grain, sugar, and many other farm commodities, which can be raised on the farms in the United States, to supply our own people with food. It is not for the general welfare of the United States to import silver, manganese, and other metals at the expense of our own production, and leave our own mines idle and people unemployed. Such imports are destructive to all the industries which are forced to compete with such influx, no matter what it may be. I believe the people should protect business and protect themselves by insisting that Congress place a protective tariff on such imported products, so that our own producers may again feel proud to be farmers, miners, and citizens of the richest country.

It is for the general welfare of the United States to destroy communism, socialism, and all other un-American activities now so prevalent throughout the country. Anyone who indulges in such activity is not a friend of the United States or the people, but is instead an enemy. The Constitution defines such enemies in the following manner:

Treason shall consist in making war against the United States, adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.

It is for the general welfare of the United States to adhere to the Constitution as it was given to us by the founders of our country, who were much more familiar with despotic governments than we are today.

Fear exists in many States for the loss of States' rights. I shall now quote a paragraph from a letter I received from the attorney general's office in Montana.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to read this paragraph from the letter of the attorney general of Montana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Ford of California). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it. Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Does the gentleman from Montana have to ask unanimous consent to read matters as a part of his remarks?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He does.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. I read the following statement:

Together with most of the other attorneys general, and other responsible officers of the States and municipalities throughout the country, I have been deeply concerned with the recent proposals emanating from the Treasury Department, that would seem to have for their object the breaking down of the sovereignty and integrity of the several States. That we do not exaggerate this tendency is indicated by the feet that in recent guide issued by the Depart indicated by the fact that in a recent study issued by the Department of Justice, reference is made to an asserted "supreme power of the Central Government to tax the States." (The Immunity Rule and the Sixteenth Amendment, a Study Made by the Department of Justice of June 24, 1938, p. 10.)

These contentions have reached such serious proportions that the State and municipal officers referred to above have organized a conference on State defense. Among those participating are the attorneys general of no less than 40 States.

This shows clearly the anxiety felt by 40 States in our Union, which are in fear of losing States' rights by Federal usurpation. It is, indeed, a serious problem and one that must be clarified now.

Mr. Speaker, the sixteenth amendment reads:

Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes upon income from whatever source derived.

This amendment refers to taxes on income and not on salaries.

Income from any source may be legal or illegal income. It might be income from foreign or domestic investments, or from annuities or trust funds. Income may be derived from many sources. It is acquired by investing in any paying enterprise. It "comes in" without labor, and is in reality a luxury.

Salary is not income, but is instead a fixed and steady pay for work performed. It might be paid by the year, by the month, or week. Usually, when paid daily, it is referred to as "wages." Salary is paid to one person and for service or labor. Salary is, therefore, equal to work or labor. It is not a luxury, but it is a necessity as compared to income. Salary is earned and fixed compensation, while income is an unearned variable compensation. Salary, not being the same as income, is not taxable according to the sixteenth amendment. We must remember that the benefit of the doubt must be given to the people and not to the Treasury Department, as provided for in amendment IX.

We should read the Constitution as it is; each article, section, and paragraph by itself. For example, "Coin money and regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin," can only mean regulate the value of money. Gold is the only recognized standard of value in all money which lends itself to regulation. When gold is removed, the value of money is also removed and nothing is left to regulate.

The Constitution further provides that the Federal Government shall not allow any State to "make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debt," and shall not pass laws "impairing the obligation of contracts." Of course, the Federal Government is not immune to this provision, but should instead set an example for the States to follow, and the President "should take care that the laws be faithfully executed."

Now, let us see about this one: "To regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes." In this paragraph of the Constitution, "regulate * * * with foreign nations" fixes the intent, which is movement of trade with or in agreement with foreign nations, as to exchange and credit; regulation in the privilege of ports; regulation of ships and safety while on the ocean, such as in navigation; and regulation in respect to loading, and all for the general welfare and safety of the passengers and cargoes aboard such ships.

The same paragraph says "among the States" because the Constitution recognizes States' rights. So it refers to movement of commerce among the States, but no power is granted to regulate any business structure or business within these States under the pretense that it is "commerce."

The Indians were not recognized as having States' rights, for they were tribes, or roving bands of people, so the Constitution provides for "with [not "among"] the Indian tribes," which, of course, is a power given to the Federal Government by all the States to negotiate with the Indian tribes similar to the power given to negotiate with foreign nations.

In other words, the States delegated power to the Federal Government to regulate commerce with foreign governments and with the Indian tribes, but only among themselves, because the States give the power to the Federal Government, and each State is a sovereign government within itself. This observes the clause "for the general welfare of the United States," or all the States, instead of with one.

It follows, therefore, that the Federal Government has no right to regulate business and prescribe rules of conduct for the capital structure, but only for movement of commerce, or transportation, for the general welfare of the United States. How? In regulation of safety devices, roadbeds, and safe transportation, but nothing else. Certainly not to establish selling and buying power, and not in regulation of the capital structure. Such powers are reserved by the people who are in business to themselves—amendment X. I mention this because the gradual usurpation of States' and private rights is wrecking business, closing factories, creating idleness, and leading our country toward revolution. I want the Congress and our people to give this serious thought. I might be a little antiquated in my ideas, but the Constitution reserves the right for each State to regulate its own affairs and to regulate business as provided by State laws for the general welfare of the United States. This is the better way, for responsibility is then shared by 48 States on a competitive basis, and so the most economic and efficiently operated State should be the most prosperous.

This allows the Federal Government full time to devote its attention to the greater interest and general welfare of all the States, and all the United States.

My Democratic colleagues have challenged the Republican Party to present a plan superior to the bureaucratic plan now in use, and I believe this challenge is fair. I concede that destructive criticism serves no useful purpose, and criticism without a remedy is useless. I hold to this; and inasmuch as I have possibly attempted to criticize, I now propose a plan.

First. I quote:

The United States shall guarantee to every State a republican form of government.

Not a bureaucratic, not a socialistic, not a communistic, and not a "liberal" form of government, whatever that may be, but a republican form of government, as the Constitution provides.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. My second proposal is that Congress resume its rightful position in its relation to the people it represents.

My third step is to replace the money in circulation with gold-secured currency, and set aside a gold reserve, as security for all money. This will give a standard, stable value to the dollar, just as it was in 1926. We have two types of money today, something that we have never had before. One is the international money which is used in foreign transactions and in payment of interest and principal in foreign investments—the dollar which is used to balance international credit. The foreign dollar contains 15.521 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, but all transactions are still based upon the old valuation of 25.8, the generally recognized international standard.

The money we use at home, you and I, has no gold value. It is not secured by gold or silver, and is therefore a commodity or managed dollar that may collapse at any time. It is a dollar which has deprived the American Nation of its character and has destroyed public confidence in the Government. I ask Congress to restore sound money as the third step toward recovery.

I cannot but warn Congress that if this is done an embargo must be placed upon the gold in the United States Treasury until such time as it is again accepted as a liquid monetary medium of exchange by international agreement.

For Congress to regain its power to coin money and regulate the value thereof I believe it must repeal the Gold Reserve Act. This presents a peculiar situation because the President might veto such repeal and that would necessitate a two-thirds majority vote of this body to retrieve its own power. I mention this so that Congress may realize how dangerous it is to relinquish to anyone its constitutional power as given to us by our people.

Congress may call for liquidation of the $2,000,000,000 gold stabilization fund because I believe the emergency expires in June. Congress may then call for an accounting of the fund, and this should be done. The account should be closed and receipts and expenditures published so that the people may understand.

Fourth, Congress should demand that the Federal Government cease and desist from competing with private industries which destroys the earning power of the people. I believe there are about 47 corporations created by special acts of Congress. Some of these corporations are incorporated under the laws of the State of Delaware, of Maryland, the District of Columbia, Tennessee, and other States. There is no power delegated to Congress in the Constitution which gives it the right to create such private corporations, and there is no reason why the taxpayers of the United States should support them. They are directly competitive and destructive to the very people who are taxed for their support. I therefore recommend, as the fourth step, that appraisal and sale be made of all such corporations, not hurriedly but one by one, until business is restored to its rightful channel.

These are a few of my proposals but I believe they are enough for a beginning.

If Congress will again resume its rightful position it will establish courage in business and confidence in Congress. We cannot be wrong when we face the Constitution, but we are wrong when we turn our backs upon it. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THORKELSON. I yield.

Mr. FISH. The President of the United States has told the American people that one-third of the people are illhoused, ill-clothed, and ill-fed.

Will the gentleman kindly give me his views as to what use this gold that we have hidden away in Kentucky insofar as feeding the people, clothing the people, or housing the people is concerned?

Mr. THORKELSON. Those questions would have to be answered separately. The gentleman refers to the gold reserve that is stored in the vaults in Kentucky?

Mr. FISH. Yes; the gold that is buried in the ground in Kentucky.

Mr. THORKELSON. I will answer that first. Gold of course is the recognized standard which secures the value of all money. The gold is stored in vaults because it cannot be handled conveniently by the people. It is too heavy. Of course it still retains its value. As against this gold there are about thirteen and one-half billion dollars of gold certificates issued to the Governor of the Federal Reserve banks and to other interests without the Treasury Department, which includes the $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund now held by the President. While the gold should secure the money we are using today, it does not secure our money at all, but does secure the money that is in the control and under the supervision of the Governor of the Federal Reserve banks and interests outside the Treasury. It is for the benefit of foreign people and for foreign nations in international transactions to balance international trade balance. It is used for the benefit of those people who do not live in the United States, and interest and principal is payable to those people in gold. We have been deprived of gold security. We are deprived of holding gold-secured investments and of having the principal and interest paid to us in gold. But these rights are granted to foreigners and credited to foreign nations. In other words, we have become peons and serfs in our own land.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Boren asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a radio address of the Honorable Marriner F. Eccles, Chairman of the Federal Reserve.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes and to read a brief newspaper item as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a clipping taken from the Washington Star of January 26, 1939, headed "Homeless and Jobless, Two Men Smash Window to Get Fed." Under the above heading is the picture of two young men photographed by the Washington Star through bars of the city jail in Washington.

Undernearth the picture of these two young men in jail appears the following:

Arvid Schmiedburg, 28, left, and Warren Hagen, photographed in the cell block at police court this morning awaiting sentence for breaking a window.

The article reads as follows:

Two unemployed New Englanders here yesterday decided that jail is a better place for hungry, half-frozen men than freedom with no place to go.

Arvid Schmiedburg, 28, and Warren Hagen, 29, told their story from a warm cell at police court today just before they went up for 90 days for smashing a plate-glass window in a barber shop.

The two said they came here from Massachusetts several days ago because they could find no work there. They hunted jobs, they said, and only found they grew hungrier and colder. Finally, desperate, they said, they decided upon jail to get food, warmth, and shelter. The two panhandled, but could find no one to arrest them. Then they went to No. 1 precinct station and reported the offense. The officers responded by giving them a place to sleep overnight.

Early yesterday the pair noticed a policeman on his beat in the 400 block of Pennsylvania Avenue NW. They searched the gutter for a couple of stones, waited until they thought the officer had his eye on them, and tossed the missiles through the nearest

The policeman, however, had not seen them. The pair then went to the precinct and reported their offense. "If you don't believe us, go and see," they said. The officers checked their story and arrested them.

In court today Schmiedburg told Judge Hobart Newman he and Hagen wanted 6-month jail sentences. The court obliged with half that time.

"I'm no bum," Schmiedburg told reporters, "but I was hungry, and they have food in jail. It means nothing to be free to roam when you've got no place to go. We two have lost hope, and when you get right down to it there's not much else to this business of living except eating, and I'm hungry as hell."

Mr. Speaker, when I read that article my inclination was, first, to go down and talk to these two boys, apprehending that perhaps if a situation of this kind was brought before the House some gentleman would get up and say these fellows were just Communists or were notoriety seekers who wanted to get their pictures in the paper by smashing a plate-glass window. Then I decided not to go down, because I recalled a corroborative instance of this character which I mentioned here not long ago in the House about the case of a little girl 10 years old in the city of Washington. The police matron told my wife who has a habit of nosing around in these God-forsaken places, that a little girl had been arrested a second time for a trivial offense, and the police matron asked her why she kept coming back to jail. She said, "Well, it is warm in jail and they eat there." So she had learned by herself, very young in life, too young to be a Communist, the same technique displayed by these two young men.

Mr. Speaker, these things occurred right here in the city of Washington, the Capital of the richest Nation on earth, a city in which there is more money spent every night on a thousand booze orgies, public and private throughout the District of Columbia, than it would take to feed all the hungry people in the District.

Such things as these happening right here in the city of Washington ought to temper the victorious shouts of the economy forces which succeeded in cutting the work-relief appropriation $150,000,000. The situation reminds me of the humane command of Captain Philip, of the battleship Texas, to his men at the Battle of Santiago, after the last Spanish warship had been driven ashore, "Don't cheer, boys, the poor devils are dying." So do not cheer, boys, the poor devils are starving. They are among the "hundreds of thousands" whom a distinguished Republican leader in the other body said "are living like beasts."

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Throughout the length and breadth of our country thousands of young men and women are being graduated from colleges and universities. They are given diplomas upon which it stated that they are entitled to all the rights, privileges, prerogatives, and immunities belonging to a diploma. What are these boys and girls to do if they cannot find work? Does the National Youth Administration look after them?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I may say to the gentleman they have university educations, but they have lost their heritage. They have degrees but no jobs. They are being turned out by the tens of thousands every year and it is no wonder they are having to investigate radicalism in the colleges today.

Mr. SIROVICH. What would the gentleman suggest as a treatment for this problem?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It would take a lot of time to go into that subject. We have made some headway in the last 6 years in treating the problem, and we may make more headway. It is true the National Youth Administration is limited to helping boys and girls get an education, and they ought to get it whether there is any job for them or not, and keeping them out of the ranks of the unemployed for the time being; but the Public Works Acts, the Social Security, the Wage and Hour, the Labor Relations Acts, the Civilian Conservation Corps camps, and many other acts for the past 6 years are attacks on this problem. There will be other attacks on it unless the people go to sleep and let the Government slip back into the hands of the forces which are more interested in profits than in humanity.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I do not have time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I was going to give he gentleman a solution for the problem.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I will give the gentleman mine. In connection with this discussion, I want to refer you to something I said before the Committee on the District of Columbia when it was holding hearings on the proposed repeal of the "red rider" amendment. I said:

If you will go down the street and offer a job to the first 10 so-called Communists you meet, you will corrupt 9 of them. They will take the job. The tenth fellow may be incurable.

I have no more use for that tenth one than has any "red" baiter in Congress, but it is my opinion the best cure for communism and radicalism and any other "ism" that is disturbing the people of this country today is jobs.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then why did not the Communists let the men work in Detroit and in Flint, Mich.? Several hundred thousand men were kept from work by the Communists. Victor Roy, Walter Reuther, and Bob Travis, and wellknown Communists, would not let them work when the jobs were there waiting for them.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I know very well a situation developed in the organization of that great industry in which the workers had never had any voice, that was more or less uncontrollable, but that would eventually work itself out. I wish above all things that the great forces of labor in this country would bury their differences and get together on a common program. I think I will admit to the gentleman from Michigan that 1938 ought to be a lesson to them. If the New Deal took a licking in 1938, in my opinion labor took a licking, with the Spanish type of warfare that is being carried on in this country between the two great forces of labor. I want to predict right here and now that if they do not get together voluntarily they are going to be driven together when the party of the gentleman from Michigan comes into power, because the gentleman's party intends to deprive labor of all the benefits and rights that have been given it by law in the past 6 years.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It was not the Republican Party that was in control in Michigan in 1937 and 1938. Practically all laws benefiting labor have been enacted under Republican administration. Does not the gentleman know very well that for 44 days, at a loss of a million dollars a day, those men were not permitted to work?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And Governor Murphy stood back of them?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I know all about that just as well as the gentleman does.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then it was not the Republican Party.
Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I know, too, of the damnable effort that was made to smear Governor Murphy with communism as a result of his actions there.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did not the Communists endorse him in the November campaign?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I know that he was completely exonerated and justified before the Senate committee. After what Governor Murphy brought out before the Senate committee, it is no wonder some people did not want him to appear there and that he was quickly and overwhelmingly confirmed by the Senate as the chief law officer of the Nation. When a man who has been smeared as a Communist is confirmed by the Senate as the chief law officer of the Nation, it is a fair question who is exempt from these wild, unfounded charges.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did they not endorse him officially in Michigan and support him?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Who? Mr. HOFFMAN. The Communists. Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Well—

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, what?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I suppose, then, if the Communists said that meat and bread and butter were good to eat, the gentleman from Michigan would starve himself to death. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; but did he not accept their support? Did he not welcome it? Did he ever publicly denounce their unlawful activities? He did not need to welcome their support and ask for more of it, did he?

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In just a moment. I want to say a word more about Governor Murphy. It is unjust to Governor Murphy to say that he exonerated himself before the Senate commissee. He justified himself on every ground. He showed that he had exercised wisdom and common sense instead of shedding blood in Michigan. A lot of the gentlemen on this floor and some at the other end of the Capitol wanted Governor Murphy to call out the National Guard in Michigan and shoot down workingmen. The very same gentlemen at both ends of the Capitol who condemned Governor Murphy for not doing that, a few months before condemned the President of the United States for not doing it. They wanted President Roosevelt to call out the Federal troops and send them into Michigan to shoot down workingmen. They wanted to see the blood of workingmen flow at the hands of a Democratic administration.

A Republican President might have done this, since the last one called out the troops to drive the hungry veterans out of Washington with bayonets and gas bombs. When the veterans came in on Roosevelt he established a camp for them and gave them jobs.

This is not all about Governor Murphy. It was brought out before the Senate committee not only that Governor Murphy acted wisely and successfully and composed the difficulty over there without bloodshed, and was responsible for laying the ground work for the peaceful settlement that was made, but he was thanked orally and in writing by the great captains of industry heading the automobile companies which were involved in the troubles in Michigan. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 31, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. G. Ellis Williams, D. D., district superintendent of the Washington district, Methodist Episcopal Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Our gracious Heavenly Father, Thou who art the source of light and life, we come this morning seeking Thy forgiveness and the enduement of Thy spirit so that we may have the mastery of our own lives. Let Thy blessing rest upon all nations of the earth and especially upon our Nation, Let Thy blessing rest upon those who lead and direct in the executive, judicial, and legislative branches of our Government. In this confused and confusing world, may they and all Thy people apply the principles of the Prince of Peace. May we love Thee supremely, love mercy, and ever walk humbly with Thee. We ask it in the name of Christ, our Saviour and Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WILLIAM DUKE JONES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 71

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, to William Duke Jones, son of Howard F. Jones, late an employee of the House, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation, and an additional sum not to exceed $250 to defray funeral expenses of the said Howard F. Jones.

The resolution was agreed to.

GRACE E. RIPPON

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 46

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Grace E. Rippon, widow of Matthew J. Rippon, late an employee of the House, an amount equal to 6 months' salary compensation, and an additional amount not to exceed $250 to defray funeral expenses of the said Matthew J. Rippon.

The resolution was agreed to.

CONSERVATION OF WILDLIFE RESOURCES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 66

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 237 of the Seventy-third Congress, continued under authority of House Resolution 44, of the Seventy-fourth Congress, and House Resolution 11, of the Seventy-fifth Congress, incurred by the special committee appointed to investigate the conservation of the wildlife resources of the United States and related questions, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $7,500 including expenditures for the employment of experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the constenographic, and other assistance, said to be the order tringent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters shall serve said committee at its meetings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of the RECORD it should be stated that every 2 years since this Committee on Conservation of Wild Life Resources has been authorized by the House, they have been given a sum of $7,500 for the 2-year period. At the end of every 2-year period this committee has turned back into the Treasury almost one-half of the appropriation. This time they have turned back $3,300 and we are now giving them the usual amount of $7,500 and I predict that at least half of it will be turned back 2 years from now.

The Clerk will report the committee The SPEAKER.

amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendments:

Strike out, in line 4, the word "and", and in line 5, after the word "Congress", add the words "and House Resolution 65 of the Seventy-sixth Congress."

In line 15, after the word "Columbia", change the period to a comma and add the words "unless otherwise officially engaged."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the committee amendments?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Virginia introduced this particular resolution he failed to refer to the resolution passed yesterday authorizing the continuance of the committee, and the other amendment is that we permit them to have the committee stenographers while holding sessions here in the District of Columbia, provided they are not otherwise engaged with other committees.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an opinion of Justice Roberts, of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the Power Trust against the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a radio speech delivered last week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF RECORD

Mr. HOFFMAN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. HOFFMAN. To make a correction in the RECORD or in connection with a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to present a question of privilege?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. On the 24th or 25th, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] had the floor, he yielded, and on showing him a sheet entitled "Notice," which I held in my hand, I asked him the question:

Is that provision in our law now?

This is found on page 734 of the RECORD. Then the answer goes on and Mr. DICKSTEIN says:

The 1918 act, from which that phrase was taken, is complex and ambiguous.

This is from the printed RECORD, but what actually happened was that Mr. DICKSTEIN said, according to the stenographer's report:

No; not in that language. As I said at the beginning of my

And then he continues.

I would like to have the record of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dickstein] corrected to show the facts

The SPEAKER. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the matter presented does not present a question of privilege of the House or of a Member of the House.

Is there objection to the correction of the RECORD as presented by the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

UN-AMERICANISM

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, in the course of a few days there will be before this House a resolution to continue what is known as the Dies committee. I shall propose an amendment to that resolution which will provide that in connection with the investigation that is to be made by the committee, the scope of the inquiry be broadened to the extent that the basic causes of the propaganda and the effort of communism in this country be inquired into.

The resolution passed by the third session of the Seventyfifth Congress empowers the investigating committee to first study the "extent, character, and objects of un-American propaganda activities in the United States"; second, to study the "diffusion of domestic and foreign propaganda against our form of government"; and, third, to study "all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation."

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Not now. I shall be glad to yield later on if I can have a little extra time.

Fellow Members, we are empowering this committee to make a study of the effects of subversive propaganda campaigns without investigating the cause of the obvious wave of un-American propaganda. Not one Member of this House would deny the existence of scores of demoralizing anti-American campaigns. It occurs to me that the only valuable service that this investigating committee could possibly do for humanity would be to unearth the why, how, when, and where questions in these un-American campaigns. If this investigating committee is to be continued, a complete study of this situation should be made.

My amendment to the resolution empowers the committee to "conduct an exhaustive study of the basic causes of the aforementioned un-American propaganda activities."

Let me remind you once again that national honor is national property of the highest and most sacred value. Over the world we have seen examples of the axiom that "when a government fails to meet the needs of its people the government falls."

I stand firmly against communism, against any other type of "ism," excepting Americanism. Americans today are not in want of a definition of liberty but in want of a definition of American life, where communism and other incipient forms of "isms" have no room to bedground.

Members of the House, we cannot, under any flight of our most hopeful imaginations, believe that we can squelch un-American activities by extensive and superfluous studies of the already known effects of such anti-American programs.

The House and Senate, in slashing the amount Colonel Harrington said was necessary to carry the relief rolls, did not help the situation if, by reason thereof, we are to have a greater number of underfed, ill-clothed, and ill-housed families in the United States. As the result of that slash, the Government by necessity will fail to meet the needs of hundreds of families in my home State of Montana and every other State in the Union.

We must kill the germ, we must drain the spawning pond of "isms," which are tearing down the bulwark of our national life and routing destructive detours from the American way.

A father, the head of a family of three children, is hungry. Failing to find employment in private industry, he returns home to his wan-faced wife, his starving, innocent children. Do you blame him for momentarily straying from the usual course desired by the majority of our national life? No; your sympathies are with that man. But are your sympathies with that man when he follows another course which he thinks will provide food, shelter, and clothing for his family?

In Great Falls, Mont., last year a district court jury would not convict a group of hungry, needy persons charged with breaking into a store and obtaining food.

Our sole hope of upbuilding our national honor, enhancing our national life is to first of all study the underlying causes of destructive agencies cloaked in "isms." The situation must be corrected from that point.

And, knowing the causes, Congress then will be able to pass the necessary remedial legislation. We will never know what steps to take if this committee absorbs its time with an investigation of the sundry effects of the basic causes. But once the underlying causes are known, then Congress will have the opportunity to take the necessary steps toward remedial legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Montana has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Montana says that he wants to investigate what is behind all of this movement to inject subversive influences into American life.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. I suppose the gentleman has in mind the real power behind these movements, and that is the inter-

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is one influence. The gentleman is correct to a certain extent.

Mr. RANKIN. Today they are squeezing the currency, driving commodity prices down, and attempting to throw us into a foreign war that we do not want. They seem to think it would be to their financial interest. If that is what the gentleman is after investigating, I shall be glad to go with him 100 percent. We are not ready to shed the blood of a million of our young men on foreign soil in order to gratify the cupidity of the international money changers.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Montana has again expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record by including a radio address on National Defense delivered by our colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Van Zandt], over the National Broadcasting Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an address by myself before the Woman's Patriotic Conference on National Defense, in Washington, on the 25th day of January.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 60 (Rept. No. 14)

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Government Organiza-tion is authorized to continue its work begun under authority of House Resolution 60 of the Seventy-fifth Congress, as amended by House Resolution 106, Seventy-fifth Congress, and for such purposes said committee shall have the same power, authority, and jurisdiction as that conferred upon it by said House Resolution 60 and House Resolution 106 of the Seventy-fifth Congress: Provided, however, That any bills or resolutions reported by said committee shall have a privileged status and it shall be in order to consider any such bills or resolutions so reported without the intervention of any point of order as provided in clause 4 of rule XXI.

The SPEAKER. Referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST CONGRESS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Concurrent Resolution No. 4, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 4

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution, begun and held at the city of New York on Wednesday, the 4th of March 1789, the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 11 o'clock a. m., on Saturday, March 4, 1939.

a. m., on Saturday, March 4, 1939.

That a joint committee consisting of five Members of the House of Representatives and five Members of the Senate shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate, respectively, which is empowered to make suitable arrangements for fitting and proper exercises for the joint session of Congress herein authorized.

That invitations to attend the exercises be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), the General of the Armies, the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the Commandant of the Coast Guard, and such other persons as the joint committee on arrangements shall such other persons as the joint committee on arrangements shall deem proper.

That the President of the United States is hereby invited to address the American people at the joint session of the Congress in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolu-

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

The SPEAKER. Under special order heretofore made, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. May] for 30 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, within a very few days your Committee on Military Affairs will bring to the floor of the House legislation necessary to put into effect the recommendations of the President of the United States on the subject of national defense as set forth in his message of January 12. During the past several days there has been considerable discussion on the floor of the House, in the public press, and over the radio of the questions and issues involved in the President's recommendations. Therefore, it will not be necessary for me at this time to make any extended remarks upon the subject of national defense. However, I feel that as chairman of your Committee on Military Affairs, it is just and fair to the House of Representatives that you may have some hint, at least, or some suggestion, of the things that we propose to present to you in the form of legislation, and for that purpose I come here this morning to discuss with you rather briefly the proposed legislation.

Unfortunately, and as I regard it, it is really deplorable, there have been some utterances on the floor of the House tinged in a degree with partisanship, and, to me, when we come to the vital question of the defense of our country and its people, their property and lives, no political consideration or partisanship should ever come into the picture. However, some gentlemen on the floor of the House, as they have a right to do, have inquired to some extent and have propounded inquiries as to what the foreign policy of the administration really is. I do not think the question of foreign policy particularly affects the question of national defense. Of course, they are allied in a way that in any consideration of either the other may come in for some thought.

I have not consulted the President of the United States or the Secretary of State, but I am making this statement on my own account and on my own responsibility, and without any authority whatever from any other source; but I would say that the President's foreign policy is bound up and included in the one significant phrase from Washington's Farewell Address:

Peace with all nations and entangling alliances with none.

That policy I am willing to sponsor and defend.

In line with that idea and with that great fundamental principle of foreign policy, the President sent to the Congress on the 12th of this month a message in detail dealing with our needs for national defense. In the course of that message he made a statement which I desire to read from the message, so that I may not be suspected of having improperly quoted it:

Every American is aware of the peaceful intentions of the Government and of the people. Every American knows that we have no thought of aggression, no desire for further territory.

At another point in the message which he sent to the Congress he made this statement:

We are thinking in the terms of necessary defenses, and the conclusion is inevitable that our existing forces are so utterly inadequate that they must be immediately strengthened.

Now, I need not deal with the subject of ancient history, medieval history, nor need I go further back than current events to emphasize the situation as it exists throughout the world today, which, to my mind, and I think to the minds of all thoughtful men, indicates that it is essential that this country should be prepared for its own defense. And, let me get it over to you now, not preparation for aggressive war or for meddling in other people's affairs.

When we bring to this House a bill providing for the things that have been recommended in the President's message on national defense, we shall present a measure that will provide for the rebuilding, you might say, from the ground up, of our Air Corps. I do not mean by that that we do not have several units of the best equipment in the world. Neither do I mean by that that we are hopelessly inadequately supplied with some arms of defense. It has been stated in testimony before our committee, by those who know, that the best bombing plane upon the face of the earth, the most effective speed plane known to modern science, is what is known today as the American "flying fortress." We have only a few of those, but it is the purpose of the committee to bring to you a bill that will authorize the War Department, around the nucleus which we now have, to provide for the necessary procurement which will stimulate private industries, which are peculiarly qualified and situated to provide the Government, the War Department, with the necessary equipment in case of emergency. The program will not provide that we shall build a huge quantity of airplanes at this particluar time or in any short period of time, but it will provide that when the War Department is given the money that is proposed to be appropriated, they will at once begin to place what is known as educational orders with strategic industries, spreading them as widely as possible throughout all the industries, that will enable those industries to equip themselves with the necessary tools, jigs, and dies for the production of the needed equipment to build these great airplanes in mass quantities when they are needed in case of a national emergency.

In that way we hope to bring to you a program of economy. In that way we propose to bring to you a program that will be a steady, consistent building up of our defenses in such a way as will not burden the country either with a large unnecessary air force or a large unnecessary personnel. Of course, you heard in the message the President's statement that it was hoped we would be able to train approximately 20,000 air pilots each year for the next few years. Of course, that does not mean Army air pilots, military air pilots, but it does mean preliminary training for the youth throughout the country, in the colleges and universities of this country that have the facilities, with the aid of the War Department, that we may have a background reserve of the youth of this country from which to draw in case of emergency. After these youths are then trained in our civil schools, of course they will be taken for what you might call postgraduate courses in training, both in mechanical handling of the planes and the mechanical understanding of planes as well as in the operation of the planes. In that way we hope to be able to have a great reservoir from which to draw for personnel necessary to man an adequate, sound, and substantial air force.

On the subject of our Army and the personnel of the Army, it is well known to all of you and known to people throughout the world that it was the policy of the Government from the days of George Washington to this very hour that our people were opposed to a powerful, unnecessary standing army. They have been opposed to large standing armies.

In keeping with that policy today, the total force of officers and men in the regular initial protective organizations of our defense forces is around 165,000. In addition to that, we have in our National Guard organized units approximating 200,000, or near about, perhaps 203,000, which it is expected will be increased to approximately 210,000. All told, we will have in the Regular Army and in the National Guard, available, a well trained, highly skilled, and well prepared nucleus of approximately 400,000 men. This in line with our own historic peaceable attitude toward all nations and all peoples; and yet we look to other parts of the world today and behold undeclared war being waged with relentless and murderous force in many unfortunate lands. Our own policy of peace with all nations is exemplified by the ideal situation north of us where an unguarded international boundary of more than 2,000 miles, without a gun to man it, separates us from our good neighbor, Canada.

We shall continue to trust our neighbors and cultivate our cordial relations and hence there is little need of a great standing Army.

Back of this we have the R. O. T. C. and the C. M. T. C., and ultimately we may have legislation proposing the training of our C. C. boys while they are out there in the camps with ample time to receive it—but that is not a part of the program as outlined in the President's message.

I think it is not necessary for me to urge upon the floor of this House the fact that we need an adequate Air Corps for the defense of our coast, and adequate coast defense equipment. I think I am safe in saying here today-and without revealing any Army secrets-that our coast defenses need like improvement and like equipment. When we bring to you this program that proposes within the sums of money recommended in the President's message a plan that will give us this well skilled, highly trained, small, Regular Army, an air force with equipment not exceeding 6,000 planes at any time-that is the sky limit so far as the number is concerned under the legislation that we will bring you and that includes those that we already have on hand-when we bring to you that plan along with that which will increase the facilities of our coast defenses, we shall have presented to you a program that covers the needs, the normal needs and the strategic needs, of our Army in time of national emergency.

Then with the other legislation which we shall have along with it that will authorize the training of our R. O. T. C. units and those that will come into our service under the provisions of what is known as the Thomason Act, we shall be able to mobilize on short notice under the plan which we passed at the last session of Congress for an Enlisted Reserve of approximately 1,000,000 men in case of a national emergency. Let it be understood that in presenting this program we present it to you as the necessary program of the defense of this country without any attempt whatever to build a great Military Establishment. Let me say also that I am happy to have the distinction and the honor of being the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of this House, which committee I feel is made up of men of great capacity, and on which committee is not a single warmonger. They are all men of peace, but they believe in the doctrine that adequate preparation for war is the surest guaranty of peace. This is my creed, and upon this principle and this principle alone we will bring you this program within a few days; and we hope that with a proper study and understanding of the legislation and a careful reading of the extended hearings which we have had that the Members of the House will be prepared to go along with us.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAY. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman stated in the fore part of his speech that foreign policy had no particular material effect upon the policy of national defense. Surely the gentleman does not mean this; because, in my judgment, the two are wholly inseparable, and I cannot envision a policy of national defense that can be laid out without proper regard for the foreign policy. To give an example, the matter of the fortification of the island of Guam comes within the jurisdiction of our foreign policy-whatever it is and such as it is-covered by the treaty of 1922, when we solemnly agreed not to extend the fortifications beyond the status quo. Here is involved a question of foreign policy with respect to this island that is only 1,400 miles from Yokohama and 5,100 miles from San Francisco. What we may do in the whole structure of national defense must first be determined after we determine what our foreign policy is going to be in the Pacific. Other illustrations might be taken to show that the two are wholly inseparable.

Mr. MAY. I may say to my friend and colleague from Illinois that at the time the treaty of 1922 was entered into—and I am sure the gentleman has reference to Japan when he raises the question of Guam—Guam was located exactly where it is now. When we entered into that treaty and agreed to disarm and to preserve the open door in China, we agreed at the same time that we would show our good faith in disarmament by sinking, and did sink, hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of battleships, cruisers, and other equipment in our Navy. We certainly showed we meant what we said when we provided in the treaty for the open door in China for business with all nations, 14 of which—including Japan—signed the same treaty. I may say further that we have a right to fortify Guam if we have a notion to do it, and I think we are clearly within our own rights, because it is our own territory. If we go over there and establish an air base and provide for the landing of commercial planes, we shall not have violated our treaty, even though it has been rendered a scrap of paper by the act of some of the parties signatory to it.

Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. CASE of South Dakota rose.

Mr. MAY. I yield now to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I think the gentleman ought to yield to me, in view of his observation.

Mr. MAY. All right.

Mr. DIRKSEN. What the gentleman says may or may not be true.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman mean to say that it is not true?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman begs the question, because I started from the premise stated in the forepart of the gentleman's speech: That foreign policy has nothing to do with the defensive policy. Quite aside from what Japan may have done under the treaty of 1922, and quite aside from what we may do as a matter of right or as a matter of policy, we must first determine the foreign policy of this country before we can shape the defensive policy; and not a Member of Congress knows what the foreign policy of the country is today, except what, by piecemeal, the President is doing that may take us into war.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I did not yield to the gentleman for a speech. I may say to the gentleman that one of the traits of a Kentucky gentleman is that he can differ with others or disagree with them without being disagreeable.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Surely the gentleman does not mean that. Mr. MAY. I stated that the foreign policy of this country was peace with all nations, entangling alliances with none. I stated further that, this being the policy, adequate preparation for war was the surest guaranty of peace, and I hope my good friend the gentleman from Illinois does not feel that I am trying or even intending to be discourteous to him. I was trying to be agreeable and most respectful.

I do not mean, as the gentleman evidently knows, that we could separate entirely our foreign relations from our Military Establishment. I simply mean that we propose to build in this country a military arm of our Government by which we would be able to maintain the policy of peace with all nations and entangling alliances with none properly and adequately respected. The question of foreign policy, I reiterate, does not necessarily come into this picture at all, because we are not preparing for aggressive warfare.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. The fortification of Guam is not included in this program the gentleman has described?

Mr. MAY. The gentleman is correct, and it is not part of the legislation that we propose to bring in here for consideration.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I simply want to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] that there is no man in the House who cannot become acquainted with our foreign policy if he wants to know it, if he will read what the President has said on that subject.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman spoke of 6,000 as being the limit for authorized planes in the bill to be reported. Can the gentleman tell us the number of planes now commissioned and the effective force of the Army?

Mr. MAY. We have approximately 2,000 with an authorization for 2,320. I believe the authorization is for 4,000. We propose to bring that up to 6,000, including the discarding of obsolete, crippled, and bad planes that have become useless to our national force.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Can the gentleman give us the figures on the naval planes?

Mr. MAY. I do not have that information. I am speaking as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, not Naval Affairs.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. As one of the minority members of the Committee on Military Affairs, I feel it would not be out of place for me to make a very short statement, in view of the remarks of the chairman [Mr. May] and possibly in answer to the proper question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen]. I believe I should attempt to make a statement on behalf of all minority members of the Committee on Military Affairs, and in the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], on the so-called Republican policy. I believe the Members on the Republican side and some of the Members on the Democratic side of the Committee on Military Affairs approach this very important problem with three things in mind. Possibly the Democratic members of the committee have a better understanding of what our foreign policy is than the Republican members; at any rate, I think it safe to say that our chief responsibilities at the moment are, first, to understand, if we can, what our foreign policy is and what it should be; second, what our fixed policy for defense should be; third, and finally, to examine the President's proposal, or rather the President's proposal as cut down by the War Department, in order to determine whether the present program offered meets the demands of the fixed policy of defense. I have no doubt that within a reasonable time the Republican members of the minority of the Committee on Military Affairs, the Republican policy committee, and the minority as a whole will come to some definite conclusions in this regard.

Mr. THOMASON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. In reply to the interrogation of the gentleman from Illinois, may I ask the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs if it is not true that thus far there has not been one single word of testimony in all the exhaustive hearings had before the committee regarding any defense of the island of Guam and in all probability, at least so far as the chairman and the members of that committee know at this time, any bill which may be brought to the floor of the House in the next few days will be based upon what the War Department, speaking through its well-known officers, from the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff, General Craig, on down, believes to be adequate defense for this Nation and its present fortified possessions, and the very program this committee will probably bring to the floor of the House will be one that the War Department has been urging for some years, unless, of course, it be a rather substantial increase in the air force, which presented a new and modern problem? I will ask the gentleman if that is not the attitude of the committee and no question of foreign policy, which is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has entered into the deliberations regarding a necessary and adequate national defense, and further, any legislation the committee proposes next week will come up purely and solely upon that basis and the information will come from testimony provided by the War Department officials themselves?

Mr. MAY. The gentleman from Texas has stated the matter very clearly. May I add for the information of the House, and as an item of news, that when the gentleman from Illinois mentioned the island of Guam it was the first time it has been mentioned in 2 weeks of hearings and the first time I heard it in connection with this matter. I have read in newspapers, however, several criticisms and arguments pro and con and I am informed, although I have not read it, that Admiral Leahy, before the Naval Affairs Committee of the House last week, made a very clear, convincing, and extended statement on that subject. The comment of the press was to the effect that you could not tell from his statement before the Naval Committee that there was anything to be done at all except to make it a commercial airport, and that is all there is to it.

We are not out on a raid to bring on war. We do not propose to interfere with any foreign policies. May I advise some of the gentlemen on the floor of the House who are interested in the question of foreign policy that there are a couple of gentlemen in Washington who can tell you all about it. They are open for discussion and conference any time you may get them. Each of these gentlemen has a telephone in his office. The name of one is Franklin D. Roosevelt and the name of the other is Cordell Hull. If you want to have our foreign policy outlined in detail, you can get it from those gentlemen. [Applause.]

Mr. FADDIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FADDIS. In connection with all this talk about our foreign policy, perhaps the gentleman from Kentucky or some gentleman on the opposite side of the aisle could inform the House of sometime in the past when a definite, sane foreign policy has been laid down in definite language. Perhaps they can say that at the present time we are departing from the established ways in this country in having a foreign policy that is flexible enough to meet whatever situation develops, in such a way as to protect American commerce and American interests throughout the world.

Mr. SHAFER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I am sorry, I cannot yield further.

I wish now to call attention to an air map of the United States, published recently in the United States News. This map shows the distances based on present airplane rates of speed that the great cities of this country are from foreign airplane bases. For instance, it is 131/4 hours from Berlin to New York; from Oslo it is 121/4 hours; from London it is 111/2 hours; from Paris it is 12 hours; and from Rome to Washington, D. C., it is 1434 hours. A number of other instances are shown where distances have been shortened by technological development and the development of planes of higher speed, which has the effect of shortening distances. These factors necessarily come into the picture, and this is one of the reasons we need and must have a more adequate. sound, and efficient air force as a part of our national defense. I shall support wholeheartedly the President's recommendations. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may have permission to address the House for 20 minutes on the subject of gambling in farm products.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Dickstein). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next, after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. Coffee of Nebraska and Mr. O'Connor asked and were given permission to revise and extend their remarks in the Record.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the Record and to include therein a concurrent resolution adopted by both Houses of the State Legislature of Oklahoma, memorializing Congress to pass as speedily as possible a cost-of-production bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Peterson] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, in the 1937 Sugar Act definite quotas for sugar production are set forth. The quota of domestic beet sugar is given as 41.72 percent; mainland cane sugar, 11.31 percent; Hawaii, 25.25 percent; Puerto Rico, 21.48 percent; and the Virgin Islands, 0.24.

The quotas set for foreign countries and the Philippine Islands are as follows: Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, 34.70 percent; Cuba, 64.41 percent; and foreign countries other than Cuba, 0.89.

I do not want any statement I may make today to be construed as approving a quota system in the continental United States on any product of which we are not allowed to raise sufficient for our own domestic demands. This is particularly true with reference to the crop of sugar.

At this time, while I shall deal with a few other items with reference to sugar, I am primarily here for the purpose of discussing an amendment which I have introduced for the purpose of separating the Florida quota of sugar from the Louisiana quota, and asking that we be given an adequate share of the cane-sugar quota.

Florida has in large part the problems that exist in other portions of the Nation, but in addition has its own peculiar problems, brought about by the offshore competition. Florida lost the pineapple industry because of offshore competition. The vegetable growers of Florida are today suffering because of that competition and because of concessions given under the reciprocal-trade agreements with Cuba. The growers of Florida are asking a chance to grow crops and employ Florida labor, in many instances not in competition with other sections of the country but in competition only in part with the offshore areas.

An unfair situation exists today. Under its present quota system, Florida is not allowed to produce as much sugar as is used in the State of Florida alone. Florida is not allowed to raise enough sugar to sweeten our own coffee, so to speak. The situation at the present time under the quota system is unfair to the State of Florida, for the reason that the present producing area became available only a few years ago by reason of adequate flood control and because of the development of a new type of cane which successfully resists the diseases that have heretofore devastated some of the cane-producing areas.

We are asking, and we asked at the time the sugar bill was previously under consideration, that if there is to be a quota system, a separate quota to be worked out for Florida because of the condition existing there. This situation has now received official recognition, and the truth of my statement has been corroborated in part by official order entered January 19, 1939, by the Secretary of Agriculture, when he recognized that different working conditions and different systems exist in these two States.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I would rather yield at the conclusion of my statement, if the gentleman will permit.

In this order, which is under a provision of the act itself authorizing the setting up of wage scales in the cane-producing areas, a distinction is made in fixing the wage scale for Louisiana and that for Florida, and by referring to these wage scales I do not mean either to criticize or approve of either scale. In Louisiana there was fixed a wage scale for adult male workers of not less than $1.20 per day of 9 hours, and for adult female workers not less than $1 per day of 9 hours. In Florida there was fixed for adult male workers a wage scale of not less than $1.60 per day of 9 hours, and for adult female workers not less than $1.30 per day of 9 hours.

The wage of the adult female in Florida is set forth as higher than the wage of the adult male in the State of Louisiana. I favor fair wages, and I favor good wages, but I am showing you this only to illustrate that there is a distinction.

In Florida, too, the sugar content is greater and the production per acre is greater, and under the new type of cane it has been clearly demonstrated we can harvest a great deal more. Therefore we are in position to ask that we be allowed a separate quota for ourselves if we are to be bound under a quota system. We tried when the bill was up before to write a separate quota into it. At that time the Department of Agriculture thought the cane-producing areas should be cast together. I feel sure that in the light of the investigation that has been made since that time and in the light of experience the same ones who wanted to put the two cane-producing areas together today would be willing to separate them.

Under the act which I have introduced, if we are allowed to proceed, we would be able to produce in the State of Florida 210,000 tons of sugar, which, by the way, is not much more than we use in our own State.

In addition, this will enable us to put into cultivation about 33,600 acres, and bear in mind that today, as I stated before, in the State of Florida the man who formerly raised tomatoes, the man who formerly raised cucumbers and peppers for the early garden or spring market, was competing with no other section of continental United States; but today, by reason of trade agreements, that same man is struggling and, in some instances, is on relief and seeking an opportunity to plant some other type of crop profitably in order that he might live.

The quota which we are asking will enable the employment of 27,000 persons, and not all of them Florida citizens, but citizens of other sections of the Southeast, because our harvesting season is longer than the Louisiana harvesting season and the cane comes into harvest at a period of time when there is idle labor in South Carolina and North Carolina and Georgia and the other Southeastern States, and those people who have worked in the cotton fields find profitable employment in the cane fields of Florida and will find more profitable employment there if we are allowed to proceed to raise sugar.

Those of you who have been in that area can have seen what the Federal Government, by its own investment, has been able to do. You can see that vast, fertile area, fertile as the valley of the Nile, which today would employ many, many people who are now struggling for a bare existence and who today, in some instances, are charges of the Federal Government. All they ask is, first, that they be allowed to raise the sugar that we use in the State of Florida alone, and then just a little bit more to go into other sections of the country.

I realize that in large part, when we consider the question of offshore areas and foreign countries and the goods that come from those particular countries, that we claim its justification upon the theory that those particular countries will, in turn, trade with us and in turn buy American-made goods that we might ship there, but in view of the larger wage scale paid in the cane fields of Florida, we must realize that those wages will increase more the purchasing power of one of our own States and will allow the people of Florida to buy products from every State of the Union. I have in detail, but will not attempt to break down the various items, but I did secure from the Department of Commerce the statement of the goods which we purchase in the State of Florida, and year before last those figures showed $398,000,000 of goods purchased from other States in the Union. The purchasing power of these people who get the wages would enable them to buy more of your goods than if that same fund were to go into Cuba or into the offshore areas.

In Florida 1 person out of every 5 has an automobile, in Puerto Rico only 1 out of 130, in Cuba 1 out of 230, and in the Philippine Islands only 1 out of 490.

It is thus apparent that any increase in Florida's agriculture will have very beneficial effects on employment in the automobile industry.

In Florida there is 1 telephone for every 10 persons, in Cuba 1 for every 110, in Puerto Rico 1 for every 130, and in the Philippines 1 for every 490.

These same relative statistics are true with respect to radios, commercial refrigerators, and many other comforts and conveniences.

So we are asking two things. We would like to go forward unhandicapped with quotas in the State of Florida.

However, if the Congress of the United States in its wisdom should conclude that it is necessary to have quotas, then we ask that there be a separate quota fixed for Florida, a fair quota. Under the historical base of production we cannot have a fair quota, because of the fact that it is only within comparatively recent years that we have developed the sugar industry on a large scale, although as far back as the Civil War period cane was successfully raised in the State of Florida in considerable quantity. Now, in the light of research, with the aid of flood control, that vast virgin country lends itself to the production of sugar. A larger quota will enable a man with a small truck farm, who raises vegetables, which in part is a gamble, because he gambles with the elements, gambles with whether he can beat the frost, as well as the Cuban market, to plant also a stable crop, namely, sugar, and give him that degree of security to which he is entitled. It will also allow him to employ Florida people and people in other sections of the country, and purchase goods that people in practically every State in the Union produce at a much greater rate than heretofore. I read the other day a statement I think made by the Secretary of Agriculture that for every acre we plant in sugarcane we cut off the foreign market for the equivalent of 3 acres of corn, or 3 acres of cotton, or 6 acres of wheat. Considering the wage they pay in foreign countries and the wage we pay in Florida, it will enable us to use far more than that number of acres in Florida.

We are a good market for the people of the other States. We do not manufacture much down there. We are primarily an agricultural section, and we want the right to raise sugar. We are not competing in great part with any other section of the country.

Mr. Speaker, in my own rough way I have tried to express the thought that means so much to us. I cannot see how we can justify saying to a sovereign State that we will not allow it to raise sugar sufficient to feed the people of that State. When the matter comes up I appeal to you to support us, to assist your good neighbor, and give us that justice which seems so desired, that will increase the American market for American produce. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I realize that everything the gentleman has said is true in regard to the quota as it applies to Florida. We are in the same situation in Montana. The United States Government has at great expense brought into a high state of cultivation a large acreage of land. Our best cash crop on those lands is sugar beets. Under the present quota we are curtailed from producing the amount that the lands that have been prepared and the machinery that has been purchased could produce. Under the present quota system, if it is continued, it means not only the destruction of the gentleman's State but of my own State as well, and my judgment is that if the quota system is going to result in increased relief rolls, we better have those relief rolls down in Cuba than in the United States, where it costs much more to keep our people than it does in the climate of Cuba.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Is not the quota system absolutely necessary to maintain any production of sugar in this country?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I do not concede that. I realize there is a difference of opinion, but, as I stated before, regardless of the quota system, we have our own peculiar situation, and we are asking, even if the quota system is continued, that we be given our fair share and an opportunity to raise that which we can profitably raise. We are not asking for benefit payments. We are so peculiarly situated that we can raise the sugar without benefit payments because of the fact that we have a virgin soil. Our problem is somewhat different from the beet-sugar problem.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. No; it is the same as in Montana and in my district. Here is the problem. We have to have the quota system. The difficulty lies in the fact that it does not raise the amount that we can consume in this country ourselves. The difficulty lies in constantly overestimating the amount of our consumption and letting in the offshore sugar.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Then let the quota apply to the offshore sugar and not to that in the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. When the gentleman refers to Florida being peculiarly situated, he has reference to the fact, has he not, that Florida can produce sugar in continental United States at perhaps the lowest cost per unit—that is, per bag of 100 pounds—of any area within continental United States?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes. I thank the gentleman for that contribution. We do it at the lowest cost and we pay the highest wage of any sugar-producing area in the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, as I understand your cost situation in Florida, you are almost on the point where you could produce sugar profitably without any tariff protection, if the Congress would permit Florida to do so.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. We are practically in that position; yes, sir.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Did I understand the gentleman to say that Florida's consumptive needs are approximately 120,000 tons per annum?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. One hundred and twenty thousand tons per annum.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And what is your quota at the present time?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I do not know exactly what we will market this year. Probably seventy or seventy-five thousand tons. We marketed only 62,000 tons last year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Only 62,000 tons?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes, sir; only about one-half of our own needs in the State of Florida.

Mr. CRAWFORD. When the gentleman referred to the offshore competition, did he mean refined sugar or raw sugar primarily?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. I used it as a general term. The gentleman himself is considerable of an expert on that subject, I believe.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But it is a fact that refined sugar coming in from Cuba to Florida, in refined form, does compete with the sugar which you produce in Florida?

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Yes, sir; that is correct.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, February 1, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce at 10 a.m. Wednesday, February 1, 1939. Business to be considered: Continuation of hearing on H. R. 2531—transportation bill. Carl Gray will be the witness.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

There will be a meeting of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, February 1, 1939, at 10:30 a. m., for the purpose of continuing the consideration of H. R. 2880, "To authorize the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with the construction of certain public works, and for other purposes," carrying out partially the recommendations of the Hepburn report.

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

There will be a meeting of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation at 10:30 a.m. Wednesday, February 1, 1939.

COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors will meet Wednesday, February 1, 1930, at 10:30 a.m., to hold hearings on the reports on Oswego Harbor, N. Y., Chowan River and Blackwater River, Va., and Shark River, N. J.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Public hearings will begin Wednesday morning, February 1, 1939, at 10 a.m., on social-security legislation in the Ways and Means Committee room in the New House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS

The Committee on Foreign Affairs will meet in the committee room in the Capitol at 10 a.m. Thursday, February 2, 1939, to consider House Joint Resolution 135—additional appropriation for New York World's Fair.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

367. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the legislative establishment, Architect of the Capitol, for the fiscal year 1940 in the sum of $785,000 (H. Doc. No. 144); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

368. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 18, 1939, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and an illustration, on reexamination of Calumet-Sag Channel, Ill., and Indiana Harbor and Canal, Ind., requested by resolution of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, House of Representatives, adopted December 8, 1937 (H. Doc. No. 145); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

369. A letter from the Chairman of the Federal Reserve System, transmitting the Twenty-fifth Annual Report of the Federal Reserve System, covering operations for the year 1938: to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

370. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to provide for probationary appointments of officers in the Regular Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

371. A letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to provide for the cleaning, conditioning, renovating, and repair of the paintings and other works of art of the United States in public buildings; to the Committee on the Library.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. SABATH: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 60. Resolution authorizing the continuance of the Select Committee on Government Organization; without amendment (Rept. No. 14.) Referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1470) granting a pension to Harry M. Snow, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LARRABEE:

H. R. 3517. A bill to promote the general welfare through appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in providing more effective programs of public education; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. MAY:

H. R. 3518. A bill to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SANDAGER:

H. R. 3519. A bill authorizing construction of a 300-ton airship, fully equipped for naval service, subject to the acceptance by the United States Government; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BROWN of Ohio:

H.R. 3520. A bill to enable national banks to make capital loans to small businesses; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. BURDICK:

H.R. 3521. A bill to authorize the purchase of certain lands adjacent to the Turtle Mountain Indian Agency in the State of North Dakota; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. GATHINGS:

H. R. 3522. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to aid the several States in making, or for having made, certain toll bridges on the system of Federal-aid highways free bridges, and for other purposes," by providing that funds available under such act may be used to match regular and secondary Federal-aid road funds; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. GIBBS:

H.R. 3523. A bill to authorize Federal cooperation in the acquisition of lands for the Fort Frederica National Monument at St. Simons Island, Ga., and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LEMKE:

H.R. 3524. A bill to provide for a useful and comprehensive system for the impounding, storing, conserving, and making use for irrigation and reclamation of the unappropriated waters falling or emanating within the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

By Mr. RANDOLPH:

H. R. 3525. A bill to amend the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

H. R. 3526. A bill to extend existing wage-fixing procedure; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

H.R. 3527. A bill to constitute the watchmen in the National Zoological Park the National Zoological Park Police, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

H. R. 3528. A bill to compensate officers or employees of the Veterans' Administration for damage to personal property incurred in line of duty; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

H.R. 3529. A bill to prohibit excessive charges to Government employees for quarters, subsistence, laundry, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. MAAS:

SENATE

Wednesday, February 1, 1939

The Chaplain, Rev. Z@Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, the everlasting, who art with us here under the shadows in which we walk, yet art above and beyond where is the light serene flecked with no shadow, draw us nearer to Thyself by the Spirit Divine, whose breath within is our uplifting toward those heights forever unapproachable even by the wings of the wind, and teach us the burning syllables of Thy tongue that even from the mire and clay we may raise our hymns of adoration not in vain. Lead us through golden discipline of self to the noblest attainments, of national freedom, that by our example many nations of the world may be led to restore even to their humblest citizens those sacred privileges which now are trampled underneath the feet of might. We ask it in the name of Him whose all-redeeming power is love, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Senate Joint Memorial 3

Whereas unemployment is still a serious problem in Colorado, in spite of partial recovery; and Whereas the main responsibility for the relief of unemployment rests with the Federal Government; and Whereas the Works Progress Administration has in recent months discharged many thousands of workers; and Whereas, in Colorado alone, more than 5,000 workers have been dropped from the rolls since September 1938; and

Whereas these people are thrown onto the State relief rolls at a time when State funds are practically exhausted, and mothers are asked to rely upon Aid to Dependent Children at a time when A. D. C. funds are likewise exhausted; and Whereas the State of Colorado is already affording relief to several thousand employable persons who should be on W. P. A.;

and
Whereas the curtailment of W. P. A. has left many more thousands of Colorado citizens destitute, and any further curtailment of the program would only aggravate this situation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Thirty-second General Assembly of the State of Colorado (the house of representatives concurring herein), That this general assembly memorialize the United States Congress to approve the $875,000,000 deficiency appropriation requested by W. P. A., and the $1,750,000,000 requested to continue the program, without any further curtailment for the next fiscal year; and be it further

Resolved, That this general assembly herewith direct the chief

Resolved, That this general assembly herewith direct the chief clerk of the senate to immediately send a copy of this memorial to the Seventy-sixth Congress of the United States, and to mail a separate copy to each of the Colorado Senators and Representatives in the aforesaid Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 4

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring):

Whereas the Legislature of the State of South Dakota recognizes that our agricultural problem is our greatest problem, believing that only as farmers prosper can industry and labor prosper, and pledges its support to a national program of farm legislation which will produce parity price and income or cost of production for that part of our farm production required for domestic consumption; and

Whereas we recognize that the American farmer is entitled to the American market for his products to the full extent of his ability to supply that market on a cost of production basis;

Whereas bill S. 570, of the Seventy-sixth Congress has been introduced in the Senate, which we believe, if enacted and properly administered, would fulfill these requirements: Therefore be it be it

Resolved, by the State Legislature of the State of South Dakota now assembled, that we memorialize Congress of the United States to enact S. 570, entitled "A bill to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in agricultural products; to provide for the orderly marketing of such products; to promote the general welfare by assuring an abundant and permanent supply of such products by securing to the producers a minimum price of not less than cost of production, and for other purposes," which bill we believe, if enacted and properly administered, will insure for the farmer parity or cost of production for that part of our farm crops that are consumed within the United States;

That national legislation be enacted to prevent gamblers and speculators from determining the price of the necessities of life;

That we favor the development of industrial uses for farm products as a means of enlarging the American farm market.

Whereas it has been definitely determined that the hog process-ring tax collected by the Department of Agriculture was actually paid by the farmers themselves; and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States, invalidating said Agricultural Adjustment Act, declaring said tax to be illegal and unconstitutional: Be it

Resolved, that we memorialize Congress to refund all such tax to the farmer; be it further

Resolved, that copies of these resolutions be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the President of the United States, and to the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Assembly of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

A resolution memorializing the President of the United States to cancel and the Senate not to confirm the appointment of Thomas R. Amlie to the Interstate Commerce Commission

Whereas the President of the United States has, subject to confirmation by the Senate, appointed Thomas R. Amlie, former Congressman from Elkhorn, to the Interstate Commerce Commission;

and
Whereas Thomas R. Amlie in recent years has by his public utterances and other expressions of policy aligned himself with the Communist movement in this country; and

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

House Joint Memorial 1

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the Fortieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, convened in regular session, respectfully represent

Whereas, pursuant to the provisions of section 1 of article IV of the Constitution of Oregon, there was approved by the legal voters of the State of Oregon at the regular general election held on the 8th day of November, A. D. 1938, an initiative measure, entitled "A bill for an act authorizing and directing the Legislature of the State of Oregon to apply to the Congress of the United States for a convention to propose the philosophy and principles of the Townsend national recovery plan as an amendment to the Federal Constitution," which measure so adopted reads as follows:

stitution," which measure so adopted reads as follows:

"Be it enacted by the people of the State of Oregon:

"Section 1. The Legislature of the State of Oregon is hereby au-"Section 1. The Legislature of the State of Oregon is hereby authorized and directed to make application to the Congress of the United States, not later than March 1, 1939, for the calling by the Congress, pursuant to the provisions of article V of the Constitution of the United States, of a national convention for proposing an amendment to the said Constitution to provide for the establishment and operation of the philosophy and principles of the Townsend national recovery plan, otherwise known and described as the proposed General Welfare Act of 1937 (H. R. 4199)"; and Whereas, pursuant to the vote of the people and the laws of the State of Oregon, the Governor of the State of Oregon did, by proclamation made on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1938, give the whole number of votes cast in the State for and against the said measure, and declared said measure approved by majority of said measure, and declared said measure approved by majority of those voting thereon to be in full force and effect as the law of the State of Oregon from the date of said proclamation: Now,

therefore, be it
Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the senate jointly concurring therein). That, in accordance with the direction of said initiative measure, the Legislature of the State of Oregon hereby does by this joint memorial make application to the Congress of the United States to call a national convention, pursuant to the provisions of article V of the Constitution of the United States, for the purpose of proposing an amendment to the said Constitution to provide for the establishment and operation of the philosophy and principles of the Townsend national recovery plan, otherwise known and described as the proposed General Welfare Act of 1937 (H. R. 4199).

Resolved, That a certified copy of this joint memorial be sent forthwith to the President of the United States and the President of the United States and to each of the Members of the congressional delegation from the State of Oregon, and that the secretary of state hereby is instructed to transmit the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Joint Memorial 1

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for the passage of legislation prohibiting the importation of foreign-manufactured United States flags and other national insignia sufficiently to protect their manufacture in the United States

o the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled: Whereas the United States flags and other national insignia are being manufactured and imported from foreign countries; and Whereas this practice is detrimental to our manufacturers of these flags and national insignia and contrary to the theory of our national Americanism: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the house of representatives concurring), that we do hereby petition the Congress of the United States of America for the passage of legislation prohibiting the importation of foreign manufactured United States from the importation of foreign manufactured United States flags and other national insignia; be it further Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be transmitted by the secretary of the State of Montana to the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana, and that they and each of them be requested to use all honorable means within their power to bring about such legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 18 Townsend recovery plan

Be it resolved, by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring therein):

Whereas many of our aged people are dependent upon the Government for food, clothing, and shelter, and many more are dreading the day when they will be forced from the pay rolls of induswhereas many of our young people in the prime of life are unable to secure employment; and

Whereas many of our middle-aged people, who are employed, are afraid of losing their jobs; and
Whereas as a result of the above-mentioned facts the vast majority of our population are living in a state of fear, and as fear is the greatest dictator in the world today and to a large extent is responsible for the increase of insanity, vice, and crime:
Now, therefore, be it

Now, therefore, be it

*Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of North Dakota, in the Congress of the United States, be, and hereby are, requested to take such necessary steps as will insure the immediate passage of the aforesaid Townsend recovery plan bill, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded forthwith to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of North Dakota, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 20

Establishment of prices on farm products equal to the cost of production

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring)—
Whereas the farmers of the United States, by producing the food

Whereas the farmers of the United States, by producing the food products of the Nation, are rendering society a greater service than any other group of citizens; and

Whereas, in producing the wealth which sustains life, the producers are forced to work long days and are deprived of the luxuries enjoyed by other professions; and

Whereas the Federal Government has seen fit to allow the importation of millions upon millions of dollars' worth of the products of the farm—in fact, it would require many millions of acres of American soil to produce this amount of agricultural products; and Whereas many thousands of farm homes have been lost throughmortgage forcelosures, tax deeds, and otherwise; and

Whereas many thousands of farm homes have been lost through mortgage foreclosures, tax deeds, and otherwise; and Whereas the causes of this condition in our farming industry are drought, importation of farm products, and prices that are far below the cost of production: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That this Legislative Assembly of North Dakota respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States to establish prices on all major products of the farms of this Nation that will give the owners and tillers of these farms the cost of production: and be it further of production; and be it further

Resolved, That attested copies of this resolution be sent to both Houses of the Congress of the United States, to each of the Members thereof from this State, and to the Secretary of Agriculture, all of Washington, D. C.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 31 Establishment of work projects

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring therein):

Whereas North Dakota has suffered many years of crop failures as a result of droughts, grasshoppers, rust, and other causes; and Whereas as a result of such failures the farmers have been obliged to secure large loans for feed and seed; and Whereas such obligations, added to their other indebtedness, is a burden which they are unable to bear and causing many of them to leave their farms only to swell the throng of the unemployed;

and
Whereas there exists a willingness on the part of borrower to pay such loans by working on projects approved by the Federal Government: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That they urge the Congress of the United States to establish work projects whereby the farmers will be able to pay said loans in the same manner as grants made by the Farm Security Administration; be it further Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the members of the North Dakota delegation in Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

A joint memorial, memorializing the Congress of the United States of America to consider and act upon proposed Federal legislation related to the Townsend plan.

Whereas there is now pending or will be pending in the current session of the Congress of the United States of America proposed legislation embodying essential principles of the so-called Townsend plan, in which thousands of Wyoming citizens are keenly interested: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Wyoming (the house of

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Wyoming (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress aforesaid be, and it is hereby, memorialized to promptly, diligently, and fairly consider and act upon at said session by its legislative branches as such and not merely in committee, the proposed legislation aforesaid; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies hereof be promptly transmitted to the President and Vice President of said United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of said Congress, United States Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney, United States Senator Harry H. Schwartz, and Representative Frank O. Horton.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

A joint memorial memorializing the Congress of the United States to defeat any legislation providing for the purchase or acceptance as a gift by the United States, or any of its agencies, of privately owned lands in Teton County, Wyo.

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States legislation providing for the acquiring of certain lands in Teton County, Wyo., and providing for the extension of the Grand Teton National Park, by transferring from private ownership to the ownership of the United States, large tracts of land in Teton County, Wyo. and County, Wyo.; and

Whereas the transfer of such privately owned lands to the United States Government would remove said lands from the assessment roll of said Teton County and would exempt the same from taxation; and

tion; and
Whereas Teton County, Wyo., as now organized has within its borders, privately owned property subject to taxation of a value of approximately. $2,200,000; and Whereas if the boundaries of the Grand Teton National Park should be extended as provided in said legislation, Teton County, Wyo., would be unable to continue to function as a county; and Whereas a large part of the big game hunting areas of the State of Wyoming lie within the boundaries of the proposed extension, as well as a large part of the game and fish of the State of Wyoming inhabiting the areas involved; and Whereas such park extension would be detrimental not only to ming inhabiting the areas involved; and

Whereas such park extension would be detrimental not only to Teton County, Wyo., but as well to the large number of sportsmen who, annually, pay large sums of money into various trade channels for the privilege of hunting and fishing in the areas involved:
Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Wyoming (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to defeat and reject any legislation which would remove from private ownership any lands now subject to taxation in Teton County. Wyo; and be it further now subject to taxation in Teton County, Wyo.; and be if further Resolved, That certified copies of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to United States Senators Joseph C. O'Mahoney and H. H. Schwarz, and to Congressman Frank O.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Council of the City of Binghamton, N. Y., approving the proposed division of responsibility as to cost in the construction, maintenance, and operation of municipal airports and the suggested assumption of responsibility by the Federal Government in accordance with the plan by the United States Conference of Mayors, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the New Theater of Philadelphia, Pa., affiliated with the New Theater League, and White Motor Local, No. 32, International Union of United Automobile Workers of America, of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring the allotment of sufficient funds to continue the investigation of the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor pertaining to the violation of civil liberties, etc., which were referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from Elizabeth N. Baker, of Coatesville, Pa., praying for preservation of the existing neutrality law, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the United Church Brotherhood, of Long Beach, Calif., favoring the stoppage of the shipment of war supplies and equipment to Japan during the continuance of its Chinese operations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate petitions, numerously signed. of sundry citizens of Puerto Rico, praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality and to extend the neutrality law to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate, petitions of sundry citizens of the State of California, praying for enactment of general welfare legislation providing old-age assistance, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Division No. 359, train-service employees, of Nevada, Mo., protesting against the enactment of legislation to regulate the mileage of train-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the enactment of legislation to provide for the creation of a national park in the Kings River Canyon, and also to provide for the acquisition of additional lands for the Sequoia National Park, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from John D. Montgomery, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for an investigation as to alleged unscrupulous and discriminatory practices in connection with Federal employees in the city of Philadelphia, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Special Committee to Investigate the Civil Service System.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the board of supervisors of Milwaukee County, Wis., favoring the appropriation of $875,000,000 to carry on the W. P. A. program for the remainder of the present fiscal year, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mrs. CARAWAY presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

House Concurrent Resolution 5

Whereas it has been called to the attention of the membership of the Senate of the State of Arkansas and the House of Representa-tives of the State of Arkansas that contractors are refusing to em-ploy Arkansas citizens in the construction of the bridge across the Mississippi River, known as the Greenville-Lake Village bridge; Whereas the refusal of said contractors to place Arkansas citizens

Whereas the refusal of said contractors to place Arkansas citizens in the various positions and to employ Arkansas labor used in the construction of said bridge is a gross discrimination against this State and the citizenship of this State, and has created a situation that should be remedied at once: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Arkansas (both branches concurring therein), call upon their Senators and Representatives in the Congress to place those facts before the proper Federal authorities so that the various positions and labor connected with the construction of said bridge may be equally divided between the States of Mississippi and Arkansas; and be it further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be spread on the journals

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be spread on the journals of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Arkansas and copies be mailed the Senators and Representatives in the National Congress from Arkansas and the Governor of the State of Mississippi.

Mrs. CARAWAY also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

House Concurrent Resolution 1

Whereas the problem of providing a high standard of common-whereas the problem of providing a high standard of commonschool education in Arkansas has been a perplexing and difficult problem in Arkansas for many years; and

Whereas it is found to be a fact by the National Education Association that Arkansas ranks very low in the wealth per child of school age. The natural result of this condition is a heavy burden of taxation on the individual citizen of this State for school purposes; nevertheless, the results in the form of common-school opportunities for the children of Arkansa do not common-school opportunities for the children of Arkansas do not compare favorably with States that have a greater per capita wealth and a larger income.

Whereas the citizenship of Arkansas rightfully demands that its youth be afforded the same opportunity of a common school education as the youth of the average State in the Union: Therefore,

be it

Resolved by the house of representatives of the fifty-second general assembly (the senate concurring therein), That this representative group of Arkansas citizens hereby petition the United States Congress to enact legislation similar to the Harrison-Fletcher-Thomas bill (3-419) submitted to the Seventy-fifth Con-

Fletcher-Thomas bill (3-419) submitted to the Seventy-fifth Congress, which shall have for its purpose the inauguration of a broad national program for a more equal distribution of educational opportunities for the youth of all the States; and be it further Resolved. That copies of this resolution be forwarded to each Member of the present Arkansas congressional delegation and to His Excellency, the President of the United States, Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, and to the United States Commissioner of Education, Hon. John W. Studebaker, in Washington, D. C.

Mrs. CARAWAY also presented the following concurrent resolution and joint memorials of the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, which were referred to the Committee on Finance:

House Concurrent Memorial Resolution 1

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America to amend House Resolution 7260 of Seventy-fourth Congress

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the Fifty-second General Assembly of the State of Arkansas (the senate and house concurring), respectfully represent that—

Whereas the problem of providing any amount whatever for oldage assistance in Arkansas has been a serious and difficult proposition; and

Whereas it is a fact that Arkansas ranks very low among the

Whereas it is a fact that Arkansas ranks very low among the States of the Union in per capita wealth; and
Whereas the citizenship of Arkansas respectfully demand that the aged needy individuals here should be permitted to receive the same opportunity of old-age assistance as the aged persons of the other States where larger incomes are found: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the house of representatives of the fifty-second general assembly (the senate concurring therein), That this representative group of Arkansas citizenship hereby petition the United States Congress to amend House bill 7260 of the Seventy-fourth Congress under title 1, "Grants to States for old-age assistance," whereby paragraph (a) under section 3 thereof shall read as follows:

whereby paragraph (a) under section 3 thereof shall read as follows:
"From the sums appropriated therefor, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has an approved plan for old-age assistance, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter

"(1) An amount, which shall be used exclusively as old-age assistance, equal to one-half of the total of the sums expended during such quarter as old-age assistance under the State plan with respect to each individual who at the time of such expenditure is 65 years to each individual who at the time of such expenditure is 65 years of age or older and is not an immate of a public institution, not counting so much of such expenditure with respect to any individual for any month as exceeds $30: Provided, Any State that does not have financial resources sufficient to cope with the plan above set forth, shall receive the sum of $15 per month for every aged person 65 or older notwithstanding the State's inability to match this sum.

"(2) Five percent of such amount, which shall be used for paying the costs of administering the State plan or for old-age assistance, or both, and for no other purpose"; and be it further *Resolved* that copies of this resolution shall be forwarded to each member of Arkansas' congressional delegation and to His Excellency, the President of the United States, Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in Washington, D. C.

House Joint Memorial 2

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Arkansas (a majority of all members elected to each house concurring therein)

Whereas our distinguished United States Senator of the State of Arkansas, HATTIE CARAWAY, is now sponsoring a bill providing for an old-age pension for $15 per month without being matched by a State fund;

Whereas the State of Arkansas is unable to match the funds in

Whereas a great number of people of this State who can qualify under the provision of this receive the old-age assistance are not receiving the national relief that they are justly entitled to: Now be it

Resolved, That the Fifty-second General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, and the senate concurring thereto, do hereby go on record approving a bill that will pay at least $15 per month to the old people of the State of Arkansas, and that said State shall not be required to match all of said funds. A copy of this memorial shall be sent to each Member in Congress and to our junior Senator, JOHN E. MILLER, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MALONEY presented petitions of the Children of Mary Sodality, St. Mary's Church, and the Daughters of Isabella, of Meriden; St. Rose's Men's Society and St. Mary's Men's Club, of East Hartford; Court Reina Christina, No. 51, Catholic Daughters of America, of Bridgeport; Marquette Council, No. 245, Knights of Columbus, of Ridgefield, and sundry citizens, all in the State of Connecticut, praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality and remonstrating against lifting the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. REED presented a petition of 34 citizens of Cheney, Kans., praying that the United States stop the shipment of arms and munitions to Japan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of 76 citizens of St. Marys, Kans., praying that the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain be not lifted, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of 11 citizens of Leavenworth, 66 citizens of Wichita, and 56 other citizens, all in the State of Kansas, praying that the United States retain the neutrality principle as enunciated in existing law and extend the law to include civil as well as international conflicts, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution adopted by the Parent-Teacher Association of McKinley High School, Washington, D. C., favoring the making of deficiency appropriations for heating and lighting school buildings and also for the salaries of teachers in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., remonstrating against the shipment of war materials and supplies to Japan, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in existing law, and extend the original law to include civil as well as international conflicts, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Baltimore. Md., remonstrating against lifting the embargo on the shipment of arms and munitions to Spain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Takoma Park (Md.) Post, No. 28, of the American Legion, favoring the making of further provision to care for the interests of needy veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I present numerous petitions from citizens of Indiana concerning the neutrality law, and I ask that the petitions be noted in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be noted in the RECORD and referred as requested by the Senator from Indiana.

(The petitions presented by Mr. MINTON and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations are numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Indiana, and pray that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as provided by law, and also extend the neutrality law to include civil as well as international conflicts.)

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have noted in the Record, and properly referred, several petitions signed by citizens of Vermont. Among those signing are the Reverend C. L. Pontbriand; James E. Kennedy, a State senator: Mrs. B. A. Stone; and Mrs. A. B. Rugg.

I have received great numbers of letters and telegrams separately dealing with the subject of neutrality and our foreign policy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be noted in the Record and appropriately referred.

(The petitions presented by Mr. Austin and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations are numerously signed by sundry citizens of Essex Junction and vicinity, Vt., and pray that the United States adhere to the policy of neutrality as enunciated in existing law and extend the original law so as to include civil as well as international conflicts.)

AMERICA'S FOREIGN POLICY—SECRECY OF COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if it does not seem to be improper to say so, I should like to express the opinion that the citizens of this country are entitled to know what progress the Congress is making in its study of foreign policy, of national defense, and of neutrality. I humbly express the opinion that we ought henceforth to open the doors to the press so that there may be an informed public. which is absolutely essential to the vigor of any foreign policy of the United States, a country which draws its strength from many racial stocks, and has many connections with foreign countries by ties which are of the closest nature. Any foreign policy at which we may arrive ultimately by virtue of the study we are making will have little vigor if our public is not kept up with us as we proceed in our study.

We do not need to burn our bridges. We do not need to cripple ourselves in the study of these great problems today by opening the doors and letting the public know the progress of our study. If there are military secrets to be preserved, they can readily be protected by a rule of the committees that a witness may merely state that an answer to any particular question would lead to the disclosure of secret information, and ask the question be excluded for the time being, to be taken up later in secret session

I submit to the Senate that we ought to consider opening up the doors of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate in the further proceedings relating to national defense, involving as it does the whole broad subject of our foreign policy.

RESOLUTIONS OF MINING ASSOCIATION OF MONTANA

Mr. PITTMAN presented resolutions adopted by the Mining Association of Montana, at Helena, Mont., which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions passed by the Mining Association of Montana at Helena, January 24, 1939

SILVER

First. Whereas a bill has been presented in the Senate of the United States Congress to provide for the continuation of the United States Congress to provide for the continuation of the purchase of newly mined domestic silver and at a price of $1.29 per ounce, and for the discontinuation of the purchase of any foreign-mined silver at any price; and

Whereas the Mining Association of Montana, assembled in semi-annual meeting at Helena, Mont., this 24th day of January 1939, has gone on record as being unalterably opposed to the purchase by the United States Government of any foreign-mined silver, except on a barter basis as advocated by Senator Key Pittman, and as being unanimously in favor of the continuation of the purchase by the Government of all domestic newly mined silver, preferably at a fixed ratio to gold, and in any event at a price of not less than $1.29 per ounce of silver;

Now, therefore, the Mining Association of Montana does hereby go on record as advocating the silver-purchase program of the Honorable Key Pittman, Senator from Nevada, as expressed in his bill before the Senate of the United States Congress; and as requesting its officers to transmit a copy of this resolution to the Honorable Key Pittman and to each of the United States Senators from the Western States, as well as to the Montana Members of from the Western States, as well as to the Montana Members of the House of Representatives in the Congress.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Second. Whereas the social-security taxes for old age and unemployment which are now paid by the employers of mining labor in the State of Montana are not deductible as allowable deductions of expense on the tax returns prepared by such employers tions of expense on the tax returns prepared by such employers for the net proceeds of mines taxes; and

Whereas the said social security taxes and other taxes which may be based on the mining pay rolls are properly deductible from the net proceeds of mines tax returns as valid and proper items of expense in the conduct of mining operations of every character: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Mining Association of Montana, assembled in semiannual meeting in Helena, on this 24th day of January 1939, does hereby memorialize the Legislature of the State of Montana to provide for enabling legislation which will permit of Montana to provide for enabling legislation which will permit Montana to provide for enabling legislation which will permit of the deduction of all social security and other pay roll taxes which are paid by employers of mining labor from the net proceeds of mines taxes, as now required and filed, and the said association does hereby direct its proper officers to present this memorial to each of the houses of the legislature as now convened.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS

Third. Be it resolved, That, because of the great difference between the domestic and foreign industry as regards the cost of production of copper, lead, and zinc, the Mining Association of Montana is strongly opposed to any further reduction in the present tariff protection of these metals, their ores, concentrates, or finished products in any reciprocal-trade agreements which the United States may enter into with foreign countries.

In this connection, we desire to call attention to the sharp drop in the domestic price of zinc which followed the announcement of the reciprocal-trade agreement with the British Empire, which drop in price has resulted in the recent curtailment of zinc production and employment therein in the State of Montana.

The Mining Association of Montana highly commends Senator B. K. Wheeler for the recent action he has taken toward correcting this situation.

MINE ROADS

Fourth. Whereas there is an urgent need for mine-to-market roads, the Mining Association of Montana strongly recommends that the National Congress appropriate additional funds to the National Forest Service, such funds to be earmarked and to be used only for building roads in the national forests, for the mutual benefit both of the Forest Service and the mining districts located within the national forests. In this connection, the Mining Association of Montana unanimously endorses Senator WHEELER'S recently introduced bill, providing for mineral examination of the national forests by the United States Forest Service and the construction of roads for the proper development and exploration of mineral areas therein.

STRATEGIC MINERALS-MANGANESE

Fifth. Whereas there have now been introduced in the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States the following bills, to wit: In the Senate the Thomas bill (S. 572), and in the House, the Scrugham bill (H. R. 2556), the Smith bill (H. R. 1987), the Faddis bill (H. R. 2643), and the May bill (H. R. —) providing for the purchase of strategic material and minerals, including manganese; and erals, including manganese; and

Whereas these proposed measures should provide that a preference should be given to the purchase of domestic ores and minerals insofar as possible: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Mining Association of Montana, now in session at Helena, Mont. (January 24, 1939), That our Senators be requested to appear before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate to see that a bill be passed providing for the purchase of manganese and other strategic materials, which shall definitely state that the purpose of the bill and the will and intent of Congress is to encourage, wherever possible, the further development of the strategic mineral resources of the United States, as well as to accumulate stock piles; and be it further

Resolved, That we request our representatives to appear before

Resolved, That we request our representatives to appear before the Military Affairs Committee of the House and urge that the aforementioned Scrugham bill, or one similar thereto, be passed in its present form, and that no substitutions which would allow the purchase of foreign materials be considered when it is possible to buy the materials from domestic production, and be it further:

the purchase of foreign materials be considered when it is possible to buy the materials from domestic production, and be it further:

*Resolved**, That in any bills that pass either the House or Senate, or both, it shall be definitely stated that preference be given to the purchase of minerals and materials of domestic origin, to such extent as the same may be available in the United States, with reasonable time to be allowed for production and delivery. Resolutions Committee: Stanley R. Moore, chairman, Wilborn, Mont.; J. D. MacKenzie, East Helena; John Hickey, Philipsburg; J. C. Harrah, Philipsburg; J. C. Yob, Philipsburg; John H. ## RESOLUTIONS OF ASSOCIATION OF WESTERN STATES ENGINEERS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, recently there was held in the city of Phoenix, Ariz., a meeting or conference of engineers of the Western States at which a number of resolutions were adopted which materially affect or relate to matters connected with irrigation, mining, and other questions in which the West is particularly interested.

I ask unanimous consent that there may be inserted in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by the State engineer of Utah, transmitting the resolutions which were adopted at the conference referred to, and that the resolutions may be appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolutions were appropriately referred to committees, and the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> THE STATE OF UTAH, OFFICE OF STATE ENGINEER Salt Lake City, January 5, 1939.

The Honorable WILLIAM H. KING, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KING: Enclosed herewith please find a set of resolutions, numbered 1 to 7, inclusive, adopted by the Associa-tion of Western States Engineers at the Phoenix conference of December 8-10, 1938.

These resolutions represent the thought of the engineers relating the needs of the Western States, particularly with respect to several Federal agencies and laws. Your particular attention is called to Resolution No. 2 relating the creation by Presidential proclamation of national monuments. The method of creating these monuments without first conferring with the officials of the States is ill-advised and engenders ill feelings. A proposed monument which will not bear full investigation and discussion with officials of the States affected ought not to be created; moreover, it ought not to be created ostensibly for one purpose and used for another, as has been the case in this State.

Yours very truly.

T. H. HUMPHERYS, State Engineer.

The resolutions accompanying the letter presented by Mr. King were referred to committees, as follows:

Resolution recommending that the present uncertainty existing in the act of June 28, 1938, concerning the method of maintenance and operation after completion of project constructed thereunder be promptly removed by amendment of the act, etc.; to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolution favoring adequate appropriations to enable the United States Bureau of Reclamation to carry on a comprehensive survey and investigation regarding the development of the Colorado River Basin: to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolution recommending that the act of June 28, 1938, be amended to recognize the value and necessity, in the economic life of the Nation, of the multiple use of reservoir projects, etc.; to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolution recommending that the act of June 28, 1938, be promptly amended to include a provision fully recognizing State water laws and water rights acquired thereunder, etc.; to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolution reasserting the principle that the unappropriated waters of nonnavigable streams are dedicated to the use of the people of the States subject to appropriation, control, and use in accordance with State laws, and that Federal agencies should conform in all respects to the laws of the respective States relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water for irrigation or any other beneficial use; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Resolution expressing appreciation for the constructive work being carried out by the Geological Survey in cooperation with the Western States; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Resolution declaring that in the future no national park or monument should be created without prior comprehensive study and consideration by all persons and agencies concerned, etc.; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Resolution extending a vote of thanks to Governor Stanford, of Arizona, for having appeared before the convention and for the interest shown in its objectives; to the table.

Resolution extending a vote of thanks to the officers and members of the Phoenix Chapter of the American Association of Engineers for their assistance and entertainment: to the table.

Resolution extending appreciation to Governor-elect R. T. Jones and Hon. John R. Murdock, Member of Congress from Arizona, for honoring the association with their presence and the assurance of their interest in its objectives; to the table. DISTRIBUTION OF SURPLUS AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS FOR CHILEAN

RELIEF

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I received a telegram from the Chamber of Commerce of Salt Lake City this morning recommending, in view of the great tragedy in Chile, that some of the surplus agricultural commodities which the Government has may be distributed to the Red Cross for the relief of those who are suffering in Chile. I ask that the telegram be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, January 31, 1939.

Senator WILLIAM H. KING,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
At meeting of chamber of commerce today Ben F. Redman proposed and chamber of commerce concurs in the idea now is logical time to develop a real friendship with our South American neighbors by giving to the unfortunate people in Chile some of the tremendous surpluses we now have on hand, particularly our wheat surplus. We are of the opinion this gesture of good will will do more than anything that could possibly be done at this particular time in crystallizing an all-American friendship. If you feel the proposal has merit, would appreciate your promoting it.

Gus P. Backman.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the Senate of the 28th ultimo the following reports were submitted on January 30, 1939, during adjournment of the Senate:

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2762) to consolidate and codify the internal-revenue laws of the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 20) thereon.

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 90) to provide for the punishment of persons transporting stolen animals in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 21) thereon.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 185) to amend section 224 of the Criminal Code so as to penalize the making of false claims for the loss of insured mail matter, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 22) thereon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 25) prohibiting the operation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce by unlicensed operators, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 23) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 167) to amend clause (4b) of subsection (b) of section 203 of the Motor Carrier Act, 1935, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 24) thereon.

Mr. VANDENBERG, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 62) calling for further information from the Federal Power Commission concerning the comparable costs of steam and tidal generated plants on the Passamaquoddy project, reported it without amendment.

REPORT OF RAILROADS, HOLDING COMPANIES, AND AFFILIATED COM-PANIES (REPT. NO. 25, PT. 1)

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, submitted a preliminary report of the subcommittee of that committee, pursuant to Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-fourth Congress, on reorganization plans as causes of recurrent insolvencies, which was ordered to be printed.

TERM OF SERVICE OF FORMER SENATOR GEORGE L. BERRY (REPT. NO. 26)

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, some time ago the former Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Berry, filed a petition with the Senate in relation to his claim for compensation. The matter was first referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and later referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. From the Committee on the Judiciary I submit a report which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD.

The conclusion of the committee is that the former Senator from Tennessee is entitled to compensation only until the date upon which his successor was elected-elected, not qualified. So from the Committee on the Judiciary I report a resolution which I ask to have read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read. The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 73), as fol-

Resolved, That the term of service of George L. Berry, appointed a Senator by the Governor of the State of Tennessee on May 6, 1937, to fill the vacancy in the term ending January 2, 1943, caused by the death of Nathan L. Bachman, expired on November 8, 1938, the day on which his successor, Tom Stewart, was duly elected to fill the unexpired term of the said Nathan L. Bachman.

Resolved further, That said George L. Berry is not entitled to receive compensation as Senator or any of the emoluments of the office from and after the said 8th day of November 1938.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, since this is a privileged matter, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the resolution should go to the calendar.

Mr. CONNALLY. If there is any objection, I do not wish to press the matter.

Mr. McNARY. I wish it to follow the usual course and go to the calendar.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, did the Chair put before the Senate the request that the report be printed in the RECORD? I think it is a matter which relates to a rather important aspect of our service here. I should like to have the report printed in the RECORD as well as in the regular form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will repeat

Mr. CONNALLY. The request is that the report, as submitted, be printed in the Congressional Record as well as in the regular report form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report as ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

Mr. Connally, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reports as

The communication addressed to the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate by Hon. George A Berry, late a United States Senator from the State of Tennessee, was referred by the Senate to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report thereon.

The Committee on the Judiciary held hearings and, since the hearings disclose in detail the issues involved, includes herein a complete transcription of the hearings, as follows:

STATEMENT OF HANSEL PROFFITT, COUNSEL FOR PETITIONER

"Senator Harch. Mr. Proffitt, if you desire to make a statement at this time, you may proceed.

"Mr. Proffirt. I will not take up very much of your time. I just want to make a brief statement of the facts.

"Senator HATCH. I do not suppose there is any dispute about the facts, but you might state them for the record.

"Mr. Proffirt. George L. Berry was appointed United States Senator by Gov. Gordon Browning of Tennessee on May 7, 1937, to fill an unexpired term that would end in 1942, caused by the death of Senator Nathan L. Bachman. On November 8, 1938, an election was held in Tennessee, at which time the people voted for a successor to fill this vacancy. In Tennessee the votes at an election are not counted until 2 weeks following the election. Then the returns are sent to Nashville, the capital of Tennessee, and the Governor and attorney general fill out a certificate of election which they send to the Secretary of the Senate, stating who was elected to fill the vacancy. In this case the Governor of Tennessee and the attorney general filled out a certificate for Tom Stewart, stating that the people filled the vacancy up to January 3, 1939.

"Senator Connally. Do you mean the certificate stated that?

"Mr. Proffirt. Yes. Since the election Tom Stewart has been serving as attorney general of the State of Tennessee for the eighteenth circuit.

"Senator Hargy You do not mean he is serving today in that "Senator Harch. You do not mean he is serving today in that capacity, do you?

"Mr. Proffitt. I believe he is going to resign today.
"Senator Harch. He took the oath of office in the Senate on yes-

"Mr. Proffitt. My understanding was that he is going to be here today.

"Senator Hatch. He took the oath yesterday.
"Mr. Proffitt. My contention is that there are two questions involved in this case. The first question is whether Senator Berry can hold up to January 3, 1939. The next question is whether he can hold up until Stewart qualifies. Those are the two questions. There are two questions of law involved.

"Senator Convally. Is not the immediate question here, not the matter of tenure, but the matter of pay? Mr. Stewart has been seated by the Senate.

"Mr. PROFFITT. Yes. "Senator CONNALLY. The immediate question is whether or not Senator Berry is entitled to draw pay up until the date Senator Stewart qualified, which was on yesterday "Mr. Proffirm. Yes.

"I base my contention upon the seventeenth amendment to the United States Constitution

"Senator Connally. I suggest that you read that amendment into the record.

"Mr. Proffitt (reading):

"'When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

"You will note the first clause states:
"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.'

"If it ended there and that was all there was to it, Senator Berry would have held until 1942; but we have a qualifying clause, providing that the legislature may empower the executive of such providing that the legislature may empower the executive of such State to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies. The people could not fill the vacancy the day after election, because the votes would not be counted. Suppose both of the Senators from Tennessee had resigned, and the Governor had appointed their successors, and 2 days after the election the President of the United States called an extra session of Congress. The votes would not be counted. No one could be admitted to the Senate, because you would not know who was elected.

"Senator HATCH, You say the people could not have filled the "Senator Harch. You say the people could not have filled the vacancy because the votes would not have been counted. The people would have actually filled the vacancy on election day, but the evidence would not be available until after the votes were counted. It is just a little different from your statement.

"Mr. Profffir. The people would fill it at the election as the legislature may direct. I want to read the Tennessee laws. The Legislature of Tennessee, in 1913, about a month after the seventeenth emendment went into effect, passed this law:

teenth amendment went into effect, passed this law:

"Whenever any vacancy in the office of United States Senator occurs, by which the State would be deprived of its full representation at any time the Congress may be in session prior to the next biennial election, then in such case the Governor is authorized to fill such vacancy by appointment, and such appointee shall hold office until his successor is elected at the next biennial election and qualifies.'

"Of course, Tom Stewart is not trying to get the salary. The Constitution of the State of Tennessee, section 26, article 2, reads as follows:

'Nor shall any person in this State hold more than one lucrative

"Nor shall any person in this State hold more than one lucrative office at the same time."
"My argument is that the office of district attorney general for the State and the office of United States Senator are lucrative offices, according to the Constitution of Tennessee, and on that ground Tom Stewart could not draw salary.
"Senator Connally. Will you read that again?
"Mr. Proffitt. I will read all of it:
"'No judge of any court of law, State's attorney, general register, clerk of any court of record, or person holding any office under the authority of the United States, shall be seated in the general assembly; nor shall any person in this State hold more than one lucrative office at the same time." lucrative office at the same time.

"Senator Connally. Suppose you give that full force and effect, how could it affect Federal officers? The first part relates to officers of the United States and the last applies only to State officers. "Mr. Proffitt. My contention is that is a different section. "Senator Harch. Mr. Stewart is not making any claim to the selection."

salary.

"Mr. PROFFITT. No.

"Senator Hatch. This would only affect your claim.
"Mr. Proffitt. Yes. He is not making any claim.
"Senator Connally. We do not know but what he might file a claim. He may do so.

"Senator HATCH. That is not before us.

"Mr. Proffitt. That is the Constitution of the State of Tennessee.

"Senator Hatch. He may request pay for election day.
"Senator Connally. Does not that refer only to two State officers? It could not control Federal offices unless it specifically said 'Federal offices.' That is not mentioned.

"Mr. Proffitt. According to the seventeenth amendment, of course, I suppose there could be more than one interpretation of that. My contention is that it means a person shall hold office until the people fill the vacancy as the legislature shall direct. The Legislature of Tennessee directed that there should be an election in November, and that the person the Governor appointed should hold office until his successor was elected and qualified.

"Senator CONNALLY. Under the seventeenth amendment, is not the power of the legislature restricted to the election, providing how he shall be elected? Does it give the legislature any authority to determine when the term shall begin or end? The legislature has the right to provide the manner and time of the election itself, but is not that the limit of its power?

"Mr. Proffit. There could be two interpretations of that. As I said a moment ago, suppose both of the Senators from the State should die or resign. The Governor would issue writs of election to fill the vacancies. Then, suppose 2 days after the election, before the votes were counted, the President of the United States should call an extra session of Congress. In that event, the State would not be represented. It would not have two Senators.

"That is all I wish to offer, but I shall be glad to answer any questions you want to ask."

questions you want to ask.

"Senator Hatch. I do not think I have any questions.
"Senator Connally, do you have any questions to ask?

"Senator CONNALLY. You have referred to the statutes. The financial clerk of the Senate has refused to pay Senator Berry, and as a basis for that refusal he relies upon the statutes of Congress.

"Mr. Proffitt. I just ask you to consider this question.
"Senator Connally. The statute of Congress provides that the pay of the sitting Senator shall end on the day of the election of his successor.

"Mr. Proffitt. I contend that that law would be unconstitutional. "Senator Connally. What do you say to this: Regardless of the term or when it starts, and regardless of the statute of Tennessee which undertakes to fix the term until the successor qualifies, the pay is purely a Federal function. The Federal Government grants the compensation. It could refuse or grant it, as it saw fit, under

"Mr. Proffitt. Of course, I contend that law is in violation of the seventeenth amendment.

"Senator Harris. But the other interpretation of the seventeenth amendment, to which Senator Connally referred a moment ago, would make the statute conform to it.

"Mr. Proffirt. Of course, there are two interpretations there.

"Senator Harch. There would be no conflict between that interpretation and the statute.

"Senator Connally. My theory is that the power of the legislature is limited to the question of the election.

"Mr. Proffir. If the seventeenth amendment vests power in the State legislature, the law of Congress could not take that away. "Senator Connally. No. It all gets back to the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution.

"Mr. Proffitt. That is a question of law.

"Senator Harch. Do you care to file anything else with the committee?

"Mr. PROFFITT. I would like to file a brief. I will file it this "Senator Harch. It may be incorporated in the record. Have you seen the brief that was prepared here?

"Mr. Proffitt. Yes.

"Senator Harch. Do you have a copy of that?
"Mr. Proffitt. Yes.

"Senator HATCH. I suggest that be incorporated in the record also

"(The document referred to is here set forth in full, as follows:) "Memorandum relating to the terms of office and salaries of ap-pointees to the Senate

"This memorandum is submitted in response to your inquiry concerning the status of a person who received a temporary appointment to the Senate under the authority of the seventeenth amendment following which an election was held to fill the vacancy in the office to which such temporary appointment was made. Two questions of importance are raised which will be discussed in the light of the applicable constitutional and statutory provisions.

cussed in the light of the applicable constitutional and statutory provisions:

"First. Does the term of office of a Senator so appointed expire on the day that a person is elected to fill the vacancy in the office to which such Senator was appointed, or only when the person so elected appears before the Senate with the proper credentials and qualifies as a Senator?

"Second. Does the compensation of a Senator so appointed cease on the day such election is held or only when the person so elected has qualified as a Senator?

"Upon the ratification of the seventeenth amendment by the State of Connecticut on April 8, 1913, the present provisions for the election of Senators by popular vote were substituted for the original provisions of the Constitution under which Senators were elected by the legislatures of the several States. The amendment reads as follows:

"'The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for 6 years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

"'When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

"This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution."

part of the Constitution."
